$65.00

A GENERAL Hathaway sale in August is an innovation. The fact that this has become recognized as a furniture month, combined with circumstances which enable us to make a number of decidedly unusual offers, accounts for this radical departure.

Begins To-morrow, August 2nd

The values are striking. Bed-room suites in Mahogany range as low as $110.00 (4 pieces), and in Enamel down to $78.00 (4 pieces). There are dining suites in Mahogany, Oak, American Walnut, period patterns and modern designs, from $185.00 up. Gate-leg tables start at $13.50; library tables at $15.00. A Colonial Mahogany living-room chair is priced at $17.50. There are 14 models in Davenports from $39.50 to $155.00, upholstered chairs as low as $14.00, a Solid Mahogany bookcase at $25.00, with others in very broad variety. And prices for Work Tables, Consol Tables, Lamps, Mirrors, etc., are proportionately low. In short, we have left nothing undone to make this an epoch-marking sale.

of the world-famous
BOHN SANITOR REFRIGERATOR

During this week only we can sell you a Bohn for $14, $16, $22.40, $23.50, $24.85, $27.40, $31.50, etc., depending upon size and style. But whatever price you pay, you will be sure of securing a real Refrigerator, built to last a lifetime, made by the manufacturers of the world-famous Bohn Syphon Refrigerator, which has been adopted by practically all the car manufacturers, dining car companies, etc.

The enamel lining of the Bohn Sanitor is genuine porcelain fused into steel at intense heat—vastly different from the painted tin or wood sold by some manufacturers as "porcelain enamel." Due to perfect insulation, the ice consumption is very small.

The model illustrated above, No. 13, is 36x20x49 inches, and has an ice capacity of 125 pounds. Priced regularly at $40.00, it is temporarily reduced to $31.50, and many other styles and sizes are correspondingly reduced.

Select at once, for these special prices will positively be withdrawn on Saturday, August 7th. On a small deposit we will hold your Refrigerator for Fall delivery. If you cannot call, write at once for illustrated catalog.

BECKER'S COFFIN LIBELS WHITMAN

Its Plate Records That Dead Man Was "Murdered" by the Governor.

WIDOW'S PLEDGE RECALLED

Contending Dead Husband Was Innocent, She Swore to Clear His Memory.

CRIMINAL ACTION POSSIBLE

Proceedings in Defense of Governor May Be Started—Funeral to be Held Tomorrow.

On the quartered oak coffin which rests in the third floro flat at 2,291 University Avenue, the Bronx, and in which lies the body of ex-Police Lieut. Charles Becker, there is a silver plate bearing this inscription:

CHARLES BECKER
Murdered July 30, 1915
by
GOVERNOR WHITMAN

The inscription is Mrs. Becker's challenge to the world, and especially to the Governor, who as District Attorney twice prosecuted Becker and brought about his conviction of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, for which he died in the electric chair in Sing Sing Prison on Friday morning.

Becker was innocent, his wife contends, and before his death she promised to prove it. She had not withdrawn this promise, her friends and relatives said for her yesterday, though she had not determined on her course.

The body of Becker will be buried tomorrow beside that of his daughter, who was born when he was in the death house, and until the funeral is ended, his widow will watch beside the body as she has watched through nearly all the hours since it was brought from Ossining. Then she will begin the work of proving his innocence.

Mrs. Becker promised to show that her husband's trial was illegally conducted, that he was persecuted and that he was sacrificed to the political ambitions of Governor Whitman.

Question of Criminal Libel.

The inscription on the silver plate of the coffin was the wife's pledge that she would keep her word.

"Why should my sister object to its publication?" demanded George Lynch when he was questioned by newspapermen last evening. "It would make it of more avail if it were known."

Not to Lynch, apparently, nor to Mrs. Becker, did it occur, as it did to others, that the inscription might be considered to constitute criminal libel against the Governor. The question was asked by more than one. What is District Attorney Francis Martin going to do about it?

Mr. Martin was out of town last night and in his absence none of his staff cared to speak for him on this subject.

It was pointed out, however, that there could be no question of the libel. In the first place the Governor's part in the prosecution of Becker was the part which hisoath as District Attorney required him to take.

The killing of Becker, accordingly, was the rightful execution of the law, but that was not the view of the Becker family or of Mrs. Becker's friends. Many of them called at the house yesterday, took their last look at the body and read the inscription.

Among them were many policemen, former friends of the dead man, but no high officials, nor men of prominence either in or out of the department, according to Mr. Lynchm. Today still others will see the body and will read the inscription until before the funeral. Mrs. Becker's challenge will have been announced to hundreds and thousands.

Governor Whitman spent all yesterday away from Albany, motoring, with his military secretary, Major J. Stanley Moore, to Sylvan Beach, Oneida Lake, where he addressed the annual outing of Hop Growers, so he could not be questioned as to what notice he might take of the inscription.

Nor could be be asked about the controversy which has arisen between him and Martin T. Manton, counsel for Becker at the second trial and up to Becker's death over the statement purporting to come from the Governor that Mr. Manton had mentioned to him the names of several persons whom Becker implicated in graft charges.

Manton Replies to Whitman.

Mr. Manton issued the following statement:

"The World yesterday morning had a dispatch from Albany, attributing this statement to Governor Whitman: 'In Becker's denial that he had agreed to make revelations of grafting, the Governor said that Martin T. Manton had given him a statement containing the names of five men—two dead and three living—who were implicated in the grafting.'

"Immediately upon reading it, I inquired by telegraph, addressed to the Governor, whether he had actually used this language. His failure to answer renders it necessary that I should state exactly what happened during the interview to which he refers.

"I had sought the Governor ofr the purpose of asking him, in view of the fact that he was the prosecutor who brought about Becker's conviction, to take the advice of some eminent citizen concerning the action which should be taken by him as Governor with respect to enforcing the sentence of death. Coupled with this I stated that Becker would answer questions that might be pronounced to him by such commissioner.

"'Manton, you need not answer this question unless you want to, but can Becker give me anything on the municipal administration?'

"I said, 'I do not know. You had better get that at first hand from Becker's own lips.'

"He then went on to mention four names, three of which, he said, were not of men now important, but one was that of a person actually holding high office in the city government.

"Concerning that one, he (the Governor) said: 'Did he, (mentioning the man's name,) have anything to do with it?'

"I said: 'I do not know. Becker has never told me, but he (Becker) said he would answer any questions which your commissioner would ask him.'

"The Governor said that he would take all this under advisement. The subject was not referred to at all at the second interview, when he simply announced his refusal to appoint a commissioner and at the same time granted Becker a reprieve to afford an opportunity for asking for a writ of error from the Supreme Court to bring up for review the judgment pronounced against him.

"It would give needless pain to the persons mentioned to give the names to which the Governor referred."

Mr. Manton was at his summer home in Sayville, L. I., but could not be reached to make any additions to this statement.

All the boats were sailing vessels engaged in fishing.

TURKS HEAR INDIA IS FULL OF REBELS

Many Natives Executed—Another Singapore Outbreak—Report from German Agency.

BERLIN, July 31, (By wireless telegraph to Sayville, N. Y.—Letters reaching here from Constantinople say reports from India have been received there to the effect that the revolutionary movement in that empire is making great progress, according to a statement given out today by the Overseas News Agency.

Arab and Afghan priests are praying for a holy war. The British authorities have executed numerous natives.

There has been a further revolutionary outbreak at Singapore. Here the rioters liberated a number of German, Austrian, and Hungarian prisoners of war and certain interned civilians and helped them to leave the country. Among the persons so liberated is the second officer of the German cruiser Emden, Herr Lauterbach, who has arrived at Batavia, Java.

WANTS 4,000,000 MEN IN BRITAIN'S ARMY

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, July 31.—J. L. Garvin, writing in The Observer, reviews the first year of the war and with regard to the future says:

"Until the German man power is still further reduced, upon the principle which Germany was among the first to recognize and by methods which the Allies can devise in common, there can be no escape in the west from the conditions of siege and counter-siege, or from the logic of a war of attrition. But this leaves far more scope for a movement of enterprise than might appear at first sight.

"There is only one thing that can be trusted with certainty to turn the balance in favor of the Allies. We shall have to bring into play the biggest fighting factor by far that yet remains unmobilized in Europe. That factor is the yet unemployed military strength of Great Britain. This is a thing which has been hitherto wanting in the war; it is the one thing needful to win the war; without it there can be no victory, and with it success is sure.

"One master function of the organization of Government leadership in this country is to concentrate upon the swift development of our military man-power; Lloyd George is concentrating upon the output of munitions. The Allies have much more than twice the male population of the central empires, yet we are still speculating upon where Germany may next strike, instead of imposing our own initiative on the enemy.

"For a full initiative, under modern conditions, there is required a large superiority of numbers, capable, like the Germans, in the eastern theatre, of simultaneously threatening, in pursuance of a concerted plan, many points widely removed from each other. The Allies cannot seize the mastery in that sense until Great Britain places in the field more than twice the number of troops, large though it is, that she has yet thrown into Europe. We are supposed to have 3,000,000 men enrolled, we may assume that, so far as two-thirds, at least, of these are concerned, their existence has nit yet made itself felt in the European theatres, where the world's fate and that of the British Empire is being decided.

"No close student of war at home or abroad can doubt for a moment that what is needed to make assurance doubly sure for the Allies is for Great Britain, after a year of war, to rise to a bigger view of her military requirements and to make bolder use of her military means. The effect of that will be the same as though another great Power could be added to the Great Alliance.

"We can be on the safe side only by running the risk of doing too much; we dare not run the risk of doing too little, and this country will not be equal to its duty to the Allies and to the issues of existence that are at stake for the empire until we have created a factor that can alone insure the overwhelming of the enemy east and west by adding the military power of 4,000,000 Britons in arms to that silent supremacy at sea which is as complete as Nelson ever won."

HAITIANS SLAIN BY OUR FORCE

Six Killed in the Attack on the American Sailors and Marines.

MORE TROUBLE IS FEARED

Caperton Expects Further Disturbances and Prolonged Stay in Island.

HOSPITAL SHIP TO BE SENT

Haitian Minister Is Informed That We Take a Very Serious View of the Situation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—In a report received today by the Navy Department from Rear Admiral Caperton, commanding the American naval force in control of the situation at Port au Prince, he stated that when the Haitians resisted the landing of bluejackets and marines on Thursday, killing two American sailors, six of the natives were killed and two were wounded in the fighting. Admiral Caperton forecast further revolutionary disturbances in the island.

Indicating his opinion that the landing force should remain ashore some time, Admiral Caperton reported that the revolutionary Committee of Safety had offered the Presidency to a dozen prominent men who had refused, and that the committee finally declared for General Rosalvo Bobo, who is anti-American in his tendencies and has been leading a revolution on an anti-American platform. The Blot party in Northern Haiti has declared for Baourand for President, and much rivalry is sure to follow among the various candidates.

Secretary of State Lansing said today that nothing would be done by the United States Government in the direction of settling the internal affairs of Haiti until complete order had been restored, and that American forces would remain there indefinitely.

Before withdrawing its forces from Haiti the United States Government will renew its efforts to negotiate with the Haitian government a treaty for the administration of fiscal affairs in that country as in the Dominican Republic, and there are indications that there may be incorporated in the treaty a provision similar to the Platt Amendment in the treaty with Cuba, giving the United States the right to intervene in the interests of peace.

The battleship Connecticut sailed from Philadelphia today for Port au Prince with a marine expeditionary regiment of 528 officers and men under the command of Col. E. K. Cole to reinforce the naval force now at Port au rince. The Connecticut will stop at Hampton Roads to pick up 125 marine recruits to fill gaps in the two battalions that sailed from Philadelphia. The Connecticut is expected to arrive at Port au Prince on Tuesday or Wednesday. There will then be an American naval force of over 2,000 marines and bluejackets ready for any contingency at Port au Prince.

Secretary Daniels announced today that the Navy Department had decided to send the hospital ship Solace to Haiti to take care of the sick or injured. Mr. Daniels issued this bulletin this afternoon on the basis of the daily report from Rear Admiral Caperton regarding the situation in Haiti:

Rear Admiral Caperton reports from Port au Prince under date of late in the evening of the 30th that during the entry of the United States force into the town of Port au Prince and the fighting during the previous night six Haitians were killed and two wounded.

The disarming of soldiers and civilians is still going on, and a number of arms and ammunition already have been collected and placed under guard in the palace. Due to the large area covered by the city it will take some time to complete disarming every one.

He also reports that the revolutionary committee declared for Rosalvo Bobo. The selection of this committee, however, was only made after an attempt to get twelve other prominent men to accept the candidacy. These other men would not accept. The Blot party at Cape Haitien, it is reported, has declared for Baourand.

In view of the conditions almost sure to follow the rivalry between these various candidates and their adherents in various parts of the country, the political conditions are very uncertain. Another dangerous element in the situation may result from the presence of a large number of unemployed men in and around Port au Prince. The Haitian Construction Company, an American concern, has a contract for public works which has been stopped for lack of funds. Under normal conditions this firm could employ 1,200 men, but the treasury is without funds.

Cape Haitien is reported quiet.

A lengthy conference was held at the State Department today between Secretary of State Lansing and Solon Menos, the Haitian Minister to the United States. Neither would comment on the conference, but it is understood that the Minister was informed that the situation in Haiti was regarded as a very serious one from the viewpoint of the United States.

Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, the United States Minister to Haiti, is now in Washington on leave of absence, and will confer with officials from time to time on the situation.

Reports today from the American Legation in Port au Prince say the city is quiet and that the disarming of the natives is going on. They recommend that

ZURICH, Switzerland, July 31 (via London.)—American travelers arriving here today from Berlin report that there were serious anti-American disturbances in the German capital on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

A large crowd of students gathered in front of the American Embassy and hooted and yelled until they were dispersed by a force of police, summoned to protect the building.

The police, according to the travelers, requested Americans in Berlin to refrain from wearing the Stars and Stripes as badges or scarf pins, the sight of which, they said, irritated the Germans and often exposed the wearers to insults and molestation.

4 DEATHS FROM HEAT, THERMOMETER AT 92

37 Prostrated in the Streets on the Hottest Day So Far This Year.

SHOWERS MAY BRING RELIEF

The oppressive heat caused two more deaths in this city yesterday, and in New Jersey a man committed suicide as a result of the excessive humidity. The police records showed a long list of prostrations, and the ambulances in Manhattan and Brooklyn were kept busy from early in the morning until sunset.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the temperature was 92 degrees—the hottest July 31 during the last forty-four years, as shown by the records of the Weather Bureau. Another record was established also, as the temperature had not reached that mark on any other day during the present Summer.

Here is the list of three deaths and prostrations reported by the police:

The Dead.

LEYLAND LINER SUNK ONE AMERICAN DEAD

WARNING SHOTS IGNORED

LONDON, July 31.—The Leyland Liner Iberian has been sunk by a German submarine. Five members of the crew were killed, two died aboard a rescue boat and sixty-one were landed safely. Among the dead was an American muleteer named Whyley (probably Mark L. Wiley, of Boston).

The casualties on board the Iberian were caused by shellfire. The submarine then torpedoed the Leyland liner and the vessel went to the bottom. The vessel had a large crew aboard, including a number of cattlemen and hostlers who were returning to the United States.

According to American Consul Frost at Queenstown, the Iberian disregarded the submarine's warning to stop. Later the German commander gave the crew time to take to the boats before firing a torpedo. Whyley died from shock and wounds from shells.

The Iberian, a steamer of 5,223 tons gross, sailed from Boston July 7 for Manchester, where she was reported to have arrived July 20. She was 437 feet long, with a beam of 48 feet, and was built at Sunderland in 1900. F. Leyland & Co., Limited, of Liverpool, were the owners.

Upon her arrival at Boston from Manchester and Liverpool on July 2, members of the Iberian crew told of being chased by a German submarine when only a few miles from the mouth of the Mersey. Captain Jago manoeuvred his ship out of danger, however. The Iberian has been used for several months in the transportation of war supplies between the United States and England.

LEGAL, SAYS WASHINGTON.

Consul Reports That the Iberian Ignored Signal to Stop.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—The case of the Leyland liner Iberian, which was sunk off the Irish Coats by a German submarine, presents no serious complications in the form in which it has been officially reported to the State Department, in the opinion of high officials of the Government. The officials regard the incident as similar to that of the Leyland liner Armenian, which was sunk several weeks ago while carrying a cargo of mules to Avonmouth for delivery to the Allies.

According to an official report received from Wesley Frost, the American Consul at Queenstown, the Iberian was first attacked by shell fire from the German submarine for refusing to halt, and was then torpedoed after the surviving members of the crew had been allowed to escape. The submarine commander appears from Consul Frost's report to have allowed the crew to take ample time to take to the boats before firing the torpedo. One American was killed as a result of shell fire and shock. Here is Consul Frost's report:

Steamer Iberian submarined. Whyley, American muleteer, killed. Ship Surgeon Burns of the Iberian, an American citizen, stated that the submarine did not shell Iberian until the latter disregarded signal. Gave them time to take boats. Whyley died from shock and superficial wounds. No other Americans injured.

Ship a Fair Prize of War.

A previous message from Consul Frost merely reported the sinking of the Iberian, and that one American, Whyle or Wile, was reported to have died of shock after he had been slightly wounded.

The Iberian was bound West, and for that reason could not reasonably be expected to have live stock carrying contraband at the time the vessel was attacked. Officials were asked whether this would make any difference, and their response was that it would make little difference. The Iberian was flying the British flag, and, being a merchant vessel of a belligerent enemy of Germany, was liable to capture by authorized naval vessels of Germany wherever found. Before a vessel may be properly captured she must be halted by warning shots for purposes of visit and search. A merchant vessel that fails to halt, but insists upon proceeding when summoned by a naval vessel to stop does so only at her own risk. All the rules of warfare and the laws governing naval capture warrant the naval vessel in firing as many shots as are necessary to compel compliance with the demand that the vessel halt.

The naval vessel should first fire a blank shot, then a solid shot as warnings. If these are disregarded by the merchantman the naval vessel has a legal right to fire as many shots as are necessary to compel the vessel to halt. If officers, crew or passengers are killed while such shots are being fired, the responsibility is upon the commander of the merchant vessel.

Fires at His Own Risk.

A Captain of a merchant steamer may attempt to escape, but he does so at his own risk and responsibility, for such loss of life is not upon the commander of the naval vessel. The direction of the voyage of the Iberian counted for nothing because all British ships are liable to capture by German naval vessels, and are liable to destruction under the plea of military necessity, either because the submarine may not be in position to convey the belligerent merchant ship as prize to a German port, or because an attempt to do so might be regarded as interfering with the success of the military operations of the submarine. But before a vessels so captured can be sunk, under the rules of humnity and international law, officers and crew must have an opportunity to escape.

The Iberian is the third Leyland liner that has refused to stop when challenged by German submarines during the past month. The Armenian was challenged to halt on June 7 and refused to do so. The submarine sighted the Armenian while she was in flight, killing twenty-one Americans, but kept

YEAR OF WAR SEES FOES DETERMINED; NO WHISPER OF PEACE BY EITHER SIDE; SITUATION FROM NATIONAL VIEWPOINTS

"God Is With Us," Kaiser Declares; Allies Unshaken, Responsible Officials Assert

LONDON, Sunday, Aug. 1.—The German Emperor has issued a manifesto to the German people on the occasion of the anniversary of the outbreak of the war, according to a Reuter dispatch from Amsterdam. In the manifesto the Emperor says:

"Before God and history my conscience is clear; I have not willed war. Full of gratitude, we can say today that God is with us."

High officials of the Allied Governments, those in charge of the prosecution of the war, gave their impressions of the situation on the conclusion of the first year of the great conflict for transmission to the United States by The Associated Press, as follows:

By the Prime Minister of Great Britain.

LONDON, July 31.—The Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Herbert H. Asquith, has made the following authorized statement:

"I have been asked to send a message to the United States of America at the end of the first year of the war. The reasons why we are fighting are known in America. The world has judged, and will judge, not our words, but our actions. The question today is not of our hopes or our calculations, but our duties.

"Our duty, which we shall fulfill, is to continue to the end in the course which we have chosen and 'to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace.'"

By the British Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

Sir Edward Grey, the British Secretary for Foreign Affairs, made this authorized statement:

"I have been asked to send a message to the United States of America at the end of the first year of the war.

"The reasons which led Great Britain to declare war and the ideals for which she is fighting have been frequently set forth. They are fully understood in America. I do not feel, therefore, there is any need to repeat them now. I am quite contented to leave the rights and wrongs of the causes and conduct of the war to the judgment of the American people.

"The United Kingdom, and the entire empire, together with their gallant allies, have never been more determined than they are today to prosecute this war to a successful conclusion which will result in honorable and enduring peace based on liberty and not burdensome militarism."

By the Russian Minister of War.

PETROGRAD, July 31.—This statement was prepared by M. Polivanoff, the Russian Minister of War:

"My opinion, in a few words, after one year's duration of this war, unprecedented in the world's annals, is as follows:

"The enemy is strong and cruel, and that is the very reason why Russia and her heroic allies must continue the war—should it last for several years—until the enemy is completely crushed.

"ALEXEI ANDREIEVITCH POLIVANOFF,
"Minister of War."

COMPLETE TEXT OF POPE'S APPEAL

Pontiff, in the Name of God, Adjures the Nations to End the War.

FEELS FATHER'S DESPAIR

His Soul Participates in Others' Anguish—Solemn Promise to God to Strive for Peace.

"When we were called to succeed to the apostolic throne of Pope Pius X., whose upright and exemplary life was brought to an end by the fratricidal struggle which broke out in Europe, we, too, felt—after gazing fearfully upon the bloody battlefield—the despair of a father who witnesses his home torn asunder and ravaged by a furious tempest.

"We thought with inexpressible sorrow of our young sons cut down by death: we felt in our heart, enlarged by Christian charitableness, the great unspeakable sadness of mothers and of wives made widows before their time, and the tears of children deprived too soon of parental guidance.

"Participating in our soul in the fear and anguish of innumerable families, and well knowing the imperial duties imposed upon us by the mission of peace and love with which we have been confided during these sad days, we adopted a firm resolve to concentrate our whole activity, and all our power to the reconciliation of the peoples at war. We made a solemn promise to our Divine Father, who wished with the price of His blood to make all men brothers.

Counsels not Heard.

"Words of peace and love were the first we addressed to the nations and their chiefs as the supreme guardian of their souls. Our affectionate and insistent counsels as father and friend were not heard. This increased our sadness, but did not shake our resolution. We continue with confidence to appeal to the All-powerful, who holds in His hands the minds and hearts of subjects as well as kings, imploring Him to end the great scourge.

"In our humble but ardent prayer we want to include all the faithful and, to make it more effective, we have taken care that it be accompanied by works of Christian penitence.

"Today, on the sad anniversary of the terrible conflict, our heart gives forth the wish that the war will soon end. We raise again our voice to utter a fatherly cry for peace. May this cry, dominating the frightful noise of arms, reach the warring peoples and their chiefs and induce kindly and more serene intentions.

"In the name of the Lord God, in the name of the Father and Lord in heaven, in the name of the blessed blood of Jesus —the price of the redemption of humanity —we implore the belligerent nations before Divine Providence henceforth to end the horrible carnage, which for a year has been dishonoring Europe.

Brothers' Blood Being Shed.

"This is the blood of brothers that is being shed on land and sea. The most beautiful regions of Europe—this garden of the world—are being with ruins. They whose [illegible]

RUSSIANS BATTLE FOR SAFE RETREAT

VALUABLE TIME IS GAINED

Airmen Report Seeing Forces Leaving Warsaw—New Danger from Cavalry Move in North.

LONDON, July 31.—The fate of the Russian Armies in the Polish salient still hangs in the balance. No official confirmation had been received up to a late hour tonight of the evacuation of Warsaw by the Russian troops, but that they are withdrawing eastward is certain.

The retirement, although described by Petrograd as voluntary, is accompanied by very hard fighting, reminiscent of General Kuropatkin's retreat from Liao-Yang, when he inflicted on the pursuing Japanese losses greater than his own. While the main army, with the field artillery, is making its way to the rear, infantry and cavalry are protecting the flanks and making repeated attacks. In this way a few hours are gained, which are of inestimable value to the retreating forces.

"Participating in our soul in the fear and anguish of innumerable families, and well knowing the imperial duties imposed upon us by the mission of peace and love with which we have been confided during these sad days, we adopted a firm resolve to concentrate our whole activity, and all our power to the reconciliation of the peoples at war. We made a solemn promise to our Divine Father, who wished with the price of His blood to make all men brothers.

The official statement given out by Berlin tonight shows that the invaders below Warsaw are meeting strong resistance. The Germans who crossed the Vistula were met by counter-attacks and General von Mackensen, who has occupied Lublin, is obliged to attack the Russians at every point on their line. The Berlin communication follows:

The troops, under General von Woyrsch, who crossed to the right bank of the Vistula, advanced eastward under obstinate fighting. Counter-attacks by the Russian reinforcements proved unsuccessful.

On the line of Nowa, Alexandria, and the heights of the Vistula, north of Lublin, which yesterday was occupied, and to the south of Chelm, the enemy again attempted resistance against the pursuing troops, under General von Mackensen. The enemy was everywhe attacked.

Yesterday Archduke Joseph Ferdinand's army occupied Lublin. Its left wing in pursuit crossed the Bystrzyca River.

German troops advanced down the Wieprz River, approaching Chelm from the southwest. The enemy offered renewed resistance at several points in the previously prepared position, but was attacked everywhere.

In East Galicia the situation is unchanged.

The Russian forces on Thursday night, between the Vistula and the Bug, retired unmolested to new positions. We evacuated the town of Lublin and the railway between the stations of Nowa Alexandria and Relovets.

What portion of the Russians will succeed in getting back to the new line is a matter of speculation here. The occupation of Lublin shows that the southern line of retreat is entirely barred to the

BRITISH REVIEW BY CARSON

Attorney General Says England Is Aroused as Never Before.

FRANCE DOGGED AND GRIM

And Russia, Despite Reverses, Will Do Her Part—Czar's 1914 Defiance Reissued.

GERMANY CONFIDENT, TOO

Advantages Are With Her to Date, Berlin Experts Declare—Make Much of Submarines.

The end of the first year of the war in Europe finds both sides apparently confident, certainly determined to fight on indefinitely, with no whisper of peace audible. Reviews of the year's operations are presented below from different national viewpoints — British, French, Russian, German. All seem marked by the same characteristic—a dogged determination to carry the conflict to the bitter end and to win.

BRITAIN MUST WIN, AND WILL, SAYS CARSON

Attorney General Sums Up Twelve Months of Conflict, and Sees Only Encouragement Ahead.

LONDON, July 31.—Sir Edward Carson, the Attorney General, has prepared for The Associated Press a signed statement giving a broad outline of the first year of the war from the British standpoint, together with an expression of what he declares to be the unalterable purpose of the British Government and people to carry on the war to a successful conclusion. The statement follows:

How long will the war last, and what will be the result? To such questions as these any British subject can give but one answer, and that is that the war will last until the cause of the Allies has been brought to a successful issue and Europe and the world have been relieved from the ideals involved in the aggression of Prussian domination. The word peace does not enter into our vocabulary at the present time. It is banished from our conversation as something immoral and impossible under existing circumstances. And yet we are the most peace-loving people in the world; a nation which throughout the globe, within its many dominions, has inculcated good government and social and industrial progress and the free exercise, in its widest sense, of civil and religious liberty.

Rightly or wrongly, we have in the past devoted our energies and our intelligence, not to preparations for war, but to that social progress which makes for the happiness and the contentment of the mass of our people. And this, no doubt, is the reason why other nations imagine that we, as a nation of shopkeepers, are too indolent and apathetic to fight for and maintain those priceless liberties won by the men who laid the foundation of our vast empire.

The Nation Determined.

But they are entirely mistaken in forming any such estimate of the temperament or determination of our people. Great Britain hates war, and no nation enters more reluctantly upon its horrible and devastating operations; but at the same time, no nation, when it is driven to war by the machinations of its foes, who desire to filch from it or from its co-champions of liberty any portion of their inherited freedom, is more resolved to see the matter through, at whatever cost, to a successful issue.

A year of war has transformed Great Britain. Of our navy I need hardly speak. It has upheld to the fullest extent the great traditions which fill the pages of history in the past it has driven its enemies off the seas it holds vast oceans free for almost the uninterrupted commerce of neutral powers and it has preserved these highways for its own supplies of material and food almost without interruption. I do not minimize the peril of the submarines, which is in process of being dealt with through the careful and zealous watchfulness of our Admiralty, but, while the submarine has enabled the Germans to commit savage and inhuman atrocities contrary to the laws of civilization and against the settled rules of international law, it has done nothing to affect the vast commerce of our empire.

The German submarine attack has signally failed to hamper our military operations. Under the protection of our navy hundreds of thousands of men have been brought to the fighting area from the most distant parts of the empire. These ships are crowded fully to France, and not a single ship of a single soldier has been lost in the passage. The manner in which our troops have

FOUND THE FRENCH FIGHTING AS ONE

SOME BAD AMERICAN GOODS

Shippers Damaging Our Commercial Prospects, Says Author—Would Have Federal Inspection.

Owen Johnson, the novelist, who has just returned from a month in France, where he has been gathering material for magazine articles, says that the thing that struck his attention most when he landed in New York was the green and red parasols of the women on the pier. "There are no colors in Paris," he said. "Every one is in black or some other dark stuff. Those who feel like rejoicing themselves refrain out of delicacy, for fear they may offend the feelings of some one else who has reason to mourn."

One of the purposes of Mr. Johnson's visit was to present to the French authorities, as an American who had lived in France and was strongly sympathetic with the French cause, the advisability of allowing a little more publicity for the French side of the war in this country.

"The French," he said yesterday at the Plaza, "have seen the results of the great German campaign for American public opinion, and naturally they are reluctant, for this reason as well as for others, to set their side of the case out more fully. The French people are proud. Their attitude in this war has been, 'We are doing as we should, but we will let other nations find this fact out for themselves.' They are inclined to think that a sister Republic would naturally give them her sympathy. They fail to realize the American psychology and are apt to think that when a true presentation of the case is given once, that is sufficient.

"The result is that the idea has tended to grow up in some circles in this country that the war is a German-English conflict primarily. Many French leaders are now beginning to realize this, and many American friends of France are urging that something be done to correct it—to allow the freer passage of news, to permit American observers to see more of the French side of the war, and to send representative Frenchmen to tell stories of the heroism of French troops.

"I am inclined to think that some such measures will be taken—perhaps near future. I had interviews of an hour's duration with President Poincaré and Foreign Minister Delcassé; I also talked with Premier Viviani, Paul Deschanel, President of the Chamber of Deputies, and former Premier Briand. I had an hour's talk with General Gallieni, Governor of Paris, and an hour with General Joffre, in the course of the period of several days which I was allowed to spend at the front.

"The unanimity of the French is of course amazing; they are absolutely determined to end the possibility of the recurrence of a similar war. From the President down to the factory workers, they all said the same thing. We realize that it will take a long, hard fight to beat the Germans, but we want to finish things up so that our children will never have to go through this thing."

Mr. Johnson not only saw the officials and officers—he went into factories, into hospitals, into trenches—into the 200 great convoirs in Paris which furnish employment to about 350,000 women whom the war would otherwise have made destitute—women, many of them of good family, now working for from 1 franc 25 to 1 franc 75 a day, making clothing and other supplies for the army. He thinks that the spirit of all France as he saw it ought to be put before the Americans by representations of the finer men—such men as the philosopher Bergson or Pastor Wagner," he suggested. "Men like James Hazen Hyde and Whitney Warren are doing a great work in Paris, but there ought to be more chance for the people to find out what France is really thinking.

One thing that Mr. Johnson says has injured the reputation of the United States in France is the poor quality of some of the goods shipped over on the first war contracts.

"All Americans who are interested in the French cause," he said, "feel very keenly the fact that of the first lots of supplies, such as shoes, socks, kitchens on wheels, and so on, that were shipped to the French Army many were very bad, indeed. For a fact that some of the representatives of the best American shoe manufacturers happened to be negotiating for orders in Paris when some of the early shipments of shoes, made by inexperienced and in some cases irresponsible firms, arrived, and the poor quality of these kept the head of the shoe manufacturers from getting the orders. It was very probable that some of the first commissions sent over from France were not as well qualified to judge on the quality of the goods presented as were their successors, but it was a serious blow to the reputation of American commercial integrity. Any European nation in our position would have its war shipments inspected by a commission of its own, sitting in the capital; and certainly there ought to be some way to handle the situation in this country. It should include that the Chambers of Commerce might very well take some steps to safeguard the quality of shipments in such a situation as this, where our nation's commercial reputation may be determined for years in the minds of foreigners by these products. I think that we should even come to the point of publishing the names of the firms guilty of shipping over supplies that are of insufficient quality, as a guarantee to future purchasers and a sign of the national disapprobation."

Mr. Johnson had unusual opportunities of getting over the French lines at the war front. He was in a party containing Walter Hale, the artist, Arnold Bennett, the English novelist; a representative of the British Foreign Office, and one or two American newspaper men. They got near enough to the front to be under fire three times; and in one case, Mr. Johnson went so far forward in the French mining gallery that he was actually under a German trench.

"I happened to see the Germans bombarding the Cathedral of Rheims," he said, "about June 20, and the Cathedral of Arras some ten days later. There was absolutely no excuse for it in either case. Under the auspices of M. Dalimier, Minister of Public Instruction, under whose department comes the care of historic monuments, and he told me that he was afraid the Germans would in time destroy even what was left at Rheims. Every time the French won a success anywhere, so far, the Germans evened up by another bombardment of cathedrals; he said that at Soissons was also suffering. 'There is in the Cathedral of Rheims,' he told me, 'some of the priceless old stained glass, several centuries old, which has survived all the bombardments so far. We do not dare to put up scaffolding to take it down and take it away to a place of safety lest the Germans will use that as a pretext—calling it an observation tower, or something of the sort—for the complete destruction of the building.'

Mr. Johnson was under fire on the Lorette Hills and at Blangy, near Arras. At the latter place he and his companions went up into a house, half ruined by shells, and took pictures through the holes blown in the wall of the German trenches sixty meters away. "If they had ever seen us," he said, "a single shell would have blown us all into the air." Later the French officers who were guiding the party took them down into a long underground gallery. When they had walked perhaps eighty yards the guide stopped and told them to listen. Up above them they could hear a muffled murmur—the sound of many men moving. It was the German trench, perhaps twenty-five feet above their heads. The French gallery had been driven under far enough to catch the sound of a pick that might be struck into the ground anywhere near by, and thus to head off German attempts at countermining.

The party brought back many photographs taken by Mr. Hale, showing the trenches—big gashes winding across the countryside as far as the eye could reach, with no sign of their defenders. They also got pictures of battlefields plowed up by shells, of the entrances to the dugouts, twenty feet underground, where many of the troops live; of the trenches, and of artillery actions.

"More than once," said Mr. Johnson, "we got out into the open rather carelessly and were made the target of German shells. Fortunately you can hear the shells coming about a second before they get to you, and that second gives you time to throw yourself on the ground and roll into one of the fifteen-foot-deep connecting trenches which run all about through the country in the rear of the firing line."

They found the French soldiers serious and determined, but cheerful; indeed, one of the most treasured photographs is that of an infantryman, well behind the battle line, playing on a xylophone—or rather a hyalophone—made out of empty bottles hung from a rope by strings of varying length.

"One thing that shows how the nation is united," said Mr. Johnson, "is the fact that on the Executive Committee of the Secours National, which arranges for all the war relief among soldiers' families, you find the Archbishop of Paris, the chief rabbi, the chief Protestant minister, Royalists, Bonapartists, and Radicals. That never happened before in France."

RAISES CRY OF CALUMNY.

Pro-German Organization Says Press Abuses Anti-War Advocates.

The organization known as the Friends of Truth, which represents various pro-German societies, issued a long statement yesterday, in which it protested against what was termed "the campaign of calumny to down all opposition to the cry for war." It likewise deplored what it called "the stigmatization of some of our noblest citizens." To enumerate these victims, it is asserted, would make it necessary almost "to print a directory of American citizens and public-spirited men who are bold enough to come out against the capitalist controlled press in its militaristic crusade."

Among the names that appear on the letterhead of the Friends of Peace are those of Henry Weissmann, who a few days ago denounced President Wilson as "a political bankrupt"; Edmund von Mach, Jeremiah O'Leary, who engineered the Sunday night meetings of the American Truth Society, in which the attitude of the Government was denounced; Richard Bartholdt, the former German-American Congressman from St. Louis; Paul Moeller, and Supreme Court Justice John W. Goff.

"William Jennings Bryan, our honored Secretary of State," the protesting statement reads, "was one of the first to fall a victim to the vile work of the calumniators. Not content with forcing him from office they have kept up their scurrilous attacks until they have induced many of the more susceptible to consider this noble American a clown and an enemy of his people."

Of Andrew Carnegie the statement says:

"Andrew Carnegie, our distinguished reformed millionaire," who despite his early associations has in his later years seen fit to espouse the cause of the people, is among the latest to be made a target for the awful onslaught of calumny against peace advocates. One of the vilest attacks on this venerable and honored gentleman appears in certain widely circulated newspapers under date of July 30, and accuses him of having given a bribe of $1,000,000 to prevent war."

The statement tries to convey the impression that certain of the newspapers that are not pro-German in their attitude have "bought" women peace advocates, among whom it names Miss Jane Addams of Chicago, who it states has been "an especial mark of deriding and vitriolic attacks." Ex-Secretary of Commerce Charles Nagel is another who is mentioned as a victim of "calumniators" and "mud-slinging editors."

The statement closes with a defense of German-Americans and Irish-Americans who have, it is added, "always been loyal to the best interests of the country."

"We wish to aver," the statement continues, "that our own country owes an especial debt of gratitude to the Irish-Americans who have furnished some of the brightest minds in our political life, and to whom we owe much of our national spirit of democracy. And we think it is but just that we should give heed to the opinions of Irish-Americans, because of the greater study they have devoted to the facts in the English-born campaign of 'molding public opinion' begun in 1842 and extended not only to America but to Italy and all parts of the earth where newspapers are published."

SEES GERMAN TONGUE AS WORLD LANGUAGE

Trietsch Computes That 105,000,000 Now Speak It, Against 152,000,000 English, 52,000,000 French.

HAMBURG, July 30, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—In an effort to show that German is rapidly becoming the "world's language," Davis Trietsch has compiled statistics and made elaborate studies of the use of the three principal tongues, English, French, and German. He first presents the figures compiled for the year 1800, regarding the three languages. They cover the number of persons who spoke and understood these languages.

In Europe..	30,005,000	30,155,000	14,540,000
In U. S....	230,000	230,000	5,250,000
Elsewhere..	35,000	1,065,000	730,000
Total....	20,320,000	31,450,000	20,520,000

Ninety years later statisticians estimated that the lingual ability of the world was divided as follows:

1890.

Elsewhere..	500,000	4,900,000	14,500,000

Tretsch found fault with these figures, maintaining they were unfair to the German language. They did not include, he insisted, those persons who speak two languages, and who had been counted in but one list. For 1914, therefore, he prepared the following table:

In Europe..	90,500,000	46,000,000	46,000,000
In U. S....	13,000,000	1,000,000	90,000,000
Elsewhere..	1,500,000	5,000,000	16,000,000
Total....	105,000,000	52,000,000	152,000,000

To these figures he subjoins the following observations:

First, French is not spoken anywhere in the world outside of France and its environs; secondly, English really counts only in England, the United States, and in the English colonies, Canada, South Africa, and Australia, and is to be counted as a "world language" only as English colonization has carried it to the far corners of the earth.

German, on the other hand, has increased to the point of having, in Europe, almost as many users as French and English; he predicts that in four years it will have more. German, furthermore, is in universal use in Austria, much of Hungary, and Switzerland, in the German colonies, and is on the increase in various parts of Europe.

Estimating that "German in an economic and political sense has an entirely different uniformity or coherence than English," Tretsch believes that after the war its use will continue to spread, and he feels sure that even today, if the number of persons who speak it as well as some other language could be gauged correctly, the "slight discrepancy" between 105,000,000 and 152,000,000 would be overcome and German would be found to lead the world.

Even if this is not the case, he finds that "the importance of a language does not depend upon the number of persons who use it, but increases or decreases according to the importance of the motherland in politics, economy, and technique. With the extraordinary rise of Germany in this respect, German as a world language has increased far beyond the number who use it."

CAN'T SERVE KINGS AND BE AMERICANS

Courts Bar Foreigners Who Seek Citizenship and Then Join Old World Armies.

MANY THUS CUT OFF

Americans Swearing Allegiance to Foreign Rulers Also Lose Their Rights Here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—The Department of Labor announces today that foreigners who had sought to become American citizens by taking out naturalization papers, but who had entered the ranks of the European armies, were being rejected when their cases came up for final hearing.

Aliens seeking naturalization, and this has been true for some years, must take an oath of allegiance to the United States and forswear their allegiance to any other power. Americans who take an oath of allegiance to foreign States are regarded as having expatriated themselves, and the courts are taking the same attitude toward foreigners who apply for American citizenship, then break their oath of allegiance to the United States by serving in foreign armies.

The announcement by the Department of Labor read as follows:

"With practical uniformity the courts exercising naturalization jurisdiction throughout the country are taking cognizance of the absence from the United States of applicants for citizenship who have returned to their native countries for the purpose of taking part in the wars of the sovereigns of their birthplace. When the petition of an alien who has responded to the call of the sovereignty of his birth comes up for final passing the courts have held that absence in the army fighting under his native allegiance broke the continuity of his residence in the United States, and have denied the application.

"A decision recently handed down by the Circuit Court at Grafton, West Va., covering this point, has just been reported to the Bureau of Naturalization and is along the line of the rulings of other courts. It appears that in this case, the applicant, born in Germany, returned to his native land in December, 1912, and remained there until March, 1914. During the greater part of the time he served in the Grecian army in the second Balkan war.

"These facts are brought out in open court at the hearing on his petition by the naturalization examiner, and the Court held, in denying the petition, that the applicant had not resided in the United States for five years continuously immediately preceding the filing of his petition, as required by law, and also that the declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, made on July 6, 1909, was completely vitiated by his act in returning to Greece and performing military duty for that country.

"Before entering upon duty in the Grecian Army it is understood that a soldier is required to take the following oath: 'I swear to bear true faith in the nation and the Constitutional King of the Hellenes, obedience to the Constitution, the laws and decrees of the State, submission to my superiors; to execute their orders faithfully and without contradiction, to defend the flag to the last drop of my blood with true faith and devotion, never to abandon nor to allow myself to be separated from the flag, to observe with exactitude the military laws and regulations, and to comport myself generally as a faithful and honorable soldier.'

"This oath of allegiance is regarded by the courts as further evidence of the fact that the intention of the applicant to become a citizen of the United States to reside permanently in the United States has become altered. While this petition was denied without prejudice, a new declaration of intention must be taken out, and at a period of five years from the date of his return to the United States a new petition for naturalization must be filed before he can secure the coveted status of an American citizen.

"When it is known that under the laws of this country any American citizen shall be deemed to have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in a foreign State in conformity with its laws, or when he has taken the oath of allegiance to any foreign State, the ruling of the courts seems reasonable that an alien has broken the oath made in the declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States when he subsequently renews his allegiance to his native sovereign."

BELGIAN REFUGEES STOLID.

A Netherlands correspondent of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, in a recent letter to the New York officials of the Commission, pictures life in Belgium at the present time as "apparently normal," and yet "only superficial."

"The people," he writes, "seem to be resigned to the present order of things, and in the distribution of food, there is noticeable among the thousands who line up daily at the canteens, to receive their portions of food—barely enough to keep them alive and about one-third of a soldier's daily ration—an air of resignation, if not entire dejection. The Belgians realize the fact that, but for the marvelous work of the Commission, they would quickly reach the starvation period, yet in the face of all this there are found signs of gayety and merriment—the natural tendency of the human being to make the best of circumstances.

"In Belgium, the needs of the people are far more pressing than they are among the Belgian refugees in Holland and England. In Holland, I found that the Dutch Government and the people had been doing a vast humanitarian work. Large concentration camps have been established in various places, where numbers of refugees, varying from about 1,000 to nearly 13,000, and numbering in all perhaps from 60,000 to 70,000, are provided for, while several thousand more are cared for in private homes. Besides these, there are a good many interned Belgian soldiers, who are looked after in a commodious detention camp near Nunspeet. The care of all these thousands is a colossal burden on Holland, but she is bearing it uncomplainingly.

"The great burden of charity fell upon the United States, and it is to the United States that the gratitude of the Belgians is the most strikingly evinced. An American is looked upon in Belgium as a sort of Aladdin or fairy prince. The Stars and Stripes are revered and applauded whenever shown, and usually hats are doffed to the tri-colored banner of freedom."

MOST WOUNDED RECOVER.

German Figures Show That 88.5 Per Cent. Return to Service.

On the basis of an investigation conducted in the war hospitals in Germany, the percentage of recoveries, returns to service, and deaths among German wounded soldiers has been compiled. The following figures are taken from the Berliner Tageblatt of July 10, just received here:

	Returned to Service.	Deaths.	Recovered but Unfit.
August	84.8	3.0	12.2
September	88.1	2.7	9.1
October	88.9	2.4	8.7
November	87.3	2.1	10.6
December	87.8	1.7	10.5
January	88.7	1.4	9.9
February	88.6	1.3	10.0
March	88.9	1.6	9.5
April	91.2	1.4	7.4
Average	88.5	1.9	9.6

Inasmuch as even some of those here classed roughly as "recovered but unfit" the German paper says, returned subsequently to military service, the percentage of those who recovered and resumed military service is somewhat in excess of the figures given.

GERMAN SOCIALISTS PUT IN FOUR GROUPS

Vast Majority Remains Loyal to Government, Says the Breslauer Volkswacht.

TWO BODIES OPPOSE WAR

Liebknecht and Kautsky Lead Small Section That Demand Peace at Once—Few Annexationists.

The new grouping that has taken place within the German Social Democratic Party in the course of the present war is treated exhaustively in a recent issue of the Breslauer Volkswacht.

The paper begins by pointing out that a considerable number of the leading Socialists who formerly belonged to the Left or extreme radical wing of the party have now gone over to the so-called Right wing, among them Heinrich Cunow, a teacher in the Social Democratic Party school, and editor in chief of Vorwärts, the party's central organ; Paul Lensch, one of the most successful students of Marxian tendencies and formerly editor of the Leipziger Volkszeitung; Konrad Haenisch, a member of the Prussian Diet and one of the closest friends of Liebknecht and Mehring; Heinrich Schulz, delegate from Erfurt and Secretary of the Central Educational Committee; Max Cohen, a delegate in the Reichstag; Max Grunwald, and many other Socialists of prominence. All these, the paper points out, can be reproached by the extreme Left with having denied their past and gone over into the camp of the Imperialists.

"On the other hand, there is no lack of swervings in directly the opposite direction," says the Volkswacht; "an example being our own delegate in the Reichstag, Eduard Bernstein, who in the first place indorsed the war credits, and to him may be added Kurt Eisner and Edmund Fischer, who likewise have gone from the extreme Right to the extreme Left."

The Volkswacht divides the Social Democratic Party into four groups. The first is the "Liebknecht Group," which recently sent out a circular in which it reproached the party with having abandoned its principles and being guilty of treachery to its entire past.

Calls It War of Conquest.

Of this group the Volkswacht says:

"This group sees in the present war not a war of defense, but a war of conquest, and it accuses the majority of having given up its opposition to the imperialistic policy of conquest. Against this imperialistic policy twelve delegates of the Reichstag raise warning hands—Albrecht, Henke, Herzfeld, Horn, Kunert, Ledebour, Liebknecht, Rühle, Schwarz, Stadthagen, Stolle, and Vogtherr—as well as the Diet members, Hofer, Adolf Hoffmann, and Ströbel, Franz Mehring, the editors of Vorwärts, and of the Leipziger Volkszeitung, and of two smaller Social Democratic newspapers. The names Westermeyer and Crispien, under this circular speak for themselves, even if the names of Comrades Borchardt and Radeck were not signed to the document. The last named, however, presents the arguments of the group, which is unfortunately not possible in Germany just now, in the Berner Tagwacht in his customary dirty fashion."

Differing from the first group in the manner, though not in the manner, of its activity, the second group centres around the Social Democratic delegates, Bernstein, Haase, and Kautsky, who recently issued a signed manifesto entitled "The Duty of the Hour," which evoked a sensation in Germany. Of this group the Volkswacht says:

"Comrade Haase, as Chairman of a party the majority of which holds views different from his own, feels the need of showing to others his opposing views in a manner that does not endanger the party's solidarity. Such a party, therefore, he cannot associate himself with the irreconcilables. It is to be hoped that various others who subscribed to the manifesto will follow his example."

But the chief group of the Social Democrats, according to the Volkswacht, is the "Bloc of Aug. 4," comprising "the majority of the party's Deputies in the Reichstag, of the party's Executive Committee, of the party commission, the party press, and, so far as can now be discerned, of the party voters throughout the empire, the General Committees of the labor organizations, and the Executive Committees of the labor unions."

The Composition of the August Bloc.

Of this group, which announced its stand in the Reichstag on the memorable night of Aug. 4 of last year, just after the declaration of war with England, the Volkswacht says:

"The August Bloc is composed of nearly a hundred Deputies in the Reichstag of both tendencies. Old and avowed radicals and very suspicious revisionists have found themselves together as a result of the demands of the day, and have given expression to the sentiment and opinion which ever since Aug. 4 has been voiced in the entire party ranks and press, and in line with which the Breslauer Volkswacht and nineteen-twentieths of the party press are conducted. The most complete expression of their attitude is given in David's book, 'Social Democracy and the War.' But plenty of other writings in that spirit have been published by Cunar, Haenisch, Lensch, and Keil.

"The majority of the party does not deny the imperialistic nature of the war; it desires to undertake everything that can make possible an early peace. But toward this end it sees as the only way the discovery of a similar sentiment in the hostile countries, and it suggests that imperialistic tendencies should be sought not only in Germany, but also in other lands, for instance, in England and Russia. The majority likewise wants to combat plans of conquest, but not merely in Germany, and it considers it impossible if it is desired only by Germany and not by the others. At the moment when voices of peace are raised abroad, this body will know its duty, and the same is true of the moment when the fight must no longer be for or regarding one's own land. But of that there appears to be no prospect just now."

Annexationists Few in Numbers.

Finally, the Volkswacht describes a fourth group of Social Democrats—the Annexationists, of which it says cautiously:

"They exist, as a matter of fact, chiefly among their opponents. They are under the suspicion of being advocates of, the incorporation of foreign territories, as, for instance, parts of Belgium or at least several eastern districts. They, themselves, do not admit it, but allow it to be seen that, in their opinion, the boundaries of today are not destined for all time, and that a conviction such as the present world war will not pass without certain corrections, and that a time will come when one must become reconciled to these corrections. In this group may be counted, perhaps against their will, Comrades Heine, Schippel, Peus, Noske, Roth, Winnig, and Leuthner in Vienna. Perhaps this group will not become independent and will remain with the August Block which, after all, exercises the greatest force and attracts vacillating spirits in order that they may thereby grow healthy again—including also such spirits from the other side."

The Berliner Tageblatt, which has been advocating views resembling those of this last-named group, protests against the classification of the Volkswacht, saying:

"We think it is not wise immediately to call a person an 'Annexationist' simply because he is unwilling to adhere in every particular to the status quo."

MEDICAL MEN FORM WAR BROTHERHOOD

ADVANCED MORAL POSITION

Dr. S. J. Meltzer Is President, and Noted Scientists Enlist to Further Its Purpose.

The Medical Brotherhood, which includes among its officials a large body of prominent distinguished medical men, has been formed in this country to take advantage of the special position of the medical profession which has served the cause of humanity in all armies, relieving the suffering of friend and foe, in order to aid in restoring good feeling after the war and to raise standards of international morality.

The Medical Brotherhood has in contemplation no object beyond that of organizing while the war is in progress. The idea was contained in an article printed in Science on April 9 last by Dr. S. J. Meltzer of Rockefeller Institute on "The Deplorable Contrast Between Intranational and International Ethics." He was urged to give a practical turn to his suggestion by forming a society of medical men and the result has been the founding of the Medical Brotherhood. In an appeal just issued the Brotherhood says:

"The war had demonstrated one encouraging fact, namely, that among all the sciences and professions the medical sciences and medical practice occupy an almost unique relationship to warfare, and that, among all the citizens of a country at war, medical men and women occupy a peculiar and distinctive position.

Doctors' Part in War.

"No discovery in medical science has been utilized for the purpose of destroying or harming the enemy. Medical men in each of the warring countries are as courageous, as patriotic, as any other citizens, and are as ready to die or to be crippled for life in the service of their country as any other class of their fellow-countrymen. Their services, however, consist in ministering to the sick and to the injured and aiding to their sanitary needs. Furthermore, they often risk their lives by venturing into the firing line to bring the injured to places of safety and to attend to their immediate needs. In these heroic and humanitarian acts friend and foe are treated alike. Finally the majority of the members of the medical profession and of the medical journals of the neutral as well as of the belligerent countries abstain from public utterances that might be grossly offensive to the belligerent nations.

"These facts—this advanced moral position in international relations, which medicine and its followers are permitted to occupy in all civilized countries, ought to be brought to the full consciousness of the men and women engaged in the medical sciences or in medical practice. Such a realization could not fail to have an elevating influence upon the medical profession itself and would probably exert a favorable influence upon the development of international morality in general.

Dr. S. J. Meltzer Is President.

The following officers are members of the Executive Committee: President, Dr. S. J. Meltzer of Rockefeller Institute; Vice Presidents, Dr. Rufus Cole of Rockefeller Hospital and Dr. S. Josephine Baker of the Department of Child Hygiene; First Secretary, Dr. William H. Park, Professor of Bacteriology; Dr. John Allen Wyeth, President of the New York Polyclinic Hospital.

Because of the fact that the work of organization must be centred in this city, the medical men who will be active officials in the Brotherhood at the outset have been drawn from the medical profession in New York, but scores of the most eminent men in other cities have indorsed the plan of the Brotherhood and accepted honorary positions.

POLES ORDERED TO RETURN.

Compulsory Rehabitation Policy Already Begun by Germany.

The German military authorities are beginning early with a policy of compulsory rehabitation of refugees in Poland, similar to that which was adopted in Belgium. An official announcement was published by the Wolff Telegraph Bureau in German newspapers of July 13, copies of which have just been received here, calling upon all inhabitants of Poland whose homes were in the territory under German civil administration on the east of the Vistula, to return to those homes if they had left them, unless they were employed in Germany or one of its allied countries as laborers or in the government service, or unless their return was made impossible by circumstances beyond their control.

Failure to obey this order, it was announced, would be punished by a special "absence tax," which would be mentioned at from 5 to 15 per cent. of the fortune of persons violating the regulation.

The chief of the German civil administration thereupon called upon all inhabitants of Poland subject to the duty of returning home under the regulation, to do so by Aug. 1. The order was issued from Kalish on July 6.

GERMAN FRUIT TO ENGLAND?

Exports to Holland Thought to be for British Markets.

The suspicion that German fruit is finding its way into England is voiced, in the Berliner Tageblatt of July 13, received here yesterday. The Mainz correspondent of the paper in a dispatch says:

"The high prices of fruit, which continue in spite of the ample crop, has led the authorities of the large cities in the Lower Rhine levels to examine more closely the happenings in the fruit market. In doing so they discovered that foreign dealers are traveling through the fruit sections of the Hessian and Prussian Rhineland and on the Bergstrasse and buying up all fruit they can get, and that thereby great quantities of fruit are exported by ship and boat to Holland.

"But inasmuch as Holland, even in times of peace, imports no fruit from Germany, but, on the other hand, exports such fruit to Germany, it is suspected that these shipments of fruit find their way into the enemy countries, especially to England, which has always been a great importer of Rhenish fruit, particularly hard fruit."

BRYCE PREDICTS GAIN FOR THE TINY NATIONS

Former Ambassador Here Sure War Will Insure Integrity of Smaller States.

LONDON, July 18, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The noise of war is all-pervading here, and little but war is in the minds of people. But out of the blackness of war details, accounts of battles, long casualty lists, war loans, recruiting, and ammunition supplies, the student habits of Viscount Bryce, in viewing the historical values of events, permit him to detach himself from the day-to-day turmoil and take his bearings on some of the larger results that may come out of the struggle.

When seen in his study by a representative of The Associated Press, Lord Bryce showed the same keen interest in American affairs that has made him an authority on them since his "American Commonwealth" appeared, and the same intimate acquaintance with American men and affairs, political and party questions and public issues. He is little changed from his days as Ambassador at Washington; the same alertness and intense keenness of manner; his shaggy full beard and heavy eyebrows now quite white; every movement having the vigor of a man of middle life.

The interest taken in America in Lord Bryce's notable report on "Alleged Atrocities Committed by the Germans in Belgium" was a source of much satisfaction to him.

"The committee over which I presided reached conclusions very slowly and reluctantly," he said. "I personally have many friends in Germany, and I could hardly believe that such things could be true, or that they knew such things were happening. But beginning with an open mind, and even in doubt, the truth of the charges was finally forced upon all the committee by the accumulation of evidence. As it is, I cannot believe the German people know what is going on. They receive only the military version, and the people are not aware of the real conditions, not only as to Belgium, but in the whole range of events connected with the war. The military party, with its von Bernhardi spirit, is still completely dominant."

Reference was made to Lord Bryce's pamphlet on "Neutral Nations and The War," and to some interpretations drawn from it on some of the larger results which might come out of the war. Although these interpretations were not intended at the time for publication, Lord Bryce later approved their use as expressing his view, as follows:

"It is too soon to say what the war will bring in good or evil. But we can at least hope, and perhaps see dimly, some of the things for which it is worth while. One of the most desirable, I should say, will be the territorial integrity of small States—Belgium, Serbia, Switzerland, Holland. If this war means anything it means that a group of great States are banded together in protecting the small States against absorption and annihilation. The small State has been as useful in its way to the world's progress as the great State, and of incalculable value as a pacific barrier between antagonistic races. And yet the small State cannot exist without the rule of force and the survival of the strongest, as it has not the resources for vast military establishments; its very existence depends on the good faith of the great and powerful States in dealing with it. I do not doubt that the good faith will be in favor of the small State, and that it will be one of the most beneficial results to come out of the conflict."

Lord Bryce was asked if this would not lead to some internationalizing of treaties, so that it would become the duty of the great States to uphold treaty obligations toward the small State.

"Yes, that is what we all desire; that is what the article referred to was meant to advocate; it is one of the larger results which we may foresee with some hope of realization," said Lord Bryce. "This war has increasingly shown the need of an international code under which treaties are not alone respected by States party to them, but are part of an international code of honor which all States are bound to uphold."

HISTORIC SHOP THREATENED

Lambert's, London, Dates from Time of George III.—A Quaint Exterior.

LONDON, July 20.—A number of changes are threatened to historic places in London as a result of the deal by which the Arundell estate in the West End has changed hands for $1,250,000. The property lies between Coventry Street and Shaftesbury Avenue, and is less than an acre in extent. Arundell Street and Panton Square are included in the estate.

The names of the purchasers are being kept secret, but they are said to be two well-known London landowners. An American company, it is stated, sought to purchase the property, the offer on its behalf coming too late. Its plan included the "most palatial hotel in London," combined with various pleasure and entertainment features. The company may decide to build elsewhere in London, the project not having been abandoned.

The purchasers of the Arundell estate also propose to erect a splendid hotel, and this is likely to result in the razing of several interesting buildings that link the London of today with the town of the past. Among these is one of the most picturesque shops in the city, that of Lambert, in Coventry Street. It has a fine old Georgian front, with small old-fashioned window panes, glazed with a purple-tinted glass that gives an air of mystery to the gold and silver plate displayed inside. The old iron railings that protect the basement windows, the brass plates that the polishing of many years has turned into dull medallions, and the general effect of the low doors and windows are in curious and pleasing contrast to the plate-glass windows and modern architecture of the shops all around.

The business was founded by Francis Lambert in the reign of George III., and he, enjoying the King's patronage, was successful from the start, being able soon afterward to take the two adjoining shops. He combined the three, and the long shopfront for the display of plate, now the largest Georgian shopfront remaining in London, was a result. The interior is as quaint as the exterior. The ancient paneling of the walls and the plaster of the ceiling are practically untouched since the place was built.

Lambert's enjoys an even more remarkable distinction. It is about the last of the establishments famous and prosperous London tradesmen in which the old custom of living "over the shop" is kept up. The Lamberts still reside above their business premises.

FIVE YEARS FOR SABOTAGE.

French Prisoner Punished for Putting Sand on Car Axles.

An "exemplary but just" case of punishment inflicted on a French war prisoner at Baireuth is cited in the Berliner Tageblatt of July 13, just received here. The prisoner, a young French student named Lucien Henriat of Paris, has been in German captivity since Aug. 20.

On April 27 he was employed with other prisoners in loading straw at Baireuth into freight cars destined for the war front. One of the German officers supervising the loading saw Henriat reach down to the ground and then begin fumbling at the axle of the freight car. When he called out to the Frenchman, Henriat immediately darted under the car. The guard darted after him and arrested him.

Subsequently it was charged that Henriat had put sand into several oilcups of the car axles, in order to cause fire by means of a hotbox in the course of the car's journey. Henriat himself insisted that he had merely intended to take a little oil out of the axle boxes in order to polish his boots with it.

He was sentenced to five years in the penitentiary.

20,000 JEWS SERVING WITH BRITISH ARMY

Five Thousand Others Recruited —10 Per Cent. of Jewish Population Enlisted.

GRATEFUL TO WAR OFFICE

It Has Respected, Whenever Possible, the Jews' Religious Requirements—'Kosher Food' Mystery.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, July 9.—The prominent part the English Jew is playing in the European war was vividly impressed this week upon the return from the battlefields in France of Chief Rabbi Joseph Herman Hertz and the Rev. Michael Adler, Senior Chaplain of the Jewish soldiers in the field. They found that out of an aggregate of 220,000 Jews living in the British Isles more than 20,000 are wearing the British colors at the firing line, or approximately 10 per cent. of the entire English Jewish population.

Not only this, but figures obtained at the War Office by THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent show that another 5,000 English Jews are in the recruiting ranks, putting the total of Jews enlisted under the British flag at considerably over 25,000.

From the battlefields come stirring tales of heroism of the Jewish soldiers. Chief Rabbi Hertz and Senior Chaplain Adler heard many of them from Field Marshal Sir John French and his subordinates. The Field Marshal, paying the highest tribute to the daring, courage and patriotism of the Jewish fighters, said: "None of the British soldiers has shown more bravery or more skill."

When the call to arms was sounded last Summer among the first to respond were the British Jews. Ever since the time there has been unflagging zeal among the Jews to enlist, get to the front as quickly as possible and fight the enemy that menaces Great Britain. The spirit that has actuated the British Jews was explained to THE NEW YORK TIMES by the Rev. S. Lipson, Chaplain of the soldiers at home, who has worked with Chaplain Adler in religious activity since the war started. The Rev. Mr. Lipson has the rank of Captain, and, like the Senior Chaplain, wears khaki.

"It is easy to explain why the Jews in Great Britain have flocked to the defense of the British flag," said Mr. Lipson. "The Jews have the greatest love for Great Britain. They are proud to be citizens of this powerful Empire. Ever since they came to England they have had all the rights and privileges of the Empire, and have lived the lives of freemen.

"To the British Jew there has been opened up in England the widest opportunity for development. Great Britain has encouraged it, and as the Jew has grown up here he has formed an attachment for the country that nothing could wipe out.

"At heart the Jew is intensely patriotic and loyal. The British Empire has brought out the best that is in him, and it is only natural that in this time of dark stress for the empire the Jew should be found willing to give up his life for his country. He goes into the war to fight for the last foot of the preservation of the British Empire, and it matters not a jot to him that he may have to die for it. No, he regards it as a privilege to sacrifice his life if England may live.

"When the war began many Jews, in the rush to enlist, neglected to put themselves down as of the Jewish faith. Their names were filled in upon the forms as of the Church of England. That has caused some confusion up to now as to the actual number of Jews enlisted under the colors of Great Britain.

"Part of my work and that of the Senior Chaplain has been to straighten this tangle out so that we may know exactly how many Jews are in the field or enlisted as recruits, so they may have religious ceremony from their own ministry. Now we have it practically cleared up and we find that more than 20,000 are in the field, and many thousands in the recruiting camps."

The Rev. Mr. Lipson spoke with enthusiasm of the attitude of the War Office toward the Jewish soldier.

ALLIES ALARMED ABOUT THE BALKANS

OUR INTERESTS INVOLVED

Reported Negotiations Between Russia and Japan Which May Affect the Pacific.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, July 31.—A new turn has been given to the Balkan kaleidoscope, and Constantinople is seen more clearly than ever to be the key to the whole jumbled situation in Southeastern Europe.

Reports, which are doubtless receiving America's special consideration, as her interests are directly concerned, are also current that the events in the neighborhood of the Dardanelles may have an important influence upon the future history, not only of the countries contiguous to the narrow seas of the Near East, but of the continents lapped by the oceans of the extereme Orient.

On this latter aspect of the question, which is concerned with alleged negotiations between Russia and Japan, nothing has yet been published in England, though the French censorship has permitted a free discussion in the press of Paris, whence a summary of it has presumably reached the United States by the French cable.

Since Premier Asquith's recent reference in Parliament to the possibility of money being required for "new allies" there had existed in London a complacent belief that the late Summer or early Fall would certainly bring developments in the Balkan peninsula favorable to the Allies' cause. German threats to Rumania, timed to culminate almost synchronously with the meeting of the new Greek Parliament controlled by M. Venizelos, strengthened the conviction that the former country would move immediately her harvests were gathered in, and that the latter would quickly follow suit.

Recent events have considerably shaken this confidence. When the Russian forces were in Bukovina, Rumania's army could have been thrown into the battle line without great risks. Such action would have been in the nature of an extension of the Russian left wing. Since the Russian retreat Rumania is left in an exposed position, which would become highly critical if the Teutonic drive against the Russian armies were crowned with complete success.

Even now, though the Grand Duke's forces are still in being, Germany considers that the Rumanian danger has been eliminated, and Theodore Wolff in a recent issue of the Berliner Tageblatt suggested that Prince von Hohenlohe's visits to his royal brother-in-law at Bucharest were a superfluity. Rumania, according to this view, can no longer afford to run the risk of offending Germany by refusing the passage of munitions for Turkey.

Greece, on her side, missed a golden opportunity, and her intervention, now that the French and British have a firm foothold on the Gallipoli Peninsula, is less valuable to the Allies, and consequently would be likely to obtain less reward if it were given at this date.

In the German view, Bulgaria is able to play the most important rôle among the Balkan States. Some authorities hold that it is a race against time, and that unless the Dardanelles operations move more rapidly than they have hitherto done, Bulgaria may take what Herr Wolff describes as her "great opportunity."

Her present attitude is enigmatic. Her arrangement with Turkey, announced this week, whereby the latter country ceded a considerable tract of territory, roused apprehension as an indication of an evolution of Bulgarian policy in regard to the great war.

No information has been received as to the quid pro quo which Turkey obtained. The Nation says "It looks as if Bulgaria had been squared by Turco-German diplomacy." The disappointment is allth e greater because of the hopes founded upon the recent change made in the British diplomatic representation at Sofia."

Count Reventlow, however, believes that Bulgaria will make no move until she is convinced that Russia's military force is finally broken. In that event a renewed attack by Austria upon Serbia would be a probability, and there is a possibility also that the Austro-German staff might attempt to break a way through Thrace to the defense of Constantinople.

A Franco-British victory in the Dardanelles would put a completely different aspect on all these matters. It would transform a situation which, beyond all doubt, is at present highly critical forth e Allies. Thus is Constantinople the key to the whole situation in the Near East. It would also be the beginning of the ending of the war.

NEWS DEPRESSES PRESIDENT.

CORNISH, N. H., July 31.—The killing of two American bluejackets by natives at Port au Prince was reported officially to President Wilson as soon as he got up today. He expressed concern and directed that all information obtainable be forwarded to him from Washington.

In answer to questions concerning the Haitian situation the President said he knew no more than the public generally and could add nothing to the facts already published. He said that he was keeping in close touch with developments.

The killing of the American sailors had a depressing effect on the President. He received only a brief outline of the messages received from Rear Admiral Caperton. He will probably find some way later of showing his appreciation of the work of the two men killed.

THE CONNECTICUT SAILS.

Leaves Philadelphia Navy Yard with 500 Marines for Haiti.

PHILADELPHIA, July 31.—The battleship Connecticut, with about 500 marines on board, sailed from the Philadelphia Navy Yard today for Port au Prince, where the marines will reinforce those already on duty there. As the Connecticut drew away from her dock, sailors and marines on board the battleship Minnesota and the cruisers Brooklyn and Columbia lined the rails and the bands played "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The marines and bluejackets on the Connecticut, eager to get away to see active service, cheered in return for the parting salute given to them by the men who remain at home.

Elizabeth Oil Men Profit.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., July 31.—Superintendent William Koehler of the Bayonne Refinery, declared that wage increase to all employes of the Standard Oil Company in New Jersey became effective in the local plant yesterday. He announced that 1,200 men in Elizabeth would be affected by the increase and that $130,000 would be added to the annual payroll.

retiring army, as Field Marshal von Mackensen had previously crossed this railway.

There remain, however, the main double track route through Minsk and an equally good road from Ivangorod through Lukow and the northern line, which runs south of the Bug River, to say nothing of innumerable vehicular roads which enter the Polish capital from the east. Therefore, so long as Field Marshal von Hindenburg is prevented from crossing the Bug from the northeast it is believed Grand Duke Nicholas has still an excellent chance of saving his whole army.

When the Russians do reach the new line of defense they will be faced by another danger—that arising from the advance of General von Billow's army, composed largely of cavalry, which is now approaching the fortress of Kovno, which is within three days' march of the Vilna-Petrograd Railway.

It will probably be several days before the struggle is finally decided. Nobody questions the fact that the capture of Warsaw the Germans will score a victory which will not only put the Russions on the defensive for many months, perhaps well into next year, but which will greatly hearten the civilian population of the central powers and release an army of one million or more men for an offensive in the west.

Aviators See Evacuation.

GENEVA, July 31, (via Paris.)—German aviators, returning to their lines after a flight over Warsaw, reported that they clearly saw the Russian troops evacuating the Polish capital, marching toward the east, says a dispatch received today by the Geneva Tribune from Innsbruck.

Austro-Hungarian cavalry, the dispatch adds, have entered Lublin, and all the railways in South Russian Poland have been in the hands of the Austrians since yesterday.

A German offensive on a large scale from Plonsk and Pultusk to the confluence of the Narew and the Bug Rivers began yesterday morning and, these advices add, the Germans are making progress.

BOTH SIDES ATTACKING.

Confused Battles North of Warsaw Russians Fighting Valiantly.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, July 31, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—Even between Servock, wher the Narew and the Bug meet, and Pultusk, where they are nearest to Warsaw, and where they are constantly pouring in their reserves, drawing regiments even from the Lublin front, the Germans find their attacks coinciding with Russian attacks. The result is like some tremendous bullfight or one far-stretching mêlée in which the Russian bayonet do fearful damage.

Between the Wieprz and the Bug, north of Grubechoff, Mackensen on Tuesday exhausted his men in uninterrupted succession of fierce, but vain, attacks, and on the following day could only attack in gasps and half-heartedly.

On the Bug again above Sokal the Austrians, who had been once more carried across the river by the impetus of German reinforcements, were chased back to the left bank, leaving another 1,500 of their men in Russian hands.

The Russian Army certainly has not lost a particle of its spirit against the great, sweeping hurricanes of shell and masses and desperate energy of the best troops of Germany and Austria. It is putting up a most glorious fight. And yet it is going to retire. The decision of farsighted strategy was taken with a strong sense of the sacrifice involved, but with an equally strong sense of the necessity of conserving the magnificent fighting force until the moment when it can deal its enemy a decisive blow. On the Polish front this decisive blow cannot be dealt. To accept a decisive battle on the Vistula and Bug at the present moment, when the enemy has at his disposal an unlimited supply of ammunition, would be not to save Warsaw but again to risk losing it altogether. Warsaw must be sacrificed in order that Warsaw, and infinitely more than Warsaw, may be saved.

The Grand Duke is the last man to desire abandonment of Warsaw. His determination to reunite Poland and to extend Polish liberties is unshaken. The prize will not be worth the herculean effort the Germans have made to win it. The ephemereal political success is no reward for such a vast military expenditure and the great Russian Army, which is the goal of the German struggle, will remain tantalizingly and depressingly beyond reach.

In the meantime, the retirement is a big complex process which is not to be carried out in a day and the Russians are taking care that by the time the evacuation is complete the Germans shall enter Warsaw in considerably diminished numbers.

PETROGRAD, July 30, (via London, July 31.)—Crossing of the Vistula at several points on ponteons and efforts of the Austro-German llies to construct briges across the river, curiously enough have elicited less discussion among Russia military critics than the crossing of the Wieprz near Travniki or the advance of the Germans southward from Bausk, which lies between Riga and Ponlewesch, in Kovno Province.

Operations against Kovno naturally are regarded as interesting because of the importance attached to it as one of the strongholds of the prospective new Russia n line. The Germans, proceeding from the southwest, have reached the advanced positions of Kovno and also are pushing northeartward from Suwalki.

Meanwhile the Russians are defending gallantly their positions on the Narew, between the Vistula and the Vieprz, and on the Bug. They claim notable successes in the sector Chmiel-Plaski, where they caused their antagonists heavy losses and tok 1,000 Austrians prisaoner in the Sokal region.

One of the most thrilling minor actions of the war in this theatre was the capture of an Austrian aeroplane on July 28 by Lieutenant Pokrovski Cornet Plonski east of the Zlota Lipa River. Firing constantly at the Austrian aviator from a higher altitude, they forced him to descend. The Russian machine followed and the Austrian Lieutenant surrendered with a non-commissioned officer. The Austrian aeroplane, which was not damaged, was a new machine of the 120-horsepower type.

SPARES WARSAW PROPERTY.

Grand Duke Orders Destruction Only Where Necessary.

LONDON, July 31.—Grand Duke Nicholas, Commander in Chief of the Russian forces, has decreed, according to a Reuter's Petrograd dispatch, that no property in Warsaw shall be destroyed unless such a step is imperative from a viewpoint of military necessity.

Owners of property and growing crops which are destroyed will be indemnified by the Russian Government. Specific routes have been designated for the use of the inhabitants of Warsaw who are voluntarily leaving the city.

RUSSIAN EMBASSY EXPLAINS NEW MOVE

Evacuation of Warsaw Due to Lack of Arms—Czar Only Beginning to Develop Resources.

In response to a request from The Associated Press for a statement on the present situation at Warsaw, the Russian Embassy last night gave out the following:

The reasons for the probable evacuation of Warsaw are these: A vast number of men with full equipment and amply supplied has been directed against the Russian forces in the Polish capital. On the western front (in Poland) there has been concentrated nearly the entitre Austro-Hungarian Army, excepting the forces assigned to duty on the Italian border, and in addition seventy divisions of the German Army supported by nearly all the German cavalry. Furthermore, the Turks have diverted a portion of the Russian Army to the Caucasus.

As a result of the exceptional development of German and some Austrian industries, the enemies of Russia dispose of enormous quantities of artillery, machine guns, and rifles and a most abundant supply of ammunition. Russia has encountered a temporary difficulty in supplying her forces with sufficient arms and ammunition to fight against an enemy so plentifully equipped as Germany and Austria-Hungary. Nevertheless, the most active measures are being taken to remedy this deficiency.

This lack of arms and ammunition is the reason why Russia has adopted a defensive mode of warfare. Although not so plentifully supplied with the means of waging war, Russia has succeeded, thanks to the heroic tenacity of her troops, not only in checking for the space of nearly three months the forward rush of her enemies, but in inflicting countless losses upon them. We have undermined by degrees the strength of their attack, and, as is proved by the poor physical condition of the prisoners taken by us, we have brought them to a state of considerable exhaustion.

A war is not decided by the invasion and occupation of any section of territory by one combatant or the other, but rather by the final outcome of the struggle between all the forces engaged. Consequently, the power which husbands its strength until the end must win. A change of the front line may be regarded as necessary for the purpose of placing the troops in more advantageous position to continue the strife.

Russia's means are inexhaustible and she is only beginning to develop her powers, while the strength of the Germans and Austrians has reached its highest point. They cannot avoid failure in the future.

The line on the Western frontier was always the weakest in the strategic position of Russia. We did not count in our plans upon holding possession, for the first period of the war, of the region within the sweep of the Vistula and territory bordering on this river. Consequently, as far back as 1910 Russia withdrey a portion of her forces from this territory into interior provinces and established her principal line of defense along the middle reaches of the Niemen, and thence in a southerly direction as far as Brest-litovak.

HOLDS TO BELGIAN EMBARGO

Britain Refuses to Pass Shipments Destined for America.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Great Britain is disinclined to permit ships to clear for this country with Belgian cargoes loaded at Rotterdam, according to a message today from Consul General Skinner at London. Belgian goods form a part of the vast accumulation of American-bound merchandise tied up in Rotterdam.

While efforts to obtain the release of all the Rotterdam shipments have been unsuccessful, it had been hoped that goods shown to be of Belgian manufacture might be exempted from the British Order in Council. Today's advices, however, indicated that Great Britain was not prepared to make such a concession.

The London government holds shipments from Belgium to be the same as goods of German origin so far as the British Order-in-Council is concerned, taking the position that so long as Belgian territory is dominated by Germany it is really German territory. Vigorous representation pointing out the hardships this policy would impose on the already stricken population of Belgium were made informally to the British mbassy hEere and are disposed of in today's despatch.

The progress of the negotiations makes it clear that Great Britain fears exemption of Belgian products would open a way to market for German wares. The blockade order was extended to Belgian wares for the reason that when a permit for shipment was obtained by a Belgian importer, German authorities intervened and insisted that one-half of the order be filled with goods of German origin. These, it is said, were secretly substituted for Belgian products. It was said this practice had grown to a considerable extent berore British officials discovered it.

GERMANY INVOICES COPPER.

Even Utensils and Roofs to be Enumerated in Guaging Supply.

BERLIN, July 31, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—Included in the news items given out today by the Overseas News Agency is the following:

"The German Government has begun a systematic gathering of figures and statistics concerning existing supplies of copper in every shape. It had been known previously that in addition t the increase in copper production, the supplies surpassed 2,000,000 tons, sufficient to meet war requirements for ten years. A large proportion of this total is available without the adoption of specific measures. Other portions of it will become available by the substitution of other metals.

"With the idea of securing complete copper data to the end that systematic preparations for the future be made effective, the Government has decided to investigate carefully what amount of copper might be found in the utensils, instruments, boilers and roofs made of this metal."

OLDFISH ON OLD JOKES.

"The joke of other days, the brave old veteran that in the days of the simple life never failed to crack our sides with laughter," said Dr. Oldfish, "is no more. Alas, that this primeval pleasantry and the ancient story tellers as we knew them in our salad days should have passed into the limbo of discarded things to leave us poor, indeed, in these later years when we have such great need of them!

"We may now look for jokes in the newspapers, but what a disappointment when one has found them! Time was when we would no more think of looking for a joke in a newspaper than for a needle in a haystack. We were never disappointed in finding jokes in the farmers' almanac, but the best jokes and choicest stories full of local color came from the neighborhood story teller. What a genius was he! You and I have seen him as he sauntered down the village highway to the general store, the harness shop or to the livery barn, where an appreciative audience awaited him.

"The two or three jokes or stories he brought from his repertory that lazy June afternoon were satisfying. He knew how to strike the springs of humor, and his reward was a never failing gush of approval from his friends and neighbors. Were he to appear now he would find no friendly listeners. His occupation is gone. It has been taken over by the jokesmiths of the syndicates who furnish wit and humor to a venal press by the yard. Nor does the spoliation halt here. There are the motion picture shows to flim-flam us with filmy humor, and, worse yet, there is the rapid-fire vaudeville monologist who impales jokes at the rate of sixty a minute until the listener's brain is awhirl and on the borderland of bedlam.

"These new methods, while greatly increasing the output, have necessarily depreciated the quality and the value. The greedy maxim of 'When you're gettin' git a-plenty' should never have been allowed to vitiate the character of our native humor or rob it of a pleasing individuality by overproduction.

"You remember the story of the Spanish soldier who, on returning to old Spain from the New World, placed before a lapidary a precious stone which shone so brightly as to light the darkest corner of the shop. The dealer paid a big price for it and was glad to get it. A day or two later the soldier brought two jewels equally as large and fine as the first, but the dealer gave him no more for the two than he had given for the single stone. The soldier made a third visit. This time he poured out before the dealer a pint or more of glittering gems. The lapidary, alarmed at a profusion which could but destroy values, then refused to buy the third offering at any price.

AMERICANS TO FEED STARVING ALBANIA

WEEK'S GIFTS TO AID FUNDS

Polish Organization Gets One Donation of $5,000—Hospital Supplies for Serbia.

The Committee of Mercy, 200 Fifth Avenue, of which August Belmont is Treasurer, announced yesterday that it is purchasing a large consignment of flour for Albania. The Albanian relief steamer Albania will sail from New York within a fortnight. She has received assurances of unmolested passage through the Adriatic blockade by the Italian Admiralty. The food will be carried into the interior of Albania on horseback.

Reports to the Committee of Mercy, it was said yesterday, show that since the war began more than 100,000 Albanians, most of them women and children, have died of starvation, and that hundreds are succumbing to hunger daily. Contributions for the Albanian relief work, sent to the Committee of Mercy, should be so designated.

Since the Committee of Mercy was organized it has collected $237,331.64. New subscriptions of $10 or more received the past week were:

Hospital Aid for Serbia.

Dr. Ella Scarlett-Synge sailed yesterday for Liverpool on the American liner Philadelphia on her way to Nish, Serbia, as the representative of the Women's Volunteer Reserve Corps of Canada, which she organized. She took with her a ton of medical supplies which have been donated by the Vancouver branch of the Women's Volunteer Reserve, and hopes to be able to arrange with the Serbian Government to make use of the unit to assist in controlling the diseases now prevalent in that country.

WORK OF FEEDING BELGIUM.

The Commission for Relief in Belgium, 71 Broadway, is spending $10,000,000 a month to keep the noncombatant populations of Belgium and Northern France from starvation, and there is no indication that this work is to end soon. These facts are disclosed in a review of the Commission's work in the first year of the war made public yesterday.

The report begins by telling how the Commission was formed following the invasion of Belgium to deal, not with causes but with effects. To feed the noncombatants of Belgium it was found necessary to send a shipload of food every other day, and the minimum requirements of the people proved to be about 80,000 tons of food a month. It is pointed out that to build the Panama Canal $3,000,000 a month was paid out, which is $7,000,000 less than the present monthly expenses of the Commission.

The people of Belgium and the 2,500,000 French people hemmed in back of the German battle front, entail an expenditure of $10,000,000 a month. The French defray the cost of feeding their people by an arrangement made by the commission with the German military authorities. To do this work the commission has built up the greatest commissariat in the world ever saw. It is now feeding 9,500,000 people. It has its own flag, respected by all Governments, with which it deals directly. It operates hundreds of canal boats which reach every province in Belgium.

The commission is the only medium through which food can go into Belgium. It has diplomatic relations with seven Governments, and its transactions and diplomacy, its accounts and doings are open to the world. It has made Belgian currency, worthless outside of Belgium, equal to gold in its food-purchasing power, and it has also arranged a system by which people in this country may send money to relatives and friends in Belgium and has already sent sums aggregating many thousands of dollars.

Up to yesterday the seventy ships sailing from United States ports have carried 1,100,000,000 pounds, yet, this has given to each Belgian only ten ounces of food daily—about one-third of a soldier's ration.

To partly defray the cost of feeding a nation, the Belgians, through bankers and moneyed men of the Kingdom, contributed $10,000,000 and $3,000,000 additional for transportation. Through the charity of the world, the remainder of what may be called the working capital, this has come. To those in Belgium—about three-fourths of the population—who are able to pay for their food and do not ask charity, the food is sold at a small profit, which helps to feed the destitute, who number about 1,700,000.

"But the destitute are daily growing in numbers," says the report, "and by Fall it is expected that this number will be largely increased."

PEACE PREACHERS BEATEN.

Caravan of Traveling Band in England Burned by a Mob.

LEICESTER, July 31.—A traveling band of fifty preachers, members of a self-styled "Fellowship of Reconciliation," which had been touring the country spreading peace propaganda, met with short shrift at the hands of the people of Leicester today.

Crowds raided the band's camp, burned the tents and caravan equipment, and administered a beating to the male members of the party.

The performance was concluded with the singing of "Tipperary" and "God Save the King" over the ashes of the outfit.

FIRE IN BRITISH FACTORY.

"A fire broke out in one of the departments of the Ardeer factory (Ardeer Iron Works, near Irvine, Scotland) late Friday night. It was followed by several explosions.

"As far as can be ascertained, one man was killed and eleven were injured."

SUSPECT ALLIES' FOE OF DITCHING TRAIN

FOUR PERSONS ARE INJURED

Railroad Offical Charges Spikes Were Put on the Rails to Throw the Cars from the Track.

Special to The New York Times.

METUCHEN, N. J., July 31.—Four persons were injured, twoscore badly shaken up, and nearly a hundred lives imperiled when the South River express on the Raritan River Railroad, carrying employes to the du Pont Powder Mill and the Union Guncotton Mill, was ditched between here and Parlin today.

C. M. Himmelberger, Superintendent of the railroad, said immediately after the accident that some person had put spikes on the rails with the deliberate intention of wrecking the train, probably with a view to crippling the employes working in the mills making ammunition for the Allies.

Jeremiah Minnick of South Amboy, engineer of the train, was badly cut and bruised and had to be removed to his home. Albert White of South Amboy suffered cuts ad contusions. Richard Henderson of Perth Amboy had his head cut and his arm sprained. Joseph Puskas of Tottenville suffered cuts, sprains, and bruises. Other passengers were injured slightly.

The locomotive and one car left the track and crashed into a stone wall. The point where the accident occurred was at a bend in the road, near a bridge and particularly dangerous. The engineer and Edward Clark, the fireman, stuck to their posts. There was considerable confusion in the passenger cars, the train coming to a stop so suddenly it threw many passengers to the floor.

Superintendent Himmelberger says there was no defect in the locomotive or the roadbed, and is positive that the wreck was caused by some one with malicious intent.

More than 3,000 men are engaged in the manufacture of war munitions in this part of Middlesex County, principally at Metuchen, Parlin, and Perth Amboy. It is estimated that 3,000 men are employed at the du Pont- De Nemours Powder plant and at the work of the Union Powder Company. The men are working in three shifts turning out gunpowder and guncotton for the Allies.

Under the charge of an ex-army officer, 100 armed guards keep constant watch on the plant and the workmen. The Raritan River railroad is taxed to its capacity carrying workmen to and from the mills, in addition to its regular passenger traffic.

Suspicious looking strangers have been seen prowling about the Nixon plant at Metuchen and the Parlin plant on the opposite bank of the Raritan River, and, fearing that the men were German sympathizers, extra guards are being engaged. Instead of shipping guncotton by rail practically all of the Nixon output now goes by boat.

An investigation is being made into the train wreck, and it was said tonight that arrests might be made in a short time.

MEXICO CITY TAKEN AGAIN BY CARRANZA

PROMISES TO RUSH FOOD

American Demand for Relief of Famine Conditions Believed to Have Hastened First Chief's Action.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VERA CRUZ, July 31.—General Gonzales occupied Mexico City today after light fighting.

Traffic will be resumed Sunday.

All the office furniture of the Carranza Government is being packed for removal to Mexico City.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Mexico City is again in the hands of the Carranza forces, according to unofficial advises received here today.

While reports of the reoccupation of the capital by General Gonzales lacked official confirmation tonight, it was known that General Carranza had ordered his forces back into that city, and also directed that strong patrols be established along the Mexican Railroad between Apizaco and Mexico City, to protect it from bandit raids.

The order followed closely the receipt by General Carrana of the vigorous representations sent by Secretary of State Lansing urging that the railway be reopened and kept open so the starving population of Mexico City could be fed. Similar representations went to Generals Villa and Zapata, but officials here felt that General Carrana held the key to the situtions through his control of the port of Vera Cruz. No answer has been received from any of the Mexican chiefs.

Notification of the order from General Carranza to General Gonzales reached the State Department today, and immediately afterward news was received unofficially that the advance guard of Gonzales's forces already in the interest Mexican city in General Gonzales will enter the city tomorrow with a larger force, the report says; civil government will be re-established, and plans for relieving distress among the people formulated.

May Avert Action by Washington.

Carranza's prompt action was regarded here as averting the necessity for immediate steps by this Government to insure transportation of provisions to the Mexican capital. Administration officials had determined that the provisions piled high in warehouses at Vera Cruz should be sent to the capital, an dGeneral Carranza was told in the message sent Thursday night that if he could not handle the situation it would be necessary for the United States to act.

Charles A. DouDglas, the Washington legal advisor of the Carranza government, who returned here last night from Vera Cruz, indicated today that within a short time the Carranzistas would ask the United States for recognition. The program of the administration is said to be, however, to insist that the Mexican factional leaders shall agree to stop fighting and consent to the appointment of a provisional president of the republic who was a member of the Madero cabinet.

General Villa appears to be in favor of this plan, but Carranza maintains that his faction is in the ascendency and should be recognized as the constitutional authority of the republic. If he should persist in that claim and refuse to agree to the selection of a former Madero cabinet minister, it is stated in certain circles here that the United States will look to the Villa army to support a provisional government with a Maderista at the head and will furnish active moral support to the central authority so established by cutting off the supply of war munitions to oppose factions and will obtain recognition for it from the principal nations of South America.

Carranza's Plans Outlined.

Carranza's agents here conveyed an outline of the "First Chief's" plans for relieving distress in Mexico City and for re-establishing constitutional Government in Mexico, to the State Department today, but what influence this outline will have on the plans for dealing with the Mexican situation now being considered by President Wilson is not known here.

Much may depend, it is said, on events of the next week in Mexico. If Carranza succeeds in opening communication to Mexico City and carries out also his campaig against General Villa toward the north and northeast, it may serve to delay any contemplated action by the United States.

Villa and his adherents propose to do all in their power to avert the possibility of Carranza receiving the moral support of the United States. To this end they have proposed the counterplan for consideration here that all faction leaders join in a peace conference, select a man for Provisional President entitled to it under the Constitution, and then hold regular elections. If Carranza will not yield to this, they suggest that the United States support them in such a conference without him, provided they can show that they represent a majority of the people.

As outlined to the State Department, General Carranza's plan is as follows:

General Gonzales will set up civil government in Mexico City at once, distribute food and establish a monetary system in order that stores and banks can be reopened. Troops will patrol the railroad to Vera Cruz, which will be opened at once. Provision trains will be started for the capital under heavy guard.

In co-operation with General Obregon, Gonzales' troops will reopen the railroad lines from Mexico City to the north and northeast toward Torreon and San Luis Potosi, and transportation will be re-established into the State of Michoacan, where the Constitutionalist Government has stored 280,000 bushels of corn.

To Move from Vera Cruz to Capital.

In addition to these emergency measures, an outline of the plans upon which General Carranza will base his claim for recognition was presented. This includes removal of the seat of his Government from Vera Cruz to Mexico City. It will not be dne, however, until Gonzales has the situation in and around Mexico City under complete control, probably not for two or three weeks. Municipal elections in the various States and the calling of an extra session of the Mexican Congress to choose a provisional President would follow.

The Carranza agency issued this statement tonight:

"The confidential agency of the Constitutionalist Government in Washington is in receipt of cable advices from Vera Cruz stating that First Chief Venustiano Carranza has hurried orders to General Pablo Gonzales to reoccupy Mexico City was the greatest possible speed, in view of the reports in circulation with regard to the critical conditions in the capital by reason of the shortage of foodstuffs. The orders include instructions to General Gonzales to arrange for the immediate transportation of trainloads of staple articles of food at the same time his troops enter the city.

"The State Department today received news that the Carranza main army under General Obregon had captured San Luis Potosi and Zacatecas in the campain against the Villa troops.

"The State Department has been advised from Tampico that the employes of the Aguila Oil Company have gone on strike and that the situation regarding the Huasteco Company is unchanged.

Little Resistance, Cables Acuna.

The City of Mexico was again captured by the Carranzistas Friday night, according to a cablegram from Vera Cruz received by Roberto V. Pesqueira, personal representative of General Carranza in New York, yesterday afternoon. The cablegram stated that General Pablo Gonzales had entered the city without serious resistance on the part of the Zapatistas. The cablegram also said that relief supplies for the civil population were being sent to Mexico City.

The cablegram, which was from Señor Acuña, the Carranza Minister of Foreign Relations, read:

General Gonzales reoccupied Mexico City last evening. He had little resistance. This movement was the culmination of a campaign determined upon when it was found necessary to crush the Villista column under Fierro, which by forced marches had been able to occupy Pachuca. Instead of sending a small force against Fierro, General Gonzales decided to inflict a crushing blow on him that would eliminate Fierro as a future menace when Mexico City was reoccupied.

Plan has proved eminently successful, though misunderstood and misrepresented by those not taken into Gonzales's confidence. After retaking Pachuca, routing and dispersing the Villistas under Fierro, Gonzales returned. A part of his command under General Lechuga reoccupied Mexico City last night, as stated. Supplies of food are being hurried to the capital from various directions. There is great rejoicing in Mexico City.

A later cablegram from Señor Acuña told of the execution, by order of General Gonzales, of one officer and three enlisted men for violation of an order to respect persons and property in Mexico City. This message read:

General Gonzales court-martialed and shot a Lieutenant, a Corporal, and two privates for violation of order enforcing respect to persons and property. Reports alleged to have been sent by Consul General Canada at Vera Cruz, in which it was stated that a hundred Americans complained of robbery and destruction of property without foundation. Supplies are now being shipped to Obregon.

ZAPATA BROKE OUR SEALS.

Mexican Chief Personally Destroyed Diplomatic Correspondence.

The charges against Mr. Hudson have not been set forth, and it is not known what fate awaits him.

Allan Mallory, an American, has been assaulted by followers of Zapata while carrying diplomatic correspondence. At the time of this attack Mr. Mallory was carrying an American flag, which was torn and insulted by his Mexican assailants.

Zapata personally destroyed the correspondence taken from Mr. Mallory. He broke the legation seals, saying at the same time that the Americans were fools.

The Brazilian Minister made an effort to obtain the release of Mr. Hudson, but he was openly flouted.

Governmental control is lacking in Mexico City and terror prevails. Swiss and Spanish citizens have been removed in automobiles and ordered executed. The resident foreigners are very greatly alarmed. Zapata is quoted as having said that he intended to kill the local Spaniards.

The foreigners feel that their position is particularly precarious for the reason that they are unable to appeal to any authority. The Governor of the Federal district treats them with contempt.

The food situation in Mexico City is desperate. Starvation is abroad, and the people are eating cats and dogs. Even some of the foreign residents are starving.

Certain Mexicans are appealing to the Brazilian Minister for intervention by the United States.

Bands composed of followers of Zapata and Villa are extending their control throughout the interior of the republic, and almost all of Central Mexico is today virtually without any constituted Government. The followers of General Carranza are fleeing toward the coast cities.

Mallory Courier for All Legations.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Allan Mallory is an American resident of Mexico City who has been engaged during the last few weeks in carrying diplomatic correspondence for all the legations over the break in the railroad between Mexico City and Vera Cruz.

The State Department has received a report of the Zapata attack upon Mallory and the American flag, but has nothing to show whether the correspondence he carried was from the American Embassy or some of the other foreign missions.

Communication with the capital has been so completely interrupted that the department has been unable to get much first-hand information. The department has also interested itself in the case of Paul Hudson.

The report that foreigners are beginning to have fears only increases the anxiety of officials here over the situation, which they have been hoping hourly would be relieved by the recapture of the Mexican capital by Carranza.

Herald Manager Expected Arrest.

LINCOLN, Neb., July 31.—James H. Bell, formerly of this city, manager of The Mexican Herald, the staff of which was reported under arrest and threatened with court-martial in Mexico City, had been expecting arrest for some time, according to his father, James S. Bell, of Franklin, Neb.

Word received from the Nebraska man last month stated that he was safe with his wife and infant child, but he expected the paper to be closed by the Zapatistas and that the staff probably would be arrested owing to the feeling against Americans.

TOPEKA, Kan., July 31.—Paul Hudson, publisher of The Herald at Mexico City, is a former Kansas newspaper man. He is the son of the late Major J. K. Hudson, founder of The Topeka Daily Captain, and has been interested in newspaper work in the Mexican capital for fifteen years.

During the early troubles in Mexico Mr. Hudson had much difficulty in issuing his paper, various factions occupying the city having threatened him with violence if he persisted. Several times he was obliged to throw copies of the paper from the roof of his building to insure its circulation.

BRYAN SEEKS NO OFFICE

But Says He Intends to Remain in Office the Rest of His Life.

Special to The New York Times.

PORTLAND, Ore., July 31.—In the course of an interview here today William J. Bryan said: "I have no political expectations whatever, and no plans looking to the holding of office in the future. I shall remain in politics the rest of my life. A Democrat has reason to expect a Democratic victory in 1916. President Wilson should be given credit for dealing with the Mexican, Japanese, and European questions so as to avoid war.

"The Republicans have no prospects; they simply have possibilities, and these depend largely on Mr. Roosevelt. There is no hope for either Republican faction if Roosevelt maintains the Progressive-Republican organization; if Roosevelt returns to the regular Republican Party he will strengthen the chance of the standpats. The Taft branch is unrepentant and boastful of standpatism.

"Peace at any price is a cheap epithet used by those who desire war at any cost and who, not being able to defend their own policy, take refuge in misrepresentations."

Picture Sermons for Hot Weather.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., July 31.—Announcement was made today by Watchung Avenue Congregational Church that for the rest of the hot weather stereopticon sermons will be substituted for the spoken ones. The auditorium of the church will be darkened and the subjects will be portrayed on the screen. The silent sermons will begin at tomorrow morning's service, when the subject will be "Child Life of the World."

EASTLAND ATTACKS ROUSE REDFIELD

His Motives Prejudged by Hostile Press and Public, Secretary Asserts at Hearing.

WIDER INQUIRY DEMANDED

Specific Charges Must First Be Filed, Secretary Retorts—Federal Court Investigation Now Supreme.

CHICAGO, July 31.—With one week elapsed since the steamer Eastland sank at her wharf with 2,500 excursionists on board, investigation to determine the blame for the accident tonight had simmered down in effect to a Federal Grand Jury inquiry, although a County Grand Jury continued to hear testimony, and Secretary Redfield of the Department of Commerce went ahead with the steamboat inspection examination required by law. Federal Judge Landis forbade the examination by others of witnesses desired for the Federal Grand Jury. The Feedral Court has taken possession of the ship and all the documentary evidence.

Secretary Redfield today took notice of adverse criticism of his inquiry and in a speech at the hearing said he was profoundly pained by the attacks made on him before he had time to delve into the case. He offered to make any sort of investigation anyone could suggest provided charges were properly filed.

Mr. Redfield's statement followed a demand made by Lieut. Gov. Barratt O'Hara, Acting Governor of Illinois, that the Federal inquiry be widened "to cover every activity of the United States steamboat inspection service during the last fifteen years."

Allen Lee Thurman, Solicitor of the Department of Commerce, replied in a heated speech, in which he said:

"It cannot be done; it is impossible—this request of the Lieutenant Governor's. The statute does not allow it."

At the close of the morning session Secretary Redfield adjourned the inquiry until 10 o'clock Monday morning and said that before that time a meeting would be held to consider ways and means for widening the investigation, as Mr. O'Hara had suggested.

After detailing the manner in which he came to be connected with the inquiry as a member of the Civilian Advisory Committee, and stating that he was acting as a representative of the labor interests at Secretary Redfield's request, Mr. O'Hara said:

"It may be that the highest monument that we can construct to the memory of the Eastland dead will consist of revised laws covering the United States steamboat inspection service. It took the deaths of hundreds of persons to render Chicago theatres safe, and it is my purpose in suggesting this new inquiry to do the same thing for lake boat passengers."

In his statement Secretary Redfield said:

Stung by Criticism.

"I am sorry I am hurt, and I am willing to admit it. I have been mistreated and prejudged by the Chicago press and by Chicago citizens. My record should have protected me, but it did not. My life is an open book—my thirty years of public life—and yet, when I come here to make an investigation, I am judged in advance, and, what is of more importance, the men whom I am trying to give a square deal in connection with this inquiry have not been given a chance. Men who are not familiar with the facts have condemned me and the inquiry I am making, almost before that inquiry had been begun. I have been prejudged by men who are hostile to me.

"Mr. Thurman, the Solicitor for my department, a man whose judgment in legal matters I am bound to follow, has told me that to widen this investigation as Mr. O'Hara asks would be beyond my power. If I were to conduct such an investigation in the manner he asks I would be obliged to foot the bill from my own pocket. I have already stretched the law to the breaking point in this inquiry by sending to Washington for expert witnesses, in an effort to bring out the truth and the whole of it. I cannot go further in that direction.

"Abuse and scorn me if you feel that you must, but in God's name spare the men to whom I am trying to the best of my ability to give a square deal, as my duty orders me to do."

Captain Frank A. Dority, commander of the East land from 1903 to 1906, called as a witness by Secretary Redfield, testified that in 1904 the Eastland careened while crossing the bar outside of South Haven, Mich.

"I consider the Eastland safe under all circumstances, if she has water in her ballast tanks and if it is properly distributed," said Captain Dority. "The water in the tanks shifts with the list of the vessel. In my opinion, water is the most dangerous form of ballast."

Appeal to President.

The request of the Chicago City Council for a special commission to be appointed by the President to investigate the Eastland disaster, was forwarded today to Washington with a personal letter from bMayor Thompson to President Wilson, urging compliance.

One body was recovered from the Eastland today, making the total known dead 838. The Western Electric Company reports 158 still missing.

Public funeral services, attended by moret han 1,000 persons, were held in Cicero today for Willie Novotny, 7 years old, one of the Eastland victims, whose body, No. 361, lay in a morgue for six days before it was identified.

The funeral procession was led by Mayor Thompson. Willie's father, mother, and sister, also drowned on the Eastland, were buried with him. An aged grandmother is the only survivor of the family.

CRITICISES WILSON AGAIN.

Weismann Says Policy Is Equivalent to Political Bankruptcy.

Henry Weismann of Brooklyn, State President of the German-American Alliance, said yesterday that in the reports of his speech at Utica last Monday, criticising the Administration for its attitude toward Germany, he was misquoted. He was quoted as saying, speaking of President Wilson, that "this political bankrupt has dared to assume powers which belong to Congress alone."

"As to the expression that the President was a political bankrupt," said Mr. Weismann, "it was not used in the manner reported. What I did say was that the policy of closing the door to further discussion with Germany was not in accord with the principles laid down by Mr. Bryan in the last two years advocating arbitration, and might be considered as equivalent to the political bankruptcy of the Administration.

"I would reiterate today that the President's policy has created a situation which may mean war if another American is killed, no matter whether huch American deliberately furnishes a shield for the transportation of munitions to Europe. And I would repeat that a foreign policy which on the one hand fails in enforcing our rights against one belligerent, England, while showing a mailed fist to the other and finally stopping negotiations and closing the door to further argument, compromise, or to possible arbitration, which through the inspiration of Mr. Bryan for two years had sustained the principles of arbitration, might be lodked upon as equivalent to political bankruptcy on the part of the Administration.

"In my speech at Utica I laid strong emphasis upon our rights as citizens, in face of a grave crisis, to speak and acquaint the President with our views and fears, with the fact that he is servant and not master and that all who love peace must speak before we permit the impression to prevail that we ratify a policy which makes for war.

"It seems that Germany is victorioul and can well do without us, and I am not at all certain that Germany may not prefer an open enemy to one that has been as unneutral as our country in this war, sending out the statement recently to reassure the people."

last evening in the rear yard of 809 West 11th Street, a short distance from his home, talking with a friend, when he toppled over suddenly. He also had complained of exhaustion because of his work in the oppressive heat. Dr. McElvare, of St. Vincent's Hospital, pronounced him dead.

Heat Drives Him to Suicide.

At his home in Codington Street, Raritan, N. J., Andrew Snyder, his mind unbalanced by suffering, sent a bullet from a thirty-eight calibre revolver into his brain yesterday afternoon. He had complained to his wife on several occasions during the past few days of the heat. He ended his life while standing in front of a looking glass.

Of those prostrated or injured James Barker is in the most serious condition. He had been unable to sleep on Friday night as a result of the heat, and early yesterday morning took some bedclothes and made a bed on the rear fire-escape of his apartment on the sixth floor of 230 East Sixty-seventh Street.

He tossed about in his sleep and the improvised bed tumbled through the well of the fire-escape to the rear courtyard, carrying Barker with it. He sustained internal injuries, fractures of both arms, and many contusions of the body. When Patrolman Bennett of the East Sixty-seventh Street Police Station found Barker he was unconscious. He was taken to Flower Hospital by Dr. Meyers in a serious condition.

There was a record-breaking crowd at Coney Island andother nearby resorts as a result of the intense heat. It was estimated that 150,000 went into the surf at Coney Island and Brighton Beach. The total crowd at the resorts was estimated close to 400,000. Of this great throng, it was said, fully 10,000 came prepared to spend the night on the beaches. Thousands were asleep on the beaches by 11 o'clock last night.

As a rule the incoming throng at the island slackens by 9 o'clock, but at late as 11 o'clock last night all of the cars going to the island were crowded to capacity. There was little disorder, however.

Municipal Baths Crowded.

From daybreak until night yesterday there was a long line waiting for the opportunity to use the municipal baths at the foot of West Fifth Street, and all of the private bathhouses were crowded. At one time there was a battle royal to get tickets at the municapl baths, and Mr. and Mrs. John Hensman of 1,664 Park Avenue were arrested and held under $200 bail by Magistrate Marsh. It was alleged that they had attempted to break into the line.

There was one drowning. Last night Thomas Walsh of 462 Fifty-third Street, Brooklyn, reported to the police of the Coney Island Station that his nephew, Patrick O'Neil, 26, a motorman, of 120 Hull Street, Brooklyn, was missing. He had gone bathing with O'Neil at the foot of West Thirty-seventh Street, he said, and after swimming about for some time his nephew said he was going to swim to a boat about 400 yards from the shore. Mr. Walsh did not see the young man again and his clothes were found two hours later at a bathhouse.

The Weather Bureau predicts showers for today, which it is expected will give at least some relief. Yesterday the temperature started at 75 degrees at 5:30 o'clock in the morning and climbed steadily until it reached the high-water mark of 92 at the afternoon.

It dropped off to 82 by 8 o'clock. The humidity started at 70 per cent. at 8 A. M. It dropped to 52 per cent. at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, but had jumped back to 72 per cent. at 8 P. M.

PORTO RICANS' PLEA.

Want Citizenship and a Liberal Home Rule Measure.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—In connection with the movement in Porto Rico for the granting of American citizenship to Porto Ricans, Governor Yager and several leading citizens of the island are expected to come to Washington in the Fall to press for the passage of bills improving the status of the dependency. It is said that the Governor and his assistants will go so far as to ask that American citizenship be given to the Porto Ricans and that a liberal home rule bill be passed.

Porto Ricans say that the lack of these measurds causes some practical inconvenience besides retarding the political growth of the island. For instance, the War Department has considered raising a militia regiment in the island, after receiving favorable reports on the feasibility of such a project from army officers there, but it was found that militia could be raised only in the States, organized territories and the District of Columbia. A special law may be necessary to authorize the regiment.

One Porto Rican, Luis Paul Esteves, holds a commission in the regular army after a nigh record at West Point. But for a time the question of his citizenship was held against him and it was doubtful whether he would be commissioned.

G. E. TURNURE'S EYE HURT.

George E. Turnure, banker and son-in-law of Charles Lanier, returned to his home, 115 East Thirty-sixth Street, yesterday afternoon from the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary. Thirteenth Street and Second Avenue, where an accident in the court of the Racquet and Tennis Club last Tuesday afternoon had sent him. There was fear that Mr. Turnure might lose the sight of his right eye, which had received a hard blow from a ball when Mr. Turnure was playing a practice game with a marker at the club.

That danger was past last night, and Mrs. Turnure said her husband would be as well as ever in a few days. He will go with Mrs. Turnure to Beaupre, their Summer place at Lenox, Mass., tomorrow. Mr. Turnurse is a fast tennis player and had entered in a tournament at the Lenox Club which begins tomorrow.

"I'm afaid my husband won't be able to take part in the tournament," Mrs. Turnure said, "though he'll probably be back at the game soon. We know for certain now that there will be no ill effects of his accident, but he ought to rest for a while.

"He returned home here after he was struck and then went to the infirmary, because he wanted Dr. John E. Weeks of 46 East Fifty-seventh Street, to treat him. Dr. Weeks did so, and he left the hospital today. I was in Lenox when Mr. Turnure was hurt, and of course I came on here at once. Now we'll go back together."

WAR GAME DECEIVES WOMEN

Rout Jersey Guards, Thinking Red Cross Dummy Was Killed.

Special to The New York Times.

FLORENCE, N. J., July 31. Too much realism last night in a sham battle of the New Jersey guardsmen near here made the women of the neighborhood believe one of th soldiers had actually been shot and killed. They took possession of the trenches, routing the militiamen and demanding an investigation.

hTe Third New eJrsey Infantry has been going through a war game for several days. Last night one of the manouvres included a red cross drill, in which one of the guardsmen was to play the part of a wounded soldier, to undergo first aid on the field and finally be carried away in an open ambulance. This was observed by the women.

Protesting to the Colonel of the regiment that a man had been killed and spirited away, the women were informed that the roll call after the sham engagement had shown no one missing. They were skeptical and the roll was called again with the same result. They reluctantly accepted the assertion of the commandant that it was all play war, and that every mother's son of his command was still alive and unwounded.

SMALL BOY DROWNS SWIMMING IN PARK

OTHER BATHERS LOSE LIVES

A crowd of small boys, several of them wearing little of their usual clothing, raced through Central Park from the lake opposite the West Seventy-second Street entrance late yesterday afternoon, shouting for help. Automobiles stopped in the roadway, people on the paths gathered round, and several policemen came up from as many directions.

The boys, excited and frightened, explained that several of their number—those still not fully dressed—had been swimming in the lake and with them had been Philip Coni, seven years old, of 354 Tenth Avenue. They had had water fights, had ducked one another and were seeking new avenues for their energies when young Coni discovered a rock under the surface of the lake and suggested that they try to swim around it.

Coni was the first to make the attempt, and while the others watched he dived into the lake. But he did not come up. The boys waited until they realized that something must be wrong, and then the swimmers donned some clothes and, with the others, raced off for help.

The policemen got a rowboat and, with the boys directing them from the shore, rowed about for half an hour, poking in the mud of the lake bottom with an oar, but they didn't find the body.

They were still searching when Isidor Spiegel, 12 years old of 245 East Eighty-third Street came along. Isidor is a Boy Scout. He doffed his clothing and dived into the lake. Presently he rose and announced he had found young Coni caught fast under the rock but had not been stdong enough to drag him out.

Earle Christie, who is 21 years old, and lives at 452 West 164th Street, had stopped on the march, and hearing Spiegel's excited account of his find, took off most of his clothes and dived into the water where young Spiegel directed him. He dislodged the body and brought the boy to the surface.

There was a physician in the crowd that had gathered and he worked over the boy until an ambulance surgeon arrived from Flower Hospital, but he was past resuscitation.

BOY SAVES DROWNING GIRLS.

Drags One Into Boat, Extends Oar to Another, Then Gets Pulmotor.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., July 31.—Constantine Harper, 11 years old, son of John Harper of Lakeside Park, saved the Misses Sarah and Mary Billingham from drowning in the lake today. The young women, who are from Kearney, went in the lake to bathe and Mary slipped inot a deep hole. As she arose she screamed for help and her sister went to her rescue. The arms of the girls became entwined and both sank.

Young Harper manned a boat and went to their ald. He succeeded in getting Mary into the boat, and then extended an oar to Sarah. He landed them on shore and sent a messenger for the pulmotor of the Trenton Fire Department, which restored them.

Swimmer, Cramped, Drowns.

PASSAIC, N. J., July 31.—Henry Misinlewsky, 17 years old, of 17 Van Winkle Avenue, Clifton, was drowned late this afternoon while swimming in Nash's Pond, near Lexington Avenue. The young man went in bathing with several companions and swam out from shore. Suddenly he shouted for help, and before his boy friends could reach him he threw up his hands and sank. It is believed he was seized with cramps. The body was recovered.

Boy Dives and Fails to Rise.

Ernest Mauro, 15 years old, of Whitestone Landing, L. I., was drowned in the East River, off Bayside Avenue, that place, yesterday afternoon. The boy dived from the end of a pier and his head is supposed to have struck the bottom. The body did not rise and was recovered by divers.

BUSINESS REFUSE BARRED.

Court Decision Prevents City from Removing It Free.

Commissioner John T. Fetherston of the Department of Street Cleaning announced yesterday that the department will discontinue the work of removing and disposing of waste materials from department stores, factories, office buildings, and all other business establishments used exclusively for business purposes. This means that the commercial interests of the city will have to pay approximately $200,000 a year to replace the service which the city has provided free for a quarter of a century.

This action by the Commissioner, which has been foreseen for some time, was due to the decision of Justice Edward G. Whittaker of the Supreme Court in an action brought by Dailey & Ivins contractors for the removal of city wastes, restraining the Street Cleaning Department from depositing upon the boats of the contractors commercial refuse of any description. The order, which was served yesterday on Commissioner Fetherston, specifically refers to "material which is collected from department stores, factories, business establishments and buildings no portion of which are used as dwellings or residences by other than caretakers, janitors, or watchmen in the employ of those conducting the business, in the Borough of Manhattan." The decision applies to and effects all the boroughs.

For twenty years the same contractors have been removing these waste materials collected by the Department of Street Cleaning and by private vehicles operating under permits issued by the department. Under the contract in force since Jan. 1, 1914, and which expires on Jan. 1, 1917, Dailey & Ivins are obligated to dispose only of "genuine household rubbish."

In a decision by the Appellate Division, 1903, the contention of the then Commissioner Woodbury that the department was not required to collect and dispose of trade waste was upheld.

There are eighteen refuse dumping places in the city, controlled by private contractors. To these private contractors the producers of trade waste will have to look for relief from the condition produced by this order, as the collections must be made by private carts, the Department of Street Cleaning having no place at which to dispose of such material. The order becomes effective by Aug. 20. Commissioner Fetherston says:

"The present situation is the natural result of the growth of the manufacturing and business of the city. In most of the cities of the world the responsibility for the collection and disposal of trade waste rests upon those whose activities create it."

It is possible that an arrangement may be made by the city to provide service at a uniform charge. Realizing from the decision of 1903, that the department must prepare to meet this situation Commissioner Fetherston submitted to the Legislature last Winter a bill amending the charter so as to permit the collection of commercial refuse by his department. The bill, which was enacted and is now a part of the City Charter, is permissive in effect.

WHITE MOUNTAINS TOURISTS

Many Motor Parties Arrive at Jefferson—A Ball in Bethlehem.

Special to The New York Times.

JEFFERSON, N. H., July 31.—Jefferson was the mecca for motor parties today, and many came from other resorts for luncheon. A putting match on the west lawn of the Waumbek brought out the Summer colony. Mrs. Boliman and Miss Blair were hostesses, and the prize was won by John W. Benning.

Tea was served afterward and the Waumbek quartet furnished music. Many golfers have arrived at the Waumbek this week, and the regular Saturday handicap turnaments began today, to continue through August.

Captain Gilbert P. Cotton, U. S. A., retired; Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. Schumacher, Mrs. Joseph Palmer Knapp, T. C. Glen Coats, D. A. Morrice, and Mr. and Mrs. H. Q. Trowbridge were among those entertaining in the cave grill and forest de danse at the Mount Washington Hotel this evening. Frank Dodge and party and Mr. and Mrs. Cabot J. Morse and party motored from Whitefield and Jefferson for the supper dance.

A ball at the Sinclair at Bethlehem brought out the cottage colony, many of whom had played in the Saturday handicap at the Bethlehem Country Club. Col. and Mrs. R. A. R. A. Swigert entertained at dinner at Sinclair Lodge for Stuyvesant Leroy and other guests. Among those at the ball were Mrs. Ruel Poore and Miss Helen Poore, Mr. and Mrs. W. Murray Sayer and Miss Helen Sayer, Frank and Charles English, Harry Waldron, Karl Abbott, Mrs. James Abbe, Miss Marion Abbe, Mrs. L. M. Robertson and the Misses Abbe.

The Maplewood colony enjoyed an informal ball in the music room this evening. Many motored down for the baseball game at Bethlehem, and others motored over to Bretton Woods for the tea-dance at the Mount Washington.

Mrs. W. T. Phillips gave a motor party to Dixville Notch for Mrs. Emily Selinger and Mrs. A. Livingston Fox. Miss Beulah Brown of New York has joined friends at the Inn.

Among the arrivals at the Waumbek today were Rush C. Hawkins, New York; Mr. and Mrs. E. Hunt Allen, P. S. Craig, Vicksburg, Miss.; Hans Reincke, New York; C. A. Sherman, Mrs. Sherman, Miss Lula Sherman, Miss A. Smith, General Hawkins, F. P. Howe, New York; Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Griffith, New York.

OUR STATE GUARD READY.

FISHKILL PLAINS, N. Y., July 31.—The last sham battle between the two armies of the Second Brigade of the National Guard today resulted in a victory for the Blue Army. Tonight the 4,500 guardsmen were breaking camp preparatory to their return home tomorrow.

General O'Ryan, the Commanding Officer, expressed satisfaction as to the efficiency and general conduct of the officers and men. If called to the field for immediate service they would be ready, he said.

WIFE FLITS IN AUTO, SUES FOR A DIVORCE

Says Charles De Lukacsevics Smashed Furniture and Called Her Names.

ENRAGED BY A MOTH HOLE

Engineer and Inventor Also Flew Into Rage Over a Drop of Water, It Is Alleged.

A petition for a limited divorce was filed yesterday in the New Jersey Court of Chancery in Newark by Irving W. Teeple of Newark in behalf of Mrs. Adelaide L. De Lukacsvics by way of rejoinder to notices published by her husband, Charles De Lukacsevics, a mechanical engineer and inventor, that he would not be responsible for any debts which his wife might contract.

Mrs. Lukassevics on Wednesday drove away from her home, 26 Oak Crest Place, Nutley, in a seven-passenger automobile, one of three or four kept by her husband, and the next day he vainly besought Recorder James M. Post to issue a warrant for her arrest.

The couple were married on Dec. 9, 1907, and, according to the petition, the young wife almost from the beginning of her married life "suffered from the violent and ill-governed temper of her husband, especially when he was under the influence of liquor, in the use of which he habitually indulged."

One time in 1909, the petition stated, the defendant flew into a rage because a drop of water had fallen upon his drawing board, and he smashed a bottle of India ink against the wall, broke a vase, and, after "calling the petitioner all sorts of vile names," left the house.

On another occasion he became enraged on discovering a moth hole in a coat which the petitioner had mended, she alleged, and again he called her names and even spat in her face.

Following a violent outbreak on the defendant's part when the couple were living at Dunton, L. I., the petitioner, it was alleged, hastened to Jamaica to swear out a warrant for his arrest, and on her return she found that in her absence he had smashed glasses, mirrors, pictures, a china closet and a book case, and had then driven away in his limousine, taking three fine Oriental rugs with him.

As a result of this incident Mrs. De Lukasevics sued for separation in the New York Supreme Court and got an order for alimony and the custody of her three children, born in 1908, 1909, and 1910, pending final hearing.

A chance meeting in the home of friends resulted in a reconciliation, following which in May, 1911, the couple moved to Nutley, where Mr. De Lukacsevics bought a $20,000 house.

The good behavior promised by Mr. De Lubacsevics, the petition stated, did not last long. Page after page is given over to a recital of incidents of an unpleasant character, the presence in the house of a governess and two maids seemingly having no deterrent effect when fits of temper are alleged to have seied the defendant.

REPORTS ITALIAN CHECKS.

Vienna Says Infantry Has Ceased Attacks Before Gorizia.

VIENNA, July 31, (via London.)—The following official report of the operations on the Italian front was given out today:

The Italian infantry attacks ino the District of Gorizia yesterday were completely suspended. The enemy's artillery continued to fire large quantities of ammunition.

In the Carinthian frontier District engagements occurred. Three Italian battalions, after artillery preparation, attacked our troops. On Pal Piccolo the enemy succeeded in penetrating our advance trenches, but finally was completely repulsed after hard fighting. An Italian attack near Lodinut Pass, north of Poulard also was repulsed in a hand grenade engagement.

On the frontier ridge south of Malborghetto, one of our advance detachments evacuated observation posts in the face of superior enemy forces.

In the Tyrol Italian artillery attacks were unsuccessful on the plateaus of Folgaria and Lavaronne. An attack by feeble hostile forces in the Monte Cristallo district was sanguinarily repulsed.

W. M. McDONALD IN TOMBS.

Bureau of Municipal Research Cashier Accused of $600 Theft.

On a charge of stealing $600 from the offices of the Bureau of Municipal Research, William M. McDonald, 26 years old, was brought to New York yesterday and locked in the Tombs following his arrest Friday at the home of her parents, 838 Windsor Avenue, Chicago, by Detective Whalen of the First Branch Detective Bureau of this city.

McDonald was a bookkeeper and cashier in the offices of the Bureau of Municipal Research. The complainant was Frederick W. Lindars of 361 Broadway, a member of the bureau. A bench warrant for McDonald's arrest was issued after he disappeared. The charge is grand larceny in the second degree.

BRITON BUYING BEEF BUYS WISDOM, TOO

Pays $5 to Find Out Which Is the Long Side of a Steer and Believes the Yarn.

RIDES A 'ROTTEN BOUNDER'

Finds Texas Company Has Some Odd Ways Not Common in English Saddle Horses.

An English beef buyer, who returned from the West yesterday, was telling his friends at a hotel last night of the great success he had met with and of several odd things that happened to him out in the cow country.

"I had awfully good luck," he said, "and I am sure that they will be very pleased at home. You know, the roast beef of old England has come mainly from the States for many years, and I was told to go to Chicago, Omaha, and Kansas City and see what they had to offer before I made a contract.

"You know at home I am a bit of a cattle raiser myself. I have a herd of Alderneys, Jerseys, and Shorthorns, and I always judge the cattle class at the county fairs. It was on account of this that I was sent, I suppose.

"When I reached Chicago, I looked about a bit and decided to go on to Kansas City before I made any contracts. In fact, one of those charming meat men told me I had better go to his firm there, and he wired them to expect me.

"When I reached Kansas City after a frightfully hot ride on the railway they met me at the station and took me to their club. They do things awfully well out there, and I was very much surprised, I assure you. The next morning we went down to the cowpens, where the slaughter houses are. I think they called them the stock yards. I saw thousands of very good looking nondescript cattle waiting to be slaughtered, and they took me through the plant and I saw the whole process from the very beginning.

"You know, they have a very interesting way of doing things. There are long runways leading from the pens to the places where they knock the steer on the head. Here I learned a most extraordinary thing. It seems that the cattle will not go up these runways of their own accord, and it is necessary to resort to a subterfuge to get them to do so. There are several cows that belong to the place that are kept there for this purpose. When they are ready to begin the killing these are let into the pens and very soon they work over to the runways and then you are surprised to see them start up the runways. Cattle will always follow a leader, and the other unsophisticated beasts follow them. Once they are started, the leaders are sent back to their stalls to wait until they are wanted again. I fancy that those deceitful cows must be awful liars.

"I asked one of the meat men what would happen if one of these cows were killed by mistake. He said that they'd scalp the man who did it, and he said it so fiercely that I really believed he meant it.

"When I began to look over the beef in the cooling rooms I had what I considered one of the best tips I have ever had. I was asking questions and looking about a bit, when one of the men who work in the place came up to me and said in a low tone: 'Buy the downhill sides—they're the best beef.' I had not the faintest idea what he meant, and I asked him about it. He told me to meet him outside and he would tell me.

"Shortly after, when I got out to where the temperature was normal, the fellow came along and I repeated my question. He seemed much amazed that I did not know what he meant, and after a little persuasion he told me. By persuasion I mean that I gave him a five-dollar note.

"This was the meaning of his advice: 'Lots of these cows come from the hilly or mountainous country,' he said, 'and they are the finest we get here. They are raised in the hills and live there all their lives, and their ancestors have lived there also. The result is that they get in the habit of walking on the steep hill sides when after their provender and owing to their hereditary traits always walk in the same direction, usually to the left. The result is that the outside, or down-hill, legs grow to be longer than the others, so that they can walk more easily. Their down-hill sides, which includes the portion of their bodies from the hoofs to the backbone, become better developed than the inside and are larger and better beef.'

"I must say that I was amazed at his story, and when I expressed a mild disbelief he took me back into the cooling rooms and showed me that the sides hanging in one-half of the place were larger and better than the others. To see was to believe, and I was very glad to tip him liberally for his information.

"So when I made some contracts that afternoon I specified that all the beef I bought must be down-hill sides. The manager seemed startled at my intimate knowledge of the game, but good-naturedly inserted the proviso I asked for in the contract.

"I had another peculiar but rather humiliating experience in El Paso. I wanted to go riding one morning and thought it would be very American to go to the livery and get my own horse. You know they have a peculiar idea of things out there, and every one does things for himself.

"When I reached the livery I asked the person in charge if he had any riding horses. He seemed interested in my Bedford cord riding breeches and puttees, but respectfully enough admitted that he had only one left. I said it would probably do. He asked me if I had ridden very much, and I told him that I had had many a go at the hounds, and, in fact, had been a M. F. H.

"'I don't know about that M. F. H. business,' he said, 'but I want to tell you that this is no lady's pony.' I reassured him that I would not hurt the horse, and he brought him out. He was a bit wiry, but very sluggish sort of an animal, and he had one of those cowmen's saddles on him. I asked if I might not have an English saddle, and the liveryman said in a very peculiar way: 'We ain't got any—we don't keep postage stamps here.' That did not seem a very apropos answer, but he seemed a bit surly, so I got on the horse and rode away.

"We got along famously for a short time and then something happened. I don't know what it was, but the horse seemed to suddenly go mad. He bunched his body and jumped straight up in the air and did this a number of times. It was most awful and then he suddenly stood first on his hind legs and then on his front. It was very discommoding and I felt rotten bad.

"Finally he commenced jumping up and down again, and, to cap the climax, when he got in the air, he suddenly revolved and I went off on my head. When I recovered I saw him going down the road in the direction of the stable.

"When I reached the stable I was feeling very much annoyed. The liveryman came out and after looking at my riding breeches again, he asked in a drawling way, 'Why, what's the matter, mister?'

"And I told him! I said, 'Your horse is a rotten bounder! That's what he is!' Why, he bounded and bounded and I couldn't remain.'"

BADEN-BADEN NOW DULLEST OF SPAS

A LONE AMERICAN ABOUT

From a Staff Correspondent.

BADEN-BADEN, June 10.—It has been often said that in Berlin you would hardly suspect there was a world war going on, and this is quite true. For the visible results of war you have to visit the smaller towns and travel through the country. Or go to Baden-Baden. An hour at this famous spa will give you a more intense realization of the pity of war than watching the real fighting at the front. There is evidence that hotel proprietors and boarding house keepers, bathing institutions, and high-priced specialists may not be able to keep the wolf from the back door, at least this season.

As you step from the train and pass through the station into the main street you get your first sensation that something is wrong somewhere, for you are not mobbed by the competing emissaries of a score of hotels who used to wrest your suitcase out of your helpless hand and rush you toward the winning hotel stage. A few of the old ramshackle stages still back up to the station around train time, but rather from habit than hope. Most of the arriving travelers take the surface car, or walk. They are mostly soldiers returning home from the front on leave, and relatives of the many officers convalescing here.

You hang around for ten minutes waiting for a taxicab until it occurs to you that you might have to wait till the end of the war. You will save time by hiring a hack. About the time that you drive past the Kurhaus, with its many-acred garden, you feel a sickening sensation of deadness that you won't get from viewing a thousand dead in the west. For you rather expected to see battlefields littered with dead men, but a Baden-Baden without its cosmopolitan crowd of cure seekers, and particularly without a high percentage of Americans, was unthinkable. I heard that there was one lone American here taking the cure, though the manager of the Stephani Hotel hopefully told me he was expecting several American families who were planning to come here from Switzerland.

In the Kur gardens, a skeleton band was discoursing music to an imaginary audience. Perhaps a score of chairs were taken. The fashionable hotels had an empty look—like a Summer resort in Winter. Many of the less fashionable were full. The Red Cross flag flying from the roofs, and the field gray figures thronging out at the windows indicated that these hostelries were being used for hospital purposes.

The fashionable promenade, that magnificent broad avenue, now reminded you of the metaphorical straight and narrow way that so few follow. Gone was the glittering procession of smart equipages, the open-air exhibition of jewels and Paris fashions, the prancing cavalier, and smart equestrienne, the world of men and women who come to see and be seen.

Along the footpaths you saw occasional old ladies hobbling along, some with the aid of canes, others with nurses—habitual German Kur guests. But the pedestrians mostly wore field gray—officers whose names had been featured in the casualty lists and who were lucky to be alive to tell about it. All wore the Iron Cross, and not a few the coveted first class, pinned to the breast, together with other orders and medals of bravery. But the favorite decoration of these convalescing heroes seemed to be the "war bride," who had come on to Baden-Baden to enjoy a belated honeymoon.

I drove through streets of still deserted villas with all blinds up. My cabby who had become talkatively friendly after I had let him get a glimpse of real money, pointed out a handsome white marble villa topped by a dome wherein he said was a private astronomical observatory. Villa and telescope, he added, belonged to a fabulously rich Russian, who came every season to Baden-Baden for a two weeks' stand only, bringing in his train an astounding collection of guests, men and women. After two weeks he would disappear as mysteriously and suddenly as he had arrived, and wouldn't be seen again till next season. But the Russian spender is not expected in Baden-Baden this season. There are still many little touches of irony here; signs that have not yet been torn down or repainted, and that indicate that the English were particularly numerous Kur guests and eagerly catered to.

A more extended excursion about the health-bringing, evergreen-clad hills disclosed always the same sentimental feature to the woodscape—wherever there was a rustic bench there you would see a "war bride" and a wounded officer. Of rather greater interest than these wartime idyls to the callous correspondent was the sound of sturdy male voices waking the sleeping echoes with patriotic songs. At a turn in the road I passed them—a score of convalescent soldiers, marching four abreast, commanded by a pretty Red Cross nurse. All were well on the road to recovery and the front, and even those who still limped slightly with the aid of canes bravely tried to do the goose-step past their wounded officers. It is this magnificent, unbreakable spirit that is the hope of Germany. It was "Deutschland, Deutschland, Ueber Alles," "Die Wacht am Rhine," and plaintive folksongs of home, mingled with choruses of victory, every step of the way. And other tramping squads of convalescents on other roads I passed similarly making the woods ring with musical patriotism, training hard for their next battle in east or west.

That American agricultural machinery is helping Germany win her fight against the unseen enemy, starvation, was about the most interesting thing noted on the long rail trip from Berlin to Baden-Baden. Particularly at this end of the line, at nearly every small way station, I saw, newly unloaded, brand-new reapers and other agricultural implements, many of them painted with the well-known trade name of a certain trust. Germany's hopes of a bumper wheat and rye harvest are likely to be disappointed, however, owing to the prolonged abnormal drought all through the Spring months. The grain looked small-eared and prematurely yellowing. However, the smaller yield per acre probably will be more than made up by the greater acreage sown. Even the railroad embankments were under cultivation. As typical of this curious German determination not to be starved out, or their useful domestic animals, either, I may mention that on the famous Baden-Baden golf links aged peasants, men and women, were cutting hay and getting in what looked like a very nice harvest of the long green where once putting greens were.

LEADING MEXICANS ROBBED BY ZAPATA

PRESIDENT LOSES HIS AUTO

And Chief of Police Refuses to Give It Up—Character of a Dangerous Don Quixote.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, July 2.—The Confiscation Office has been temporarily closed owing to a conflict of jurisdiction between the Department of the Interior and the Finance Department, the latter claiming that the question of confiscations comes exclusively within its province.

Luis Zubiria y Campa, Minister of Finance, was credited with moderation, given revolutionary standards, and THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent sought an interview with him on the subject of confiscations, pointing out to him in the first place that measures of this nature are prohibited by the Constitution of the republic.

Señor Zubiria answered:

"It is true that the confiscation of property is expressly prohibited by Article XXII. of the Constitution, but, as the guarantee in question is one that does not involve human life, it may be suspended in accordance with the Constitution itself. Therefore, I consider that at times when public necessity demands, owing to the urgency of the circumstances, Governments have to act with great firmness, and at such moments the nation has the right to be excessively severe with its enemies, depriving them of the means that may be used to provoke new disturbances or foment those already existing. In this light the confiscation of property is not merely an unusual penalty, but a powerful expedient of war, whereby the enemy is weakened.

"Furthermore, I hold that the so-called confiscations should not be considered as such, but rather as provisional seizures or attachments effected with a political object in view, viz., that the enemies of the revolution shall not dispose of their property, thus eluding their responsibilities to the nation, due either to positive misdemeanors or more or less fraudulent handling of public funds."

On the other hand, this view of Señor Zubiria y Campa is combated by those who point to the specially emphatic wording of Article 22 of the Constitution, which says that the confiscation of property is "forever prohibited," indicating that the framers of the Constitution were unwilling to consider any circumstances in which the prohibition should be set aside. It is also pointed out that the Constitution can only be suspended with certain formalities, which have not been complied with in the present circumstances.

Among those whose properties have been confiscated are José Yves Limantour, Emilio Rabasa, who was one of the delegates for Huerta at the Niagara Falls conference; Rosendo Pineda, deceased; General Enrique Mondragon, Francisco Bulnes, Jorge Huerta, Luis Elguero, also a Niagara Falls delegate; Francisco Escudero y Verdugo, Querido Moheno, Francisco de la Barra, Provisional President, before Madero came in; José de Regoyos, Gonzalo Garita, Rafael Reyes Spindola, former editor of El Imparcial; Manuel Vidaurrazaga, Eduardo Tamariz, Victoriano Huerta, Joaquin D. Casasus, Enrique C. Creel, General Samuel Garcia Cuellar, Rodolfo Reyes, Pablo Macedo, and Porfirio Diaz, Jr.

The incident of Lagos Chazaro's automobile is thought to indicate that the revolutionists, not content with robbing the public, have begun to rob one another. The provisional Executive missed his automobile and some days after found in the large quadrangle of the National Palace, and was told that it belonged to General Lauro Guerra, Chief of Police. General Guerra, when interviewed by Lagos Chazaro in the quadrangle, not only refused to give up the machine, but threatened the Provisional President with a pistol in the presence of the amazed spectators, at the same time saying that he did not care a straw for the President of the republic.

Lagos Chazaro, deeply mortified, had to appeal to the comandante militar, General Amador Salazar, who, when the executive entered his office, had his huge sombrero on, but did not take it off, or even rise to receive his caller.

Such is the mortifying situation of any one undertaking the duties of Executive at the present moment. Salazar promised to look into the matter, but so far Lagos Chazaro has not recovered his automobile.

Federico Cervantes, a Northern delegate representing General Felipe Angeles, said in the debate on the personnel of the Committee of Public Safety, that Soto y Gama's "mentality and spirit of justice are very deficient," and, therefore, he opposed his appointment as Chairman of the committee. It is thought that Cervantes put the matter mildly, for the increasing violence of Soto y Gama's utterances causes his election to that post (for the convention confirmed the nomination) to be viewed with serious concern. Such was his declaration that, as chief of the Committee of Public Safety, he would endeavor to have Dr. Mora y del Rio, Archbishop of Mexico, extradited so that he might be hanged in public.

Soto y Gama was asked whether he had anything against Dr. Mora, other than the fact of his being Archbishop, and he answered that the Archbishop had supplied Huerta with money. Here, Soto y Gama was given the lie direct by Delegate Zepeda, but this has become so common an occurrence in the debates as to excite no attention whatever.

It is feared that the creation of the Committee of Public Safety will lead to the imprisonment, if not worse, of numerous innocent persons, arbitrarily classed as "enemies of the revolution."

Tall, lean, high-featured, Soto y Gama, though a younger man, suggests the physical characteristics of Don Quixote, and it is thought that, in his own particular line, he shares the infirmity of Don Quixote. He tilts at windmills and mistakes flocks of harmless sheep for hostile bands. Though evidently of Spanish descent, without any trace of the Indian, he is constantly denouncing with great bitterness the record of the Spaniard in Mexico, and proclaims himself the champion of the native race. This peculiarity of some of the descendants of the old Spaniards was noticed by Prescott in his "Conquest."

While the eccentricities of such men as Soto y Gama might in other circumstances be laughable, they are regarded as apt to be dangerous in present conditions, when backed by irresponsible power.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Warm weather continued during Saturday in the East and South, except New England, while local thundershowers brought relief from high temperature in the Ohio and middle Mississippi Valleys.

The weather is cool along the North border and in Western districts, readings being 20 degrees or more below normal in the Northern Rocky Mountain regionn.

Pressure has begun to increase over the Great Lakes, so it is probable that an outflow of air from this region will overspread the heated area in the Middle Atlantic States Sunday night or Monday.

Widely scattered showers have fallen during the last twenty-four hours in New England, the Ohio Valley, the south portion of the Lake region, the Plains States, and the Rocky Mountain region.

Indications are that the weather will be overcast, with probably local showers Sunday and fair Monday, in New England, the Middle Atlantic States, and the Ohio Valley. In the Lake region the weather will be fair, while in the South Atlantic and East Gulf States it will be partly overcast, with probably local thunder showers Sunday and Monday.

FORECASTS TODAY AND MONDAY.

Eastern New York—Cloudy Sunday; local showers south portion. Monday, fair and cooler.

Southern New England — Cloudy Sunday. Monday, fair.

Northern New England—Partly cloudy Sunday and Monday.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

8 A. M....68	76	4 P. M....69	92
6 A. M....67	73	6 P. M....68	86
9 A. M....65	80	9 P. M....66	80
12 M.....68	86	11 P. M....63	79

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 84; for the corresponding date last year it was 64; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 74.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 77; at 8 P. M. it was 82. Maximum temperature, 92 degrees at 4 P. M.; minimum, 75 degrees at 5:30 A. M. Humidity, 79 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 72 per cent. at 8 P. M.

The barometer at 8 A. M. yesterday registered 29.92 inches; at 8 P. M. it stood at 29.94 inches.

WANT PEACE WITH AMERICA.

Miss Shalliday Says Germans Take Controversy Very Seriously.

Miss Margaret Jane Shalliday, a Chattanooga (Tenn.) girl who has been in Germany continuously for three years, studying singing, arrived in New York a few days ago via Sweden, after leaving Berlin on July 1. Since the start of the war she had been in Berlin, and has had an excellent opportunity, through her residence with a German family and her ability as a student to see various phases of the city's activities, to acquaint herself with German sentiment.

"If Americans have any idea that in Berlin the controversy with this country is not being taken very seriously," she said, "they are entirely wrong. I cannot speak for the official circles, but I know that the mass of the population of Berlin is very gravely concerned over the question of the future relations of Germany and the United States.

"The German people do not want war with us. Perhaps you do not realize over here what is one of the considerations that goes deepest home in this matter. It is this: through the United States Embassy in Berlin, which is handling the diplomatic matters for Germany in belligerent countries, the people receive all their news of relatives and friends who are wounded or prisoners abroad. When they are alarmed over the disappearance of some loved one, it is Ambassador Gerard to whom they appeal, and his staff that gets the trace of the missing one. Incidentally I might say that Ambassador Gerard is very popular over there and seems to have the respect and confidence of Germans of all circles.

"The loss of this service would be a severe deprivation to the Germans, and they realize it. The end of diplomatic relations between Germany and the United States, with the withdrawal of the American Embassy staff, would be looked on as a calamity. I have heard many persons say this, and I know it is looked on by the people as one of the severest consequences that could follow a rupture between the two countries.

"I understand reports have reached the United States that honors were publicly conferred on the commander of the submarine that sank the Lusitania. This is not true. The public does not know what submarine did it, nor what commander. There is a misunderstanding here about the feeling in Germany over the Lusitania. I heard on every hand expressions of regret at the loss of life.

"Berlin is very nearly normal. You do not see men on the streets, except wounded, and it gave me a shock for a moment when I arrived here and saw so many men about the city. There is one unusual thing, however. The Government has issued a decree that all vacant lots may be used for vegetable gardens. If you find a piece of property vacant, you go and get a permit, and then you are free to plant vegetables there, no matter who owns it.

"They made no difficulty about us going away. We applied for permission, and it received so little objection that I do not even know what the formalities were. On the frontier our trunks were most carefully searched, but they apologized most thoroughly for it. I had a pair of brass souvenir candlesticks that I wanted to bring back with me, but I was informed at the frontier that no metal could be taken out of Germany, neither would they allow us to take away our opera glasses, cameras, &c. We were allowed to give an address in Berlin, to which they were carefully shipped back.

"The Germans feel very sorry for France and Belgium, and regret carrying on war against them, but they are bitter against the English, and this, too, in spite of the fact that a great many families are partly English, and thus find themselves divided."

IMPORTANT ARMS WEAKEST

State Militia Lacking in Artillery, Cavalry, Engineers, and Signal Corps Men.

Much has been said and written, since the European war began, as to the military preparedness of the United States. Organizations whose purpose is to encourage preparedness and to urge more liberal appropriations for the army and navy have been organized in all parts of the country. The army and the navy have been thoroughly studied in recent months, and the President is now busy with their problems; but what of the great civilian army, then, of military age between 18 and 44 years, of whom, according to the reports of State Adjutant Generals on file in Washington, there are nearly 17,000,000. Of this number, as great almost as the total of all the armies now fighting in Europe, only sixty-one hundredths of one per cent. are in the militia of the various States, which means that more than 16,800,000 are men practically without military training.

To get an idea of the situation, a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES was permitted a few days ago to read some of the Government reports on the condition of the militia. The result was startling. In more than a score of States there is no field artillery of any sort and in the whole country there are fewer than forty officers of ordnance. In thirty-five States there are no organizations trained for coast artillery, twenty-four have no cavalry, a large majority are without signal troops, while the total force of organized engineers, officers and men, totals less than 1,500 for the entire country. One State, Nevada, is without militia organization of any kind.

Country's Militia Strength.

In the table that follows, which gives the number of officers and enlisted men of all arms in the National Guard, the figures are from regular army Inspectors, and appear in the most recent report of the Division of Militia Affairs.

Mississippi	94	960	Wyoming	54	760
Missouri	141	3,840
Montana	40	636	Total	8,792	119,251

In the above total is included thirty-one Generals of the line, ninety-eight officers assigned to duty as Adjutant Generals of brigades and divisions, forty-seven Inspector Generals, and forty-eight judge advocates.

Arm.	Officers.	Men.
Infantry	6,328	95,109
Cavalry	298	4,642
Field artillery	314	5,914
Coast artillery	450	7,180
Medical Corps	783	3,550
Engineers	78	1,246
Quartermaster	157	108
Subsistence	19	17
Pay	10
Ordnance	59	99
Signal	72	1,470
Total	8,792	119,251

Weak in Field Artillery.

All the States, save Nevada, have infantry troops as a matter of course. In field artillery there are twenty-three that have none. Those States are Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

Only thirteen States maintain coast artillery organizations, and of the total of coast artillerymen more than half is in New York. In Maine the total of coast artillerymen is thirty. The coast States of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Texas are without coast artillery organizations.

Nearly half of all the National Guard cavalry in the country is in New York and Pennsylvania. The States without cavalry are Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wyoming. It will be noted that among the States without cavalry are a majority of those in which horsemanship is supposed to be most common, such as Wyoming, Kentucky, Montana, Kansas, and New Mexico.

Of engineering troops more than 1,100 of the 1,324 are in four States; New York with 754, Ohio with 190, Pennsylvania with 123, and Michigan with 100. Of the remaining 225 officers and men Illinois claims four of the officers and 60 men and Oklahoma three officers and 61 enlisted men. Virginia has an engineering strength of three officers, Massachusetts and California two officers each, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Minnesota, Maryland, Iowa, and the District of Columbia one officer each.

"Just think of it," said a regular army officer recently, "in all the United States there are fewer than 100 officers and enlisted men in the National Guard ordnance service."

The number of men between 18 and 44 fit for military service, is approximately 16,500,000, divided among the States as follows:

State.	Men.	State.	Men.
Alabama	805,144	Montana	48,076
Arizona	40,776	Nebraska	132,380
Arkansas	327,387	Nevada	20,000
California	393,784	N. Hampshire	41,925
Colorado	134,296	N. Jersey	875,895
Connecticut	156,497	N. Mexico	60,573
Delaware	32,489	N. York	1,916,481
Florida	197,188	N. Dakota	70,771

Indiana	652,351	Rhode Island	138,402
Iowa	288,838	S. Carolina	217,375
Kansas	386,570	S. Dakota	70,862
Kentucky	342,326	Tennessee	376,763
Louisiana	339,443	Texas	502,870
Maine	164,819	Utah	40,483
Maryland	126,970	Vermont	60,875
Massachusetts	577,618	Virginia	327,817
Michigan	521,799	Washington	236,189
Minnesota	237,922	W. Virginia	201,324
Mississippi	401,220	Wisconsin	441,256
Missouri	604,034	Wyoming	41,730

Some Strange Proportions.

The above figures reveal many strange situations. For instance, Alabama is surpassed by only four States in the number of males between 18 and 44 fit for military service, those States being New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois. The 1910 census gave California 200,000 more population than Alabama, yet Alabama reports that she can furnish 400,000 more men than can California. Texas, with 1,700,000 more population than Alabama, reports only 500,000 men fit for service, while Massachusetts, with 500,000 less population than Texas, offers 75,000 more men.

Minnesota, with 2,100,000 population, reports only 237,922 possible soldiers, while South Carolina, with only 1,500,000 population, comes within 20,000 of that number. Ohio, whose population is a round million greater than that of Texas, is credited with 450,000 more able men than Texas, but only 150,000 more than Alabama, which has 2,500,000 fewer people.

Mississippi, 1,800,000 population, offers more than 400,000 men, whereas Tennessee, with 2,200,000 population, returns only 376,000. Indiana, with 1,000,000 less population than Texas, reports 160,000 more fit men and 75,000 more than Massachusetts, which has 650,000 more citizens than has Indiana.

Much criticism has been leveled at the War Department because of apparent lack of interest in the militia. It is a fact, however, that never, except when the country was at war, has the Government done more for the National Guard than now. There is no press agent to keep the country informed, but the War Department is in intimate touch with the militia of every State and now has on detail 133 of its ablest officers who give all their time to inspection and instruction. Nineteen picked army officers are now on duty in New York. These officers have a suite of rooms in the new Municipal Building and no office in that great structure is busier.

Able Men For Instructors.

At the head of the New York State detail is Lieut. Col. A. P. Buffington, who has given years to the study of the militia problem and he works hand in hand with Major Gen. O'Ryan, and the other higher officers of the New York guard. Under Col. Buffington as inspector-instructors are Major William Weigel, Captains Joseph L. Gilbreth and George H. White, and First Lieutenants Russell James, Carroll B. Hodges and Albert T. Rich, Infantry; Capt. Robert S. Thomas, Engineers; Captain David H. Biddle and First Lieutenant William H. Bell, Cavalry; Capt. Daniel W. Hand, and First Lieutenants Dawson Olmsted and Harry Pfeil, Field Artillery; Captains Henry B. Clark, H. J. Tillery; First Lieutenant John A. Brockman, Signal Corps, and Major Sanford H. Wadhams, Medical Corps.

Eight officers are detailed to the National Guard of Pennsylvania, six to Ohio, seven to Illinois, nine to Massachusetts, and from one to four each to every other State except Nevada. Among these 138 officers are about twenty retired officers who had to leave the active service because of disabilities that made campaigning in the Philippines, or service in Panama, Porto Rico, and border ports in this country, out of the question, but which did not affect their usefulness as instructors.

GENERAL TRACY IS FAILING.

Physicians In Consultation Over Veteran's Condition.

Physicians are in almost constant consultation over the condition of General Benjamin F. Tracy, Secretary of the Navy under President Harrison, who is seriously ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ferdinand Wilmerding, 14 East Sixtieth Street. General Tracy was injured in an automobile accident on May 30, and two weeks ago was taken suddenly ill while dining. The excessive heat of the past few days has further endangered his life. General Tracy is in his eighty-sixth year.

General Tracy, with Colonel Richard S. Seckerson and Colonel Henry W. Knight was on his way down Fifth Avenue Memorial day to review the parade in Brooklyn, when at Twenty-seventh Street a horse drawing a peddler's wagon became unmanageable and a shaft of the wagon crashed through the limousine window, striking General Tracy a blow on the ear. Although blood was flowing from his wound General Tracy disregarded the advice of his friends and insisted on reviewing the parade, because he "didn't want to disappoint the boys." He has felt the effects of the blow ever since, and two weeks ago is said to have suffered a minor paralytic stroke, which has kept him from his active law practice at 2 Rector Street.

DISPLAY MEN TO MEET HERE

The annual convention of the International Association of Display Men will begin tomorrow at the Waldorf-Astoria, and will last four days. Delegates will be present from all over the United States and from Canada, England, France, Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. The dinner on Wednesday night is termed among display men as a wake over the term "window trimmer," which has been discarded for the present name of the association.

The programme for the four days is made up of papers and addresses by leaders in the art of displaying wares to the best advantage. Of seventy-five booths preperad for the display of wares, materials, and supplies, seventy have been sold. The receipts will be devoted toward the expenses of the convention.

Since the days ten years ago when the "window trimmers" met in this city the association has grown from 40 delegates to an expected attendance of between 1,500 and 2,000.

CITY DEPARTMENTS WANT MORE MONEY

ADDED FUNDS FOR LIBRARY

Dock Commissioner Smith Says His Department Can Decrease Expenses $119,611.

Estimates of city departmental heads for the money to be required in running their branches for 1916, filed with the Tax Budget Committee of the Board of Estimate and made public yesterday show among other things that it will cost the city $828,540 for the maintenance and upkeep of the New York Public Library, (partly the Carnegie gift,) and $507,863 for the Brooklyn Public Library. The figures likewise show that the money required for 1915 was $745,359 for the New York Library, and $445,863 for the Brooklyn Library during the same period.

Other interesting figures show that the estimated cost for looking after the parks in Brooklyn for 1916-17 will be $823,959, while it will cost this city only $775,545 for the same department during the present year. No estimate has been given for the same department in Manhattan. The estimates show that $118,085 is the amount thought necessary for appropriation to the work at the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

Commissioner Smith of the Department of Docks and Ferries, who makes the unusual request that his salary be reduced from $7,500 a year to $5,000, furnishes figures that show it to be his opinion that he can conduct his department at a cost of $119,611 less for 1916 than was allowed for the present year; the 1915 figure was $1,946,515, while the estimate for 1916 is given at $1,826,904.

The Tenement House Department figures show that it is thought the department can worry along with $706,180 for 1916, while it required $712,548 for 1915. The Board of City Record, which furnishes all the printing for the city and maintains the City Record, the city's daily paper, places its requirement for 1916 at $918,821, while its allowance for this year was $938,455. The Surrogates' Court figures are placed at $209,825, for 1916, while the 1915 figure was $208,379.

The estimates for 1916 for the five boroughs, as far as made up, show:

SOUND LINER SINKS BARGE.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 31.—The Colonial Line passenger steamer Concord, from New York for Providence, ran down the barge Exeter in Narragansett Bay during a thick fog early today and sank her.

No one was injured and after taking aboard the crew of the Exeter the Concord, which was not damaged, completed her journey. The shock of the collision threw several passengers on the Concord from their berths.

Pilot G. F. Cleweiler, who was in charge of the steamer, says he was within 1,000 feet of the barge, which was anchored awaiting a tow, when he discovered her. The engines of the Concord were reversed but she could not be stopped in time and struck the Exeter near the bow, making a large hole extending below the waterline. Captain Lewez and the six men of the barge crew took to the boats and stood by until their vessel sank and then boarded the Concord.

The Exeter was owned by the Philadelphia & Reading Coal Company and carried 3,000 tons of coal consigned to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad at this port.

THIRD AVENUE ROAD SENDS BRIDGE OFFER

Will Accept Kracke's Terms for Privilege of Running Cars on Williamsburg Span.

LOCKS HORNS WITH B. R. T.

Willing to Give Up 90 Per Cent. of Profits for Use of Tracks and Submit to City Control.

Bridge Commissioner Kracke announced yesterday that he had received an offer from Edward A. Maher, Vice President of the Third Avenue Railway Company, to accept the Commissioner's terms for the privilege of operating cars across the Williamsburg Bridge.

The Third Avenue Company's offer is in direct contrast to the attitude of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, which threatened to withdraw its cars from the bridge if not allowed to continue under the present agreement. That agreement will expire on Aug. 31, at midnight, and under its terms the Brooklyn company has reaped a profit of $000,000 in six years. The B. R. T. arrangement gives that company, in conjunction with the New York Railways Company, a monopoly of the tracks across the bridge.

In a letter to the Commissioner, the Third Avenue Company agrees to the following:

To allow the city substantially all the profits of the local line across the structure and keep for itself only enough to cover the cost of operation and ten per cent. of the profits.

To leave with the city the unrestricted control of the tracks on the bridge and not ask a monopoly or exclusive control of any tracks.

To waive the privileges of Section 48 of the franchise tax law, so that the tolls paid to the city would be retained by the city and would not be rebated against the company's franchise tax account.

To pay the same toll of five cents per car as that paid by the present operators.

The Third Avenue Road is not known to have any trackage rights on the Brooklyn side of the bridge, and under such conditions could only run its cars to the Brooklyn end of the structure. Under the present contract, cars are operated across the bridge from many points in Brooklyn in addition to the local car service across the structure. In the event the Third Avenue Company gets a contract for the bridge privileges, the B. R. T. cars could only run to the Brooklyn end of the span, and thus the necessity would arise for a change of cars to the Third Avenue Company's locals across the bridge, whereas there is a through car service at present.

Commissioner Kracke said yesterday:

"I am making public today a formal proposal which I had definitely, though orally, before me at the time I mentioned to the B. R. T. negotiators that there was another proposal for the Williamsburg Bridge operation before this department."

The Commissioner then referred to the quoted statement of Colonel Timothy S. Williams, head of the B. R. T., that, perhaps, the Commissioner was trying to place the contract in the hands of some political friend. The Commissioner continued:

"It will, perhaps, ease the Colonel's mind to find that this proposal is not from a political friend of mine, but from Edward A. Maher, Vice President and General Manager of the Third Avenue Railway Company, who has wide experience and ranks in the railway world with the redoubtable Colonel himself. At any rate, I wish to commend Mr. Maher and the Third Avenue Company very highly for the public spirit they have shown in presenting this proposal.

"I am well aware that the proposal does not settle all the questions at issue at this bridge. It does not provide for through operation from Brooklyn to Manhattan. It does provide, however, for a very elaborate through operation from Manhattan to Brooklyn, and it provides it under terms that are fair and just to the city and more than meet the city on the question of principles that have been definitely established by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment in recent years."

The Commissioner said that he would have something interesting to say on Monday in reply to the B. R. T., which he said, yesterday began an advertising campaign against him in the Brooklyn newspapers. He refused to discuss the reported attacks.

Holland Protects Rare Birds.

Holland has stopped the killing of rare birds in the Dutch East Indies, according to a letter received yesterday by Dr. William T. Hornaday, Director of the Zoological Park, from Dr. C. Herbert, Director of the Amsterdam Zoological Gardens. Dr. Hornaday wrote to the Royal Zoological Society of Amsterdam two years ago, calling attention to the powerful organization for the exportation of skins of birds of paradise, crown pigeons, and other species of birds from the Dutch East Indies. He urged that the Netherlands Government should be asked to protect its colonial bird fauna by prohibiting all exportations of skins and plumage, save for educational purposes.

THINK MOYNAM WAS SLAIN.

The Westchester County police started a search yesterday for persons who they believe murdered Richard Moynam, of 2126 Sixty-seventh Street, Brooklyn, and threw his body upon the tracks of the New York Central Railroad near Dobbs Ferry. The mangled body of Moynam, a moving picture promoter, was found on Friday morning. Because a certified check for $17,500 that Moynam is known to have had was not on the body, the police believe he was killed by robbers.

When they read in the newspapers yesterday of the death of a man supposed to be their father, Mrs. Henry Wagner and Miss Nellie and Miss Fannie Moynam went to the morgue at Hastings and identified the body as that of their father. As soon as they had done this they asked for the effects. When 55 cents, a key, an identification card, and an insurance premium receipt were turned over to them, they asked for a certified check for $17,500 they said their father had when he left his home in Brooklyn Wednesday morning to close a real estate deal in Westchester.

PALMER REFUSES JUDGESHIP

Says He Cannot Cut Off Activities by Going to Court of Claims.

STROUDSBURG, PENN., July 31.—Former Representative A. Mitchell Palmer, who was appointed a member of the United States Court of Claims by President Wilson some time ago, today issued a statement in which he announced that he had concluded not to accept the place. Mr. Palmer said that he had found it more difficult than he had anticipated to give up personal and law work.

"My roots are down too deep in the ground and I am too much of a 'going concern' to suddenly cut off my activities by the acceptance of a place for life upon the federal bench," he said.

The statement is taken to mean that he will continue his activity in Democratic politics in this State. He is the Pennsylvania member of the National Democratic Committee.

Mr. Palmer has been mentioned for the position of counselor for the State Department made vacant by the elevation of Robert Lansing to the Secretaryship.

ERASMUS UNSAFE, ADAMSON FINDS

DESTRUCTION NOT ORDERED

Facts Put Before Educational Officials, Who Are Expected to Decide Fate of Firetraps.

The frame buildings of the Erasmus Hall High School, despite the many alterations which have been made by the Board of Education to lessen the fire risk to the 1,200 children who attended classes in them, have been condemned again as unsafe by the Fire Department. Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson yesterday made public a letter which he wrote on Friday to Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education, in which he reaches this conclusion:

"Although the abandonment of these frame buildings will undoubtedly result in serious inconvenience I am unable to approve the continued use of these structures for school purposes. I feel confident that your board, in view of these facts, will agree with me that these buildings should no longer be used for classes. I appreciate fully the difficulty faced by your board in finding accommodations for the growing school population, but it would be much better to have double classes in the schools than to continue the use of buildings which have been repeatedly pronounced dangerous by the best expert authority in this department.

Under the practice which has been followed in this department since I have been its head we have not issued fire prevention orders to other city departments, feeling that all it was necessary to do was to call the attention of the heads of such departments to conditions which needed correction, and that proper action would be taken. I, therefore, present the facts to you in this form, and feel sure that your board will take the necessary action.

Prompt Action Expected.

It was impossible to reach President Churchill yesterday to learn what steps the Board of Education would take, but inasmuch as he had already said emphatically that the board would remove any buildings which the Fire Department should find unsafe, it is presumed that steps to find other accommodations for the pupils housed in the wooden buildings will be taken.

The Fire Commissioner's letter does not recommend the destruction of the wooden buildings, although it is known that the Fire Department has regarded the existence of a large block of inflammable structures in close proximity to the $600,000 modern building as a menace to the latter. The recommendations leave the way open for the preservation of the old Erasmus Hall, built in 1786, which is architecturally and historically a building of considerable value and is also as fire-resisting as a wooden building can well be.

Commissioner Adamson's letter goes into the history of the various inspections since attention was first drawn to these old buildings in an article in The Fire Prevention News of April, 1914. The buildings were condemned twice as unsafe, but their use was continued on the plea of Dr. Walter B. Gunnison, principal of the school, and Borough President Lewis H. Pounds, because of lack of accommodations for the 1,200 pupils. It was agreed last December, according to Commissioner Adamson, that the wooden buildings would be abandoned at the end of the school year.

What followed is told in the Commissioner's letter:

"It was our understanding with Dr. Gunnison that he would make arrangements at the end of the school term to accommodate in the new buildings, or elsewhere in the school system, those classes at that time occupying the old frame buildings. On June 17 last I wrote to Dr. Gunnison reminding him of this agreement and asking whether he had succeeded in rearranging classes so that when the school session begins after the Summer vacation he would be able to abandon altogether that section of the frame buildings complained of by Chief Kenlon, Chief Beggin, and Chief Hammitt.

Gunnison Urges Difficulties.

Dr. Gunnison called personally to see me a short time ago, and stated that he was afraid that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to accommodate all of the pupils who would apply for admission at Erasmus Hall High School in the new building, and asked whether it was possible to continue the use of the frame buildings. He said he regarded the frame buildings as entirely safe. I called his attention to the emphatic opinion of Chief Kenlon, Chief Beggin, and Chief Hammitt, and told him that I would look into the matter.

Chief Hammitt of the Fire Prevention Bureau submitted to me a few days ago a report from Deputy Chief Swartwout in charge of the Fire Prevention Bureau in Brooklyn and Queens, in which he described the present condition of the buildings and stated: "The use of frame buildings for school purposes should be discontinued and accommodations for the school children provided in modern fireproof structures. The removal of the frame buildings at Erasmus Hall should be accomplished as early as the Board of Education can provide accommodations for the school children elsewhere, and I recommend that the Board of Education be requested definitely to fix this date."

In view of the previous reports made to me by Chief Kenlon and others, and in view of the fact that there seemed to be no immediate possibility of the completion of the proposed addition to Erasmus Hall High School, I was doubtful whether I would be justified in sanctioning the continued use of the school building until after the school term begins in September next. Dr. Gunnison was so positive as to the safety of the frame buildings, and was so urgent in stating their convenience which would ensue if the buildings had to be abandoned, I referred Deputy Chief Swartwout's report to Chief Kenlon and Chief Lally for their opinion as experts. I inclose to you herewith copies of the reports made to me by both of these officers of the uniformed force.

Condemned by Fire Chiefs.

You will note that while Chief Kenlon states that the alterations which have been made have materially improved the safety of these wooden structures, "it still constitutes a serious fire hazard." He concludes: "I am of the opinion that the buildings are unsafe and should not be used for school purposes." He states that this conclusion applies to all the frame buildings and not to any particular part.

Deputy Chief Lally, in charge of the Borough of Brooklyn and Queens, reaches substantially the same conclusion, and states that while the buildings have been somewhat improved in condition, he is still of the opinion "that these buildings are not fit for school purposes, for the reason that they constitute a serious fire hazard, and they should be vacated at as early a date as the Board of Education can make provisions for the care of the pupils elsewhere."

These are the opinions of the chief officers of the uniformed force. Similar opinions have been rendered by Deputy Chief Beggin and Battalion Chief Dougherty, two of the most experienced and conservative officers in the department. Chief Hammitt of the Fire Prevention Bureau has reached the same conclusion, as have other investigators.

I understand from statements made by Dr. Gunnison to Chief Kenlon and Mr. Hammitt last December that it would be possible by rearrangement of the classes in the school to accommodate the full attendance at the school after the Summer vacation. In my letter to you of Dec. 15 I pointed out that "the Washington Irving High School, with a floor area of 219,750 square feet, accommodates 4,676 pupils. The fireproof building at Erasmus Hall has a floor area of 157,740 square feet, with an attendance of 2,768 pupils." I sincerely hope that arrangements can be made to accommodate all the pupils in the fireproof building at Erasmus Hall High School or in other schools.

The Commissioner's letter ends with his conclusions and recommendations as quoted above, and adds the statement that the Board of Education has always co-operated cordially with the Fire Department for the protection of the schools.

To raze the buildings the Board of Education would have to obtain permission of the Sinking Fund Commission. As this has not been suggested, however, by the Fire Commissioner, steps to carry out the recommendations of the Fire Department are limited to measures looking to the housing of the 1,200 pupils elsewhere.

SAY DRINK SHORTENS LIFE.

Health Department Publishes Life Insurance Statistics.

The Department of Health made public yesterday results obtained from a study of the effect of alcohol on human life made by insurance companies. The subject is also discussed by Arthur Hunter Actuary for the New York Life. Mr. Hunter explains that the investigations were primarily intended to assist in determining the types that could safely be accepted for insurance at regular rates, which types should pay extra premium, and which should be declined. Forty-three leading companies supplied their records on about 2,000,000 lives, covering twenty-five years. These were divided in five classes, the fifth class being "those whose habits with regard to alcoholic beverages were not satisfactory in the past, or who used liquor steadily at the time of application for insurance."

"Nothing has been more conclusively proven than that a steady free use of alcoholic beverages, or occasional excess is detrimental to the individual," says Mr. Hunter. "Among men who admitted that they had taken alcohol occasionally to excess in the past, but whose habits were considered satisfactory when they were insured, the extra mortality was equivalent to a reduction of more than four years in the average life of these men."

The Health Department comments that while the committee did not report on the mortality among total abstainers, statistics have been gathered to justify the statement that total abstainers have a mortality during the working years of life of about one-half of that among those who take two glasses of whiskey a day.

GO TO FIRE BIG U. S. GUNS.

The Ninth Coast Defense Command, N. G., N. Y., will leave Manhattan today by boat from the foot of West Twenty-fourth Street for Fort H. G. Wright on Fisher's Island, N. Y., for a two weeks' tour of duty, relieving the Thirteenth Coast Defense Command under Colonel N. B. Thurston, which will return to Brooklyn by steamer.

Colonel John J. Byrne, who commands the Ninth, announces that a bronze trophy will be awarded to the company receiving the highest figure of merit at target practice with the big guns at Fort Wright. Many of the men slept at the armory last night, in order not to be late for the assembly this morning, which was ordered for 5:45 o'clock.

The companies of the command have been assigned as follows: The first fire command will comprise the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Sixteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, and Twenty-first Companies under Major Lewis M. Thiery, and will man batteries Butterfield and Barlow; the second fire command will comprise the Fifteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth, and Twenty-second Companies, under Major Mills Miller, and will man batteries Marcy and Dutton.

HEIR TO $60,000 TURNS UP.

Learning that he had inherited $60,000 through the death of his granduncle, Ralph Elrose, Jr., 18 years old, who has been working in a laundry in the Bronx, returned yesterday to his home at 239 Skillman Street, Brooklyn. He is an heir under the will of his mother's uncle, Dr. Charles F. Myers.

The boy left home to make his own way in the world about two years ago, and obtained employment in the Bronx. The law firm of Rollins & Rollins of Manhattan, as attorneys for the Myers estate, sought him in order that he might be represented in some legal proceedings affecting the property. The lawyers, being unable to find the heir by other means, placed an advertisement in the newspapers. One of Elrose's friends saw the advertisement and called his attention to it.

PORTUGAL'S PRESIDENCY.

Only Two Candidates Now in Field —Election of Machado Likely.

LISBON, July 31.—The number of candidates for the Presidency of the republic in the election to be held on Aug. 6 now has been reduced virtually to two —Dr. Duarte Leite, ex-Premier and Minister of the Interior, and Dr. Bernardino Machado, Minister to Brazil and also an ex-Premier. It is generally believed that the latter will be successful.

The Government is taking measures to maintain order along the basin of the Douro River, where there are sporadic revolutionary outbreaks. The Douro forms the boundary between Portugal and Spain.

ELECTRIC FLAMES BURN 4 IN SUBWAY

PASSENGERS NEAR PANIC

As a northbound subway express train of the Broadway division was about to stop at the elevated Manhattan Street station at 5:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the electrical current in a switch box fastened to the ceiling of the rear platform of the first car was short-circuited. There was a sharp report and simultaneously a hot, blue flame shot out of the box and downwards, striking four persons who were standing on the platform. The air in the car seemed suddenly superheated and many of the passengers afterwards said they felt a violent electrical shock that seemed to come from the seats.

The four persons burned by the flame were:

Of the four, Ritter was most badly burned, his injuries being general about the face and body. He was taken in an ambulance to Knickerbocker Hospital, where his condition was stid last night to be serious. The other three were painfully burned, but went to their homes after treatment in a drug store near Manhattan Street and Broadway by Dr. Padula of Knickerbocker Hospital.

The flash and flame of electricity were followed by excitement among the passengers in the car that nearly became a panic, and probably would have become one had the train been underground. But the shouting of the guard stationed at the door of the car and the rassurance furnished by the daylight and air coming through the windows resulted in a quieting of the passengers soon after they had crowded from the seats into the aisle in the first flurry of their excitement.

The guard opened the doors of the car as soon as possible after the accident, and the passengers poured out to the station platform. Ahead of all of them was Ritter. His straw hat had been burned from his head by the flame and his coat was smoldering as he fled down the steps of the station, despising the escalator. Crying in pain, he reached the street and ran into the drug store, where he and the other injured were treated.

Herbert L. Steiner of 68 Haven Avenue, the Bronx, one of the passengers, reached the street soon after Ritter and reported the accident to Traffic Policeman Michael McLoughlin, who sent an ambulance call to Knickerbocker Hospital. McLoughlin then hurried to the station platform and succeeded in quieting the passengers who had crowded onto it from all of the cars of the train and from the street. With the ambulance surgeon, he later assisted to the street the three injured who had not fled.

Traffic on the line was tied up for twenty minutes, after which the train went to the storage yard at 137th Street, where the damaged car was removed.

THE PHILADELPHIA SAILS.

Gen. Wood's Brother Among the Passengers on American Liner.

Among the passengers who sailed yesterday on the Philadelphia of the American Line for Liverpool was John H. Wood, who is in the cotton business and is going to South Africa to look after personal interests there. He is a brother of General Leonard Wood, who went to the pier to see him off.

Herbert Price, general manager of the Tansan Company at Kobe, Japan, sailed on the Philadelphia to see his family after an absence of fourteen years and was accompanied by his Japanese wife, who speaks English fluently and wears European costume.

The Philadelphia had 107 first, 149 second, and 200 third class passengers and sixty-four deported aliens, which is a large number for one ship to take back in these war times. Most of the aliens were persons who had come over here without sufficient means to land and on account of weak health were considered likely to become public charges.

GIRLS IN BLACK HAND 'PLOT.'

SANTA MONICA, Cal., July 31.—The "Black Hand plot" reported yesterday when Delphin M. Delmas, formerly an attorney for Harry Thaw, and several other citizens, found representations of hands done in black paper pasted on their windows, was solved by the police today, and the "conspiracy," which set dozens of detectives to work, charged to the prank of a coterie of boarding school girls.

SAFETY FIRST!

(Automatic Spoonless Medicine Measurer and Eye Cup)

SANITARY—ACCURATE—REFILLABLE

Does away with the troublesome spoon in taking your medicine.

An unspillable medicine bottle that carries its own measuring glass and can be put in the pocket or suit case without any danger of it leaking and soiling the clothes. The bottle can be turned upside down without spilling a drop of its contents. A twist of the hand forces the contents to rise up the tube to whatever height may be required—one or one-half teaspoonful.

The funnel can be cleaned without contaminating the contents. The bottle can be taken to bed. Not necessary to light the light to look for a spoon and glass.

The Eye Cup works on the same principle. To the autoist it is indispensable. Always ready for use. Cover can be used as drinking cup. Can be used for other purposes as well.

LAWMAKERS' WORK NEARS FINAL STAGE

FIGHT TO BE IN THE OPEN

Louis Marshall to Push His Proposal to Give Minorities a Voice in Corporations.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, July 31.—When the Constitutional Convention resumes work on Monday night it will enter upon the final stage of its deliberations, the consideration and debate of proposed amendments to the organic law in committee of the whole and on third reading. The fight on the various proposals pending before the convention will then be out in the open.

The arduous labors of the last three months have merely been by the way of preparation. They have included hundreds of public hearings and endless and exacting committee work behind closed doors, in the course of which the various measures which the convention will consider for final passage have been whipped into shape and hundreds of other proposals have been thrown into the discard.

Up to the present 683 proposals have been introduced by delegates to the Constitutional Convention. Eighteen proposals have been introduced by the various standing committees. So far not a single proposed constitutional amendment has been adopted by the convention. Two have been rejected with the convention sitting as a committee of the whole. Five proposals have been reported adversely by standing committees. Forty have been favorably reported and placed on the convention calendar. Four have been advanced to third reading—the final stage before definite adoption or rejection by the convention.

A majority of the standing committees have already completed their work and rendered their final reports to the convention. Among these are the Committee on Corporations and the Committee on Banking and Insurance, both of which rejected all the proposals remitted to them and recommended to the convention that no changes be made in the fundamental law affecting the subject matter with which they had been dealing.

The most important measures before the Committee on Corporations was one providing for the incorporation and State regulation of Stock Exchange and other exchanges, and one giving stockholders of corporations the right to cast their votes at the annual election of Directors on the cumulative or distributive plan, as they saw fit. The last-named proposal was introduced by Louis Marshall with a view to giving minorities a voice in the management of corporations. Mr. Marshall has announced that he will bring the matter before the convention in connection with a minority report to be presented by a member of the committee. Similar action is likely to be taken by Eugene Lamb Richards, State Superintendent of Banks, with reference to a proposal which the Committee on Banking and Insurance rejected, and which would have given to the Banking Department more ample powers to supervise the affairs of a class of private bankers in rural communities which now conduct a banking business virtually without any State supervision.

Three of the most important of the standing committees remain to be heard from—the Judiciary, the Committee on Governor and Other State Officers, and the Cities Committee. The Committee on State Finances, too, has rendered only a partial report dealing with the State sinking funds. By far the most important part of its work, the formulation of a new plan for State budget making, transferring the power of initiating the budget from the Legislature to the Executive, still remains in the making. But this committee, too, is expected to report finally before next week is over. These four committees deal with what perhaps may be considered the most important subjects before the convention.

The Committee on Conservation of the State's Natural Resources has completed its report, and this, with a proposal rendering it effective, will go before the convention early next week.

Next week, with the bulk of the committee work out of the way, the convention will hold two sessions a day, with the exception of Monday, when there will be only the usual night session

ADMITS DESERTING WIFE.

Mrs. Philipbar Charges Pastor's Son with Cruelty Also.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., July 31.—Mrs. Lillian C. Philipbar of this city asked today that her husband, William Philipbar of 1,121 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, be held for the Grand Jury for abandonment, cruelty, and non-support. Philipbar, who is the son of the Rev. C. Philipbar of 1,755 Linden Street, Brooklyn, pleaded guilty to the charge of desertion and was released under bail of $500 by Judge Owen P. Mahon. He will be sentenced on Sept. 3.

The Philipbars were married in this city about two years ago. They have no children.

SAVES HUSBAND FROM JAIL.

Mrs. Blanda, Who Prosecuted Him Last Week, Aids Him Now.

PASSAIC, N. J., July 31.—Mrs. Marie Blanda of 35 Dayton Avenue saved her husband, Michael, from a jail sentence today, when she paid his $10 fine in the City Court. He was convicted of stealing $10 worth of woolen goods and faced jail when she ran into court.

Last Wednesday he saved her life when she threw herself in front of an Erie Railroad train, in an attempt to commit suicide. Her action followed her appearance in court, where she complained that her husband abused her.

Deputy Rosenblum Discharged.

Louis S. Rosenblum, a special Deputy Sheriff of Bronx County, who was arrested in Columbus Circle Friday night on the complaint of James A. Foy of 239 East Fifty-eighth Street on a charge of picking his pocket of $1, was discharged yesterday by Magistrate Murphy in Jefferson Market Court. Foy failed to appear. Rosenblum conducts an advertising business at 1,416 Broadway. Magistrate Murphy said he was convinced his arrest was a mistake.

MRS. WALTERS WEDS LORLYS E. ROGERS

Her Husband the Father of Two Babies She Poisoned and for Whose Death She Faces Trial.

HIS DIVORCE 24 HOURS OLD

Mrs. Ida Sniffen Walters, who killed her two babies and attempted to take her own life by poison last December, was married yesterday afternoon in Jersey City to the father of her dead children, Lorlys Elton Rogers. The wedding followed as soon as legally possible the granting of an absolute divorce to Mrs. Caroline Giddings Rogers, the lawful wife of Rogers when his relations with Mrs. Walters were exposed through her poisoning of herself and children.

Justice Ford of the New York Supreme Court granted Mrs. Caroline Giddings Rogers her final decree of divorce on Friday, and on the afternoon of the same day Rogers and Mrs. Walters went to Jersey City for a license to marry. They had to obtain the license outside of New York, as the New York law prohibited Rogers's remarriage within the State.

The license was issued by Michael I. Fagan, City Clerk of Jersey City, after Rogers and Mrs. Walters had each filed divorce papers showing a previous marriage. The papers filed by Rogers were those he had obtained a few hours earlier, and Mrs. Walters admitted a divorce from Arthur S. Walters in June, 1912. I. Faerber Goldenhorn, a lawyer, with offices at 15 Exchange Place, Jersey City, stood sponsor for the couple before the City Clerk.

The license was issued at 4.10 o'clock in the afternoon and, as neither of the parties to the marriage was a resident of the State of New Jersey, they could not be legally married until twenty-four hours had elapsed. They set the wedding for yesterday afternoon, therefore, and shortly before 4 o'clock met in Mr. Goldenhorn's office for the ceremony.

Judge James F. Dolan, of the First Criminal Court of Jersey City, was engaged to unite the couple, and he was ready to proceed at 4.05 o'clock, when he noted that the license had been issued at 4.10. He told Rogers that the ceremony must be delayed five minutes to be in accordance with the law. According to report, both Rogers and Mrs. Walters waited impatiently, watching the clock constantly until the five minutes had elapsed. Those present at the ceremony besides the principals were Teresa Gallagher, of 310 West Sixty-first Street, who nursed Mrs. Rogers in Lebanon Hospital during the illness that followed her taking poison, and Joseph Greenberg, a clerk in Mr. Goldenhorn's office.

Newspaper reporters and photographers sought admission to the office, but were refused, nor would any one present discuss the marriage or the intentions of the bride and groom. Directly after the wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Rogers left in an automobile for Suffern, N. Y., which place they gave as their home when the license was obtained.

Those who saw Mrs. Rogers said she seemed to be in ill health. She is still under bail charged with the killing of her two babies, and she had been ordered by the court not to leave the State.

SHOT IN SUBWAY SHAFT.

A subway worker, Peter Marcigliano, was shot yesterday afternoon by a discharged employe, Camele Verdoni, who attacked him at the bottom of the Lexington Avenue excavation, eighty-five feet below the street level, at Sixty-second Street. Marcigliano had returned from his lunch at the top of the shaft, and as he reached the bottom a man stepped from behind a supporting pillar and began firing at him. Marcigliano picked up an iron bar and turned to meet the assailant when a second shot struck him in the shoulder and floored him.

Flourishing his weapon, Verdoni frightened the other subway workers from his path and ran to the shaft opening at Lexington Avenue and Sixtieth Street. There short flights of wooden steps connect the various levels with the street exit. But Vedoni found his escape barred by the men at work on the different levels. Hearing the shots of the revolver, the other workers gathered in groups at each of the stairways and threatened him with their picks and shovels, holding him prisoner until Policeman McCarthy of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station arrived and disarmed him.

Marcigliano was attended by Dr. Quaglia, who is employed by the Bradley Construction Company, and later sent to Flower Hospital. Verdoni, who lives at 208 West 104th Street, was held on charges of felonious assault and having a revolver.

Track Walker Killed in Subway.

A train on the new Fourth Avenue Subway in Brooklyn ran down and killed Joseph Danna of 510 East Eleventh Street, a track walker, about 150 feet from the Pacific Street station at 5:30 o'clock last evening. The train, bound for Manhattan from Coney Island, was approaching the station at slackened speed. There were about 200 persons on the station platform and many witnessed the accident. Frank Cordell of 763 Thirty-ninth Street, Brooklyn, the motorman, was able to stop the train before it passed over Danna's body.

ROOSEVELT'S STUDY OF BIRD REFUGEES

COUNTED EGGS IN NESTS

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt recently visited the islands off the coast of Louisiana east of the Mississippi River to gather material for an article on the work of conserving bird life in that State. Among those who accompanied him was Stanley Clisby Arthur, Ornithologist to the Conservation Commission of Louisiana, who has made a report to the American Game Protective Association.

The tour lasted six days, and the former President was also accompanied by John M. Parker and M. L. Alexander, President of the Louisiana Conservation Commission. The party observed at close range the many gulls, terns, skimmers, and other species of avian life that use these fragments of land along the Gulf of Mexico as breeding places. The visitors crossed from island to island in the Commissioner's yacht Daisy.

"Many of the islands visited," said Mr. Arthur, "were United States reservations set aside for bird life while Mr. Roosevelt was President, and others were those established as game and water fowl refuges by the Conservation Commission of Louisiana. The tour embraced a survey of the Chandeleur, Free Mason, North Harbor, Grand Cochere, Battledore, and Breton Islands."

Colonel Roosevelt landed on most of the islands, and he was intensely interested in what he saw. He made a special study of the nesting birds, and observed his subjects from an intimate standpoint, looking into the question of their habits, number of eggs deposited, and the great numbers that congregate on the different sandy spits that line the Gulf off the Louisiana coast.

Mr. Arthur furnished the Game Protective Association with some good photographs showing the Colonel at different times during his trip. One interesting snapshot shows him walking down the beach on Breton Island. The air was thick with birds, and the ground was alive with royal terns, and the beach for two miles was so thickly strewn with eggs that the explorers had to exercise care in walking upon it.

Mr. Arthur explained to Mr. Roosevelt the various plans for conserving the game and bird life. He gave the visitor some first-hand information as to the nesting habits and zonal peculiarities of many species of water fowl that have selected Louisiana as a breeding home since the establishment of game preserves. Mr. Arthur also contributes the following account of the observation of a Wilson's petrel for the first time in Louisiana:

"The recent observing of a solitary Wilson's petrel in Louisiana has not only supplied the wild life of the State with a new species, but with the one under the strongest found in the United States that has been missing since the avian life of the State has been studied.

"The scientific designation of the species observed is Oceanites oceanicus of the order Tubinares, which includes, besides the petrels, the fulmars and shearwaters. The discovery was made by Herbert K. Job, head of the Department of Applied Ornithology of the National Association of Audubon Societies, and the writer while they were on an expedition to the bird-breeding islands along the Louisiana coast west of the Mississippi.

"The petrel, when observed, was about a mile off shore paddling the rough waters of the Gulf of Mexico and about seven miles west of Grand Isle. It circled the Commissioner's patrol boat Opelousas several times, but, although efforts were made by throwing lard on the waters to entice it close enough to the boat to be photographed, the bird finally flew out of sight, not, however, before we had studied it through binoculars for more than a quarter of an hour. Although we kept a close watch for other specimens of the same species during the remaining five days of the trip, no other petrels were seen."

HAWAIIAN LINE'S NEW SHIPS.

The agents of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Line announced yesterday that the first of the three new steamers under construction will be completed by Dec. 1. The vessels are being built by the Maryland Steel Company at Sparrow's Point.

The first is the Floridan, a freighter of 4,000 net tonnage, 414 feet long, 53 feet beam, and 31 feet depth of hold. The next, the Artisan, will be ready on March 1, 1916, and the Arborean on May 1.

The steamers will be added to the fleet of the Hawaiian-American Line operating from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast via the Panama Canal.

LIVING WITH WIFE, SUES FOR HER LOVE

R. McCandless, Paterson Plumber, Demands $50,000 of C. J. Lozier of Ridgefield Park, N.J.

SHE ASKS $10,000 DAMAGES

And Defendant Wants Divorce from Wife Said to Have Eloped with H. Vanderbeck, His Friend.

HACKENSACK, N. J., July 31.—Through his counsel, John M. Ward of Paterson, Robert McCandless, a contracting plumber of that place, has begun a suit to recover $50,000 damages from Cyrus J. Lozier, a contractor of Ridgefield Park, near here, on a charge of alienating his wife's affections. The papers are in the hands of Sheriff Robert N. Heath of Hackensack for service.

Mrs. McCandless also sues to recover $10,000 damages from Lozier for an alleged attack on Dec. 22, 1913. It was explained by Lawyer Ward that the assault was the result of a struggle between Mrs. McCandless and the contractor for possession of certain papers.

"Mr. McCandless says his suspicions of a change in his wife's conduct toward him were aroused about a year ago, but he was not positive until about three months ago, when the family were preparing to move from Ridgefield Park," said Lawyer Ward.

Lozier's wife eloped with Harry Vanderbeck, also a contractor of Ridgefield Park, a few months ago. Vanderbeck was a close friend of Lozier, and was married. The missing couple have not been heard from since they left. It was said they went by automobile to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, but detectives failed to get any trace of them, and Lozier's divorce papers have been returned unserved.

Mrs. McCandless is the mother of two children. When asked if it was not a fact that McCandless and his wife were still living together, and were never estranged, Lawyer Ward said:

CHINA WANTS BIGGER NAVY.

Commission Here to Study Equipment and Submarines.

Frank B. Lord, President of the Washington, D. C., Press Club, who is at the Hotel McAlpin, yesterday morning met the Chinese Naval Commission of eighteen men, headed by Admiral Wei Han, who have come to the United States to make a study of submarines, naval equipment, and navy yards. The commission yesterday arrived in New York from Chicago and left immediately for Groton, Conn., to visit the plant of the Electric Boat Company. Admiral Wei Han, who is chief naval constructor of the Chinese Navy, is a graduate of the French Naval Academy.

"The Chinese Government has become aroused to the advisability of providing an adequate navy," said Admiral Wei Han yesterday, "and this spirit of modern progress which has been manifesting itself in the Chinese people under the régime of the new republic resulted in our coming to America for the purpose of studying your methods of naval construction, and the equipment and management of your navy yards. I am much interested in submarine construction, particularly in view of the efficiency that submarines have demonstrated in the present European war, and chiefly because the coast of China offers specially advantageous conditions for use of boats of this character and the establishment of submarine bases."

Stanley Ransom, son of Captain J. B. Ransom of the White Star liner Baltic, sailed yesterday on the Red Cross steamer Stephano for Halifax. He had been the guest of Dock Commissioner R. A. C. Smith.

Henry Schuits, 41 years old, a janitor of an apartment house at 161 Manhattan Avenue, committed suicide yesterday by hanging himself in the bathroom of his home.

A benefit concert under the auspices of the Associate Alumni of the Rabbi Jacob Joseph School at the Temple Beth-El-Emanuel, at Arverne, will be given on Sunday evening, Aug. 8. There will be addresses by Israel Unterberg, the Rev. Dr. Moses Hyamson, and Samuel I. Hyman.

Michael McGovern, 35 years old, of 237 West 143d Street, an ironworker, was killed on the elevated structure near 155th Street and Eighth Avenue yesterday afternoon by falling across the third rail.

Three men arrested by Lieutenant Costigan in a gambling raid at 174 Sixth Avenue on Friday were held for examination in $1,500 bail each by Magistrate Murphy in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday. They were Jacob Luban of 131 East 116th Street, a witness for the defense in the Becker trial; Louis Dienstag of 101 West 115th Street, and Barney Freeman of 205 Seventh Avenue.

According to comments made in the Police Department yesterday, it is expected that Police Commissioner Woods will ask the Corporation Counsel to appeal from the decision of the Appellate Division in Brooklyn, reinstating former Police Inspector James E. Hussey.

JAPAN CAPTURING FAR EAST TRADE

FRAUD IN GOODS CHARGED

Well-Known Trademarks Said to be Imitated—Range of Activities Unlimited.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SINGAPORE, June 16.—The fact that Japanese commercial houses are taking every conceivable advantage of conditions afforded them as a result of the European war is becoming increasingly apparent to the general business community in the East and rapidly causing grave alarm to British manufacturing interests.

For years previous to the outbreak of hostilities they had endeavored, with little success, to introduce their goods into markets in which European manufacturers specialized. Now that British naval supremacy has eliminated German and Austrian trade from the high seas they have not been slow in availing themselves of the excellent opportunity thus offered to increase their sphere of action and to establish themselves firmly in the market for commodities in which these competitors previously held practically a monopoly. It is also a matter for deep concern on the part of British manufacturers that they have not confined their entire attention to the capturing of enemy trade, but have taken advantage of the strain lately placed on shipping (with the ensuing rise in freight rates) and have seriously encroached on British markets.

The Japanese are nothing if not up to date. Japan of today is not the Japan of twenty-five years ago. Tokio, Yokohama, and all the larger towns are now industrial centres in the true sense of the word. There is no port in the East in which her large companies, such as the Mitsui Bussau Kaisha, do not possess agencies. Moreover, she has a considerable and efficient mercantile marine, a fact which has meant much to Japanese development and which constitutes an additional advantage at the present time by enabling her to undercut European lines at the high freight rates now prevailing. Every indication points to the German and Austrian interests having little, if any, chance of re-establishing themselves after the war. Indeed, it will necessitate a combined effort on the part of the manufacturers of the United Kingdom to prevent this new industrial power from acquiring control of the Eastern markets.

The range of Japan's commercial activities appears to be unlimited. She has even essayed to compete with such an essentially British industry as textiles. Cloths manufactured in Japanese mills are now being marketed in Bombay, Calcutta, Singapore, &c., and are finding a ready sale owing to their low price. Imports of Japanese beer into India for the first quarter of 1915 increased 5,000 per cent. over the similar period of the previous year. She already has the monopoly of rubber latex cups, of which hundreds of thousands are used annually in Ceylon and the Federated Malay States.

Commercial firms in the Far East admit openly that Japanese goods have come to stay. However, it is to be feared that their introduction has not been accomplished along strictly honest lines. Incidents have been brought to light repeatedly during the last few months of the imitation of various copyright trade-marks and shipments of goods are almost universally inferior to samples. A striking instance in this connection is that of a certain brand of cigarette papers manufactured in Austria and marketed under the name of "Racehorse Brand." These papers enjoyed an immense popularity among the natives of the Malay Peninsula, Java, and India, who refused to purchase any other make. This, however, did not affect the dauntless Japanese, for he promptly brought out papers having an identical make-up and identical trademark, correct in every detail, even to the words "Made in Austria" upon the label.

Mrs. Moses-Jetsch's Will Also Forgave Him for Alleged Cruelty.

Mrs. Ella Graves Moses-Jetsch in her will filed yesterday, bequeathed $5 to Robert S. Moses, whom she divorced, and $6,500 to Hans E. Jetsch, whom she subsequently married. The will reads further in referring to Moses:

"And I give him my entire forgiveness for all his cruelties to me during the last ten years."

The estate amounted to about $18,500. There is a bequest of $6,500 to "my beloved friend," Ethel Winifred Chapman of 111 West Eighty-fourth Street. Mrs. Jetsch died on July 1 at the latter address.

SOME MUNITIONS REJECTED.

Belligerents Complain of Supplies Turned Out in America.

Some of the belligerent European Governments are dissatisfied with the munitions that are being made by some of the manufacturers in this country, and in many instances the orders when filled were rejected. Likewise, the slowness with which some of the American contractors have been filling their orders has met with strong disapproval by the War Offices of the Allies.

"The output of private manufacturers of munitions of war," says The Army and Navy Journal in its issue of yesterday, "according to reliable information, is far from satisfactory to European belligerents who have placed contracts in this country. According to the reports, there have been wholesale rejections of some of the more important munitions, and the American concerns are not producing material as rapidly as was anticipated. The chief difficulty is the inexperience of many of the manufacturers who have taken contracts from foreign Governments. They have found that they could not transform automobile and bicycle plants into arsenals as readily as was anticipated. The production of munitions of war is a specialty, and requires Superintendents and men who have had experience in factories producing war material. This condition calls attention to the importance of a policy which we have always urged upon the Government, of encouraging private manufacturers to go into the business of producing ammunition and ordnance materials in time of peace, that they may be prepared for the emergency of war. Many things that the army and navy use require special construction and inspection, and there is no market for them outside of the military establishment. Unless plants are especially built for their production and men are especially trained for the manufacture, it is almost impossible to produce them.

"The United States, with all of its manufacturers, as present experience is proving, cannot produce sufficient war munitions to supply a big army that would be called into service during a war with a first-class power. The military authorities and Congress must give more attention to the encouragement of private manufacturers of munitions of war, instead of discouraging them, as has been the disposition of late years. At present there are very few ordnance experts outside of the army and navy. This accounts for the efforts that private concerns are making to secure the services of officers to enable them to fill their contracts with European nations. They find that it is impossible to comply with all the specifications of foreign military authorities without the assistance and supervision of army or navy officers. The demand for their services at this time is a tribute to the ability and efficiency of the officers in the army and navy."

TO EXAMINE TRUST CO. MEN.

Brokers Get Court Order for Guaranty Officials.

Adolph E. Norden & Co., cotton brokers, got an order from Justice Ford yesterday to examine officers of the Guaranty Trust Company before trial of the brokers' suit for $116,123. The plaintiffs allege that they had a contract with Joseph Simon to sell him a cargo of cotton to be delivered at Bremen. The cotton was loaded on the steamship Pathfinder and arrived at Bremen from Galveston on Jan. 1.

In order to fill the contract the plaintiffs borrowed money from the defendant, giving the cargo as security. Upon its arrival at Bremen it was seized by the Deutsche Bank and sold by the order, it was alleged, of the defendant company. The amount sued for is the profit the plaintiffs would have received if the expected delivery had been made.

MANY FOREIGNERS AT N. Y. U.

Nearly Every Continent Represented at Summer School.

Students from many widely separated quarters of the globe are among the thousand persons attending the present session of the New York University Summer School. An examination of the registration data shows that students from Japan, Sweden, Porto Rico, Africa, Syria, in fact from every continent with the exception of South America and Australia are attending courses.

Porto Rico is represented by Edmund Stevens, of Vego Alti, and Edward A. Bailey, of Manati, both of whom are fruit growers, and are taking advantage of the summer courses to improve their familiarity with the Spanish language. Mr. Bailey is a brother-in-law of Professor James E. Lough, who is the director of the Summer School.

Among the temporary residents from foreign countries is Yohn Nyberg, of Stockholm, Sweden. Mr. Nyberg is an instructor in a Swedish commercial school in Stockholm and is at present studying accounting. Another European city is represented by L. E. Brown Landone, whose permanent address is Paris, while even what was formerly known as German West Africa has a delegate in a Presbyterian missionary.

From the Orient comes Takayi Matsumoto, of Tokio, Japan, who is studying municipal government, while the Levant also has sent an emissary in Edwin C. Adams, from Beirut, Syria.

JUROR'S TALK WON'T FIGURE IN THAW CASE

WOODBURY SO DECIDES

Judge Hendrick Says the Evidence Proved Thaw Sane—Robinson Insists He Was Misquoted.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, July 31.—The Atlantic City interview with David Robinson, the foreman of Justice Peter A. Hendrick's advisory jury in the Thaw case, will not be used by Attorney General Woodbury in the appeal from the decision that Thaw is sane. Correspondence growing out of the interview between Justice Hendrick and Attorney General Woodbury was made public tonight, together with a confidential letter sent to Justice Hendrick.

"In an ordinary lawsuit," Attorney General Woodbury said, "the proper course for an attorney to pursue under these circumstances would be to try to obtain legal proof of the misconduct of the jury for use on a motion for a new trial. In the Thaw habeas corpus case, however, the jury was merely called for the purpose of assisting Justice Hendrick to reach a decision, and, therefore, it is my belief that Justice Hendrick alone was injured by the misconduct of the jurors, if any. Because of this I called Justice Hendrick's attention to the interview."

Justice Hendrick inclosed in his letter replying to that of Attorney General Woodbury, the letter which he received from Juryman Robinson, and after briefly commenting on it wrote:

My belief is that the verdict of the jury expressed the true thought of all of the members of the jury that Thaw was sane at the time of the trial. I would be disposed in any event to investigate the matter, were it not that the verdict of the jury was advisory only, and independently of the jury's findings I believe that upon the evidence adduced upon the trial no decision could be reached other than that Thaw is now sane, I agreed with your observation that if my decision as to Thaw's sanity was reached uncontrolled by the verdict of this advisory jury, although in accord with it, then the misconduct of a juror or a jury would not affect the legality of the decision reached by me. In view of these facts I think no public benefit would accrue from an investigation of the facts in relation to the interviews as published in the papers. I appreciate the tender of the assistance of yourself and of your deputies, should I decide to pursue the matter.

In his letter to the Judge Mr. Robinson said that his conversation at Atlantic City was garbled and made misleading by the "same reporters who misquoted you during the trial." Then he continues:

The most important subject, and which reflects upon me, is that whereas in they said I disregarded your charge. This was absolutely untrue, for my words were "that we had followed your instructions and took everything into consideration." Also, the statement that we never believed Thaw insane at any time is equally untrue. What I did say was that he was legally insane at the time of the commission of the act, but that I believed, from the great mass of evidence presented, that he has been sane ever since. They omitted to state that I considered the New Hampshire alienists outweighing the opinion of Dr. Flint.

In referring to the murder case in Georgia, I said that in that case we, the jury, had discussed the unwritten law at the time. They quote me as saying that this case was discussed in the Thaw jury room, which was also untrue. My judgment was guided entirely throughout the case by the able manner in which you permitted evidence to be given to us, and I am perfectly willing to stand by my decision and action in the case. It was the fairest trial I ever attended, and you may be assured that I could not so forget my duty as a citizen as to make the foolish statements attributed to me.

Charles Basil, Juryman No. 11, concurs in what Mr. Robinson says. Attorney General Woodbury says that Justice Hendrick's letter points out his decision was arrived at independently of the verdict of the jury and leaves the interview with no possible effect upon the appeal by the State.

MARTIN MALONEY SUED.

Artists Sue Papal Marquis for Building Three Altars.

Martin Maloney, a papal marquis and wealthy resident of Philadelphia, was sued in the Supreme Court yesterday by Dennis E. and Edith C. McBride for $3,000. The plaintiffs are artists and sculptors. They allege that Mr. Maloney employed them to carve and build three altars in the Church of the Nativity of Our Lord, in Scranton, Penn., at a cost of $12,000.

They say the agreement was made on Sept. 17, 1913, with the Rev. J. J. Loughran and that later it was canceled through no fault of theirs.

MOVE VETERINARY COLLEGE.

New York University to Extend Its Course of Instruction.

Announcement was made yesterday at New York University that the New York-American Veterinary College, also known as the New York State Veterinary College, would undergo changes in both plan and location in order that it may more efficiently serve the State and the profession of veterinary medicine. The school will be moved at once from West Fifty-fourth Street to the quarters of the University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College at Twenty-sixth Street and First Avenue. The work there can be more closely correlated than in the past with the work of the medical college. A piece of land adjacent to the medical college and belonging to the university has been set aside for the new veterinary building. A portion of the funds necessary for construction is promised.

Another change contemplated is the extension of the course of instruction from three to four years. At the same time, the requirements will probably be raised in order to make the college as efficient as any other veterinary college, and eventually attract the interest of the State Government.

CHAIN STORES WIN RECEIVERSHIP SUIT

Application Against American Five and Ten Cent Concern Is Denied.

NOT JUDGMENT CREDITORS

Complainants Also Have Failed to Get Defendant's Consent, Ruling Sets Forth.

Judge Hand of the Federal Court yesterday refused the application for the appointment of a receiver for the American Five and Ten Cent Stores, Inc., because of the contention of John Holmes, President of the company, that there were no judgments against it. The petitioners were the Peck & Mack Company and four other creditors, with claims aggregating about $3,000. They charge that the defendant company had no money to meet present liabilities and others that soon would be due to the amount of $200,000, and that the only way the creditors could be protected was by the appointment of a receiver with authority to continue the business.

The concern has stores in various cities and is doing a big business. In his opinion Judge Hand said:

"The complainants are not judgment creditors, and the defendant, while not having filed an answer, appears and opposes the appointment of a receiver. The question in applications of this sort is whether the complainant sets forth any ground for equitable relief. Ordinarily the moving party must either be a judgment creditor, or the defendant must consent to the appointment of a receiver, or at least fail to interpose an objection.

"The defendant proposed to contest the application for a receiver on the ground that it was not insolvent, and also that the complainants were not judgment creditors."

Heyn & Covington, attorneys for the defendant corporation, made a statement in which they said:

"According to the financial statement given out by the corporation it is solvent and shows assets amounting to more than $443,000 and liabilities of $218,000. The company has been in need of capital, however, and requires time to pay its creditors. The creditors' committee was organized from among the largest merchandise creditors of the concern and the plan was offered to the creditors by the committee to pay creditors ten per cent. of their claims in cash and give notes for the balance payable every three months until payments were made in full.

"By agreement with the company this committee has full power to examine the books of the company at all times and if in its judgment the committee shall deem it wise to do so this committee shall have power to take court proceedings to wind up the affairs of the company. If the committee shall decide at any time that the earnings of the company are sufficient to warrant earlier payments than those specified, it has power to compel the company to anticipate the payment of the notes outstanding. In view of the facts that creditors of the company are scattered all over the country this offer was mailed to them and the committee has already received the consents of a very large number of creditors and there is but little question that an overwhelming majority of creditors both in number and amount will favor this plan.

"The purpose of the plan as outlined is to continue the business and to preserve the assets without resort if possible to bankruptcy or other similar court proceedings. Most of the members of this committee are well known firms who are opposed to the methods frequently employed of forcing solvent concerns into bankruptcy."

British to Observe War Anniversary

The St. George's Society of New York has sent out letters suggesting that on next Wednesday, the anniversary of the entrance in the war by England, members of the various British societies in this city attend the services of supplication and intercession that are held daily at noon at Trinity Church, Wall Street.

beginning Tomorrow, August 2, and continuing until August 14

The edict from Paris of Fox Furs for the Season of 1915-16 is so decisive as to leave no shadow of doubt.

Some months ago, the Fur market at its lowest price-ebb owing to the European war, we bought very extensively of fine Fox skins.

What we bought could not be duplicated now at anywhere near the prices we paid, and by the opening of the Fur wearing season they will be worth from 50% to 100% more than when we bought them.

A number of these rich, beautiful, full-furred skins we have made up into sets of Muff and Scarf in the latest Paris models. A large number of skins we have on display awaiting your selection and to be made up to special order after seeing the latest models from Paris.

Whether you choose one of the sets already made up, or give your order for a set to be specially made, it will be held for delivery, if desired, until any time you specify before Dec. 1.

We will require only 25% of its purchase price when the order is given and the balance on delivery, or, if you have a charge account, 25% of the purchase price will appear on your August bill, the balance to be charged when delivery is made.

Following are a few examples of styles and prices we quote for this Important Sale

FOX SETS in taupe, battleship gray, Sitka, dyed black or Baum Marten muff and scarf in single animal effect, in four styles of muff, the sets at $37.50

PUBLIC INTEREST

has assumed a new intensity wherever the Packard

has been shown. More than 18,000 persons gave it their personal attention the first four days the car was exhibited in New York City, and its reception in other cities has been correspondingly notable.

It is the absorbing topic wherever engineers gather, and experts, skeptics and enthusiasts are alike in making it the current feature of motor car progress.

It is the logical development of the perfectly balanced "Six" into a lighter, more compact "Twelve," having a uniformity of torque and a smoothness of action hitherto unknown.

In every way, it is representative of the company that has been awarded the only Grand Prize and the First Medal of Honor in the motor vehicle section of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

BRITISH PRIZE COURT FOREGOES VACATION

AMERICAN LAWYERS SILENT

All Pleadings Must Be Made by British Attorneys — Order in Council Quickly Alters Law.

LONDON, July 18, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—A day in the Admiralty Prize Court these days is like being in an American court, the prize docket being crowded with cases involving the seizure of American ships, with American attorneys and witnesses crowding the corridors and the courtroom, the Attorney General, Sir Edward Carson, citing long lists of American cases and textbooks in support of his contentions. Even the Lord Chief Justice of the prie court, the Right Hon. Sir Samuel Evans, is asking questions about American clients, American customs, and sharing the distinct American atmosphere that pervades the courtroom nowadays.

Here in detail is being rehearsed the hundreds of seizures of ships and cargoes which, besides their legal aspect, have developed the most serious political crisis existing between Great Britain and the United States. There have been upward of 600 seizures and detentions of American ships, and the number of cargoes involved is far larger, for each ship carries separate cargoes to different consignees. Many of the cases have been settled, but the large number still at issue have gone through the tedious process of prize court pleadings, and this month began to take their turn in being thrashed out to a final decision before the court itself.

The prize court is one of the labyrinth of buildings making that historic landmark known as the Law Courts, a massive pile of weatherbeaten gray stone, housing all the high courts of England, with the Lord Chief Justice and the long train of lesser dignitaries and the various tribunals.

Great Dignity in Court

The scene within the court as the American cases are heard is one of impressive dignity. The chamber itself is a vast, boxlike structure, with stone floor and walls, great cathedral windows filtering the light dimly, and stained-glass ceiling, seventy feet above. The only touch of brightness is the large, gilded anchor and chains hanging back of the Chief Justice, an emblem of British naval power. Sir Samuel Evans, the presiding Judge, is on a dais ten feet above the level of the solicitors and advocates, all of them, bench and bar, in wigs and gowns. At the left of the Judge sit two officers of the royal merchant marine, in full uniform, known as nautical experts. He consults them frequently on any technical question of navigation or naval construction arising in the cases.

Back of the lawyers are the American attorneys, but unable to say a word as British practice requires all the argument to be presented by officers of the court and British subjects. This has caused some little embarrassment at times when the reserved British barrister did not urge a point with that vehemence that seemed to be warranted by the American legal viewpoint.

Sir Edward Carson, the Attorney General, is the central figure in these cases. He is the famous fiery Irishman from Ulster who leaped into world fame when he organized and armed the Ulster Volunteers and dared the Government to enforce Home Rule on Ulster. Now he is a member of the Government, one of the newly formed coalition Ministry. But there has been nothing fiery in his conduct of the prize cases. He speaks without any oratorical effort. He appears to have little humor, for he looks blankly at Sir Samuel on the bench when the Lord Justice laughs and has a joke.

In the case of the ships Kim and Fridland, carrying American cargoes of rubber, Sir Edward cited many American precedents. One of them was from 3 Wallace, 555, the case of the Bermuda. He read a long paragraph to uphold his contention, and then paused with some apparent triumph that this American case was on all-fours on his side.

"But the next paragraph, which you have not read," said Sir Samuel from the bench, "turns the case against you."

Can't Get Briefs.

The difference between the British and American practice was shown when efforts were made to get a copy of the printed brief and affidavit, which Sir Edward Carson had been reading in open court. In American courts these printed briefs are open to any one. But when application was made to the clerks of the prize court they were amazed. Briefs, they explained, were rigidly secret, never going beyond the solicitors, who guarded them as a matter of professional ethics.

The Registry of the prize court is another vast structure adjoining it, with endless bureaus, through which the American attorneys wander in quest of various branches of their cases, always receiving the greatest courtesy, but always with the mass of tradition and conservatism against quick action. And yet the officials resent any suggestion that there had been any delay in these prize cases, although the American litigants are smarting under what they say is delay. One of the chief officials, Mr. Lovell, Register of Admiralty, said:

"There is absolutely no delay so far as the prize court is concerned. Sir Samuel Evans is sitting early and late. He is going to give up the usual Summer recess of the court, which begins in August, in order to dispose of these cases with the greatest promptness."

One of the British officials who has had most to do with these prize cases said it was manifestly impossible for the political branch of the Government, the Crown, to hurry the legal branch, where the existing law had to be administered according to the existing customs. It would not be expected, for example, he said, that the Executive branch at Washington would try to hurry the United States Supreme Court on political grounds, or in any way outside the usual application for advancement, which, after all, was at the discretion of the court.

Answering this, an American official who has had much to do with the prize cases, said there was an important distinction between the American and British courts, as the former in reality had to administer the existing law according to existing rules, whereas in the prize court the political branch, the Crown, had such power that it could even change existing law to meet new cases. This is done by the process of an Order in Council. He cited the following instance in one of these prize cases:

At a decisive stage of the Wilhelmina case the solicitors for the Crown made the point that a neutral ship could be requisitioned by one of the belligerents. This was laughed at by the attorneys for the American owners, who had Article 39 of the prize law before them, and were ready to go into court the next morning and laugh the Crown solicitors out of court with their own law.

"The solicitors for the Crown appear to have overlooked," they said in the prize court next day, "that Article 39 of the prize law is specific against their contention."

"That was quite true up to 9 o'clock last night," came the quick reply from the Crown solicitors. "But the claimants appear to be unaware that at 9 o'clock last night an Order in Council was signed entirely changing that law."

On inquiry this proved to be the case, a special Order in Council had been made—not the wholesale Order in Council dealing with contraband growing out of the war zone—which had never appeared in the official gazette and which is difficult even now to learn much about. But it fitted this particular case exactly.

MAY BE HELEN D. JENKINS.

Woman in Nathan Allen Smuggling Case Accused Again.

Justice Giegerich of the Supreme Court yesterday appointed Adolph Stein a receiver to ascertain the ownership of $3,000 worth of household furnishings in the warehouse of the Lenox Storage and Transfer Company. The plaintiff is Gustav E. Walter, who obtained in May last a judgment against the alleged owner of the property, Helen Field. Mr. Walter says she is "a notorious woman whose real name is Helen Dwelle Jenkins," and was an associate of Nathan Allen, a wealthy leather manufacturer of Kenosha, Wis.

The plaintiff says the defendant obtained entrance to the apartment house at 253 West Ninety-first Street, in which he is interested, in order to induce him to sell her merchandise. He sold her furnishings and rendered her services to the value of $1,700 and got judgment against her by default, but he never succeeded in having the judgment satisfied. The defendant replied by saying that she did not appear in supplementary proceedings because she was ill from nervous prostration at the time she was subpoenaed, and that the furniture did not belong to her, but to a concern from which she bought it on the installment plan.

In 1909 Helen Dwelle Jenkins was accused of being concerned in a smuggling case with Mr. Allen, a millionaire of Kenosha, and John F. Collins of Memphis, Tenn. It was said that Allen had given to Mrs. Jenkins a $300,000 pearl necklace and other property, including cash to the amount of $500,000 more. She lived then in West Eighty-sixth Street. Customs officers accused the two men on smuggling charges. Allen paid more than $100,000 in fines on various charges and Collins was fined $4,900.

In 1913 Mrs. Jenkins got into the hands of a receiver through a judgment obtained against her for $4,500. She testified then in supplementary proceedings that she was practically penniless.

DR. A. S. McALLISTER QUITS.

It was announced yesterday that Dr. Addams Stratton McAllister had resigned as editor of The Electrical World and that he would also sever his connection with the McGraw Publishing Company tomorrow. No reason for the resignation was given in the announcement.

Dr. McAllister is one of the best known editors of technical publications in this country, is President of the Illuminating Engineering Society, a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, a fellow of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and a member of other technical organizations.

Dr. McAllister is a native of Virginia and is 40 years old. He was an instructor in physics and applied electricity at Cornell University, and was the first man to expound the law of conservation in illumination calculations. He is the author of "Alternating Current Motors," which is used as a text book in many technical institutions. He holds several patents for alternating current machinery.

WANTS ALL ICE WEIGHED.

Commissioner Joseph Hartigan of the Bureau of Weights and Measures gave orders yesterday to Inspectors in his department to enforce strictly the law requiring the sale of ice by weight.

The Commissioner said he was starting a campaign to collect $50 fines for violations.

"The public is in the habit of buying ice not by weight but by the piece. People usually take a five-cent piece or a ten-cent piece, apparently unconcerned about its weight, so long as the size is satisfactory and it will fit into the icebox."

The Commissioner was enthusiastic over his "Honest Weights Week," recently closed. One result, he said, was the formation of a Weights and Measures League, which already has enrolled 61,000 persons. The purpose is to bring together the consumer and the merchant in an effort to establish correct information concerning prices. The league, too, will try to introduce into the schools a course whereby the pupil will learn "the benefits derived from honest dealing and the advantages of maintaining a standard of sixteen ounces to the pound and three feet to the yard."

AUTOS SLOW TO SPERRY.

Aviator So Used to Flying Fast, Motor "Seemed to Crawl."

Lawrence Sperry, the young Brooklyn inventor and aviator, who makes frequent flights over the city and harbor from the Brooklyn Navy Yard, was charged in the Adams Street Court yesterday with overspeeding his automobile on the Brooklyn approach to the Manhattan Bridge. Patrolman Van Cleef of the motor cycle squad told Magistrate Voorhees that Sperry's auto was running at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour. The aviator seemed astonished at this.

"Why, I can hardly believe it," said he. "You see, I am used to flying through the air at sixty or seventy miles an hour, and it seemed to me that the automobile was just crawling along, so to speak."

The hearing was adjourned until Tuesday.

RECORD IN WEDDING CHAPEL

All records for the number of marriages performed in one month at the Marriage Chapel in the Municipal Building, were broken with the month ending yesterday. The total was 731. Forty-four couples were married by Aldermen William F. Quinn of Manhattan and Frederick Smith of Brooklyn yesterday. There is only one day record in which this total was excelled.

The cost of the service at the Chapel is the 10 cents which is paid for the revenue stamp on the marriage certificate.

HAILSTORM GIVES TEXAS A FISH DINNER

OLD SETTLER SAYS IT'S TRUE

He Ought to Know, for He's Watched Stream Grow Up from a Creek to a River.

Colonel Zebulon Taylor from "the Panhandle," as he signed himself on the register, was talking at the Waldorf yesterday about things down in his part of the country.

He said the people of Texas were recovering from the cotton difficulty and were making up in other crops what they had lost in that staple. The fact that beef and horses were enjoying an unprecedented demand was also acting as a sort of "Balm in Gilead" in these trying war times. From these dry topics he switched soon to matters of greater interest.

"A peculiar thing happened recently down in my section of the State," he said, "and though this is the first time I've ever heard of it, I understand that it happens right along.

"You know, there's a little river down there called the Rio Bravo. It ain't much of a stream at best, but there's always plenty of water in it and, what's more, it's chock full of fish. There's catfish, yellow bellies and other kinds. Whenever they can, the cowmen camp along the Bravo on account of the fresh fish for breakfast, as well as the water.

"But those fish have been having a bad time. One time last year when some irrigation sharps tried to swing a dam across the river, the fish got spread all over the county and there was a terrible mortality. Along came one of those sudden rains and the dam backed the water up and it flowed all over the countryside, taking scads of fish with it. When the flood went down—most of it went down into the soil—the fish were left stranded high and dry. Of course, the dam went out and was never put back. Several bunches of cowmen along the river had fresh fish just for picking them up. What they didn't use were eaten by the buzzards.

"This was bad enough, but the real trouble, the one I was going to tell about, happened just before I came North. We had what was the worst storm I ever saw, and I've been living round those parts for a good many years.

"It came up suddenly and, after the main part of the heavy artillery was over, it just naturally got down to business, and there never was so much rain since the Flood. It only rained for about three hours, but it came down by the barrel. Everything seemed afloat and we had near four feet in the cellar.

"Well, the Bravo flows through soft soil, and this was the cause of the tragedy that happened. The heavy drops of rain, coming down so hard, washed mud and silt into the river until it looked like a long strip of chocolate. It's slow enough at best, but the muddy water seemed to stand still. As sometimes happens, the rain was followed by a short but very hard hailstorm. The hailstones rippled on the water like buckshot from a ten-bore. They were most as big as eggs—of course, I'm not saying ostrich eggs or even hen's eggs, but they were as big as the eggs of a pigeon, almost. In fact, when I stuck my head out of the window to see how the storm was going, those hailstones stung me right hard and I was glad to get back out of the wet.

"When the hail quit, and it only lasted about fifteen minutes, the sun came out as usual. My little boy went out to paddle in the wet, and pretty soon he comes in and asks if he can go down to the river. He says that all the other boys are bringing home just loads of fish. I thought that was funny and I told him he could go and that I'd go along, and I did.

"When we reached the Bravo I was plumb surprised to see that there were heaps of fish floating on the surface and the small boys were wading in and getting them. Some were fishing them out with poles, and they all were getting more than they could carry away.

"This was the most peculiar thing I ever saw, and I started right out to investigate. I examined the fish, and found that most of them were stunned, and would come to life if left in the water. Besides that, I saw hundreds of fish sticking their snouts above water and then disappearing.

"Just as I was trying to puzzle it out along came Old Joe, who has lived along the Bravo longer than any one knows. He says he arrived there when the river was a creek, and watched it grow up, but you can't always believe all he tells. I told him what I was studying about, and he began to laugh at me.

"'Why, that's nothing unusual,' he says. 'After 'most every hailstorm you'll find stunned fish on the river. That is, if there's been a heavy rain before and the river is full of mud. Don't you know why that is? You're educated, and you don't know that?'

"I told him that it was bye me, and after I gave him a smoke he sat down and explained it. 'You see those fish sticking their snoots up out of the water?' he said. 'Well, they're coming up for air. The water is muddy, and they can't breathe well. You never see them do that when it is clear, do you?' I said that I had never seen them do it before, no matter how the water was. 'Of course you didn't,' he answered, 'because you are never along the river when it's raining. You see, the river runs so slow that all the mud that comes down from the sides makes the water so dirty and thick that the fish can't get enough air. There's only one thing for them to do, and that's to get to the surface and save themselves from drowning or suffocation.

"'Now, what happened today was this: When the water thickened up the fish just naturally had to come to the top and get a snoot of wind. The whole surface was covered with their bobbing heads when the rain stopped, and bing! down comes the hailstones like a shot from a gun. The fool fish don't have sense enough to know their danger, and that's where they get theirs. Every time a hailstone hits a fish he's down and out and stunned, knocked dead! Has to take the count.

"'When the hail quits and the sun comes out all the stunnned fish are there floating belly-up on the top, and the kids come down to the river and get them for supper. That's the way it happens, Colonel, and it's true, too!'

"I was surprised, but it sounded reasonable," Colonel Taylor assured his auditors. "Anyway, it sounded a whole lot more reasonable than some of Old Joe's natural history. Furthermore, the fish were there—I saw them myself—and I found that every one else believed that was how they got there. Of course, there are some things about Texas that are hard to believe; but this, you will admit, is right reasonable."

RIGHT OF ARMS EMBARGO.

Austrian Diplomat Holds That It Would Not Be Unneutral.

Under the caption "Austrian diplomat on the shipment of ammunition" the German Information Service has issued an article dealing with the munition trade of the United States, written by Dr. Heinrich Lammash, a member of The Hague Tribunal and also of the Austrian House of Lords.

"The justification for the publication of the American note," says Dr. Lammash, "on the ground that an embargo would be a violation of neutrality is hardly to be believed in that form. Such a thesis, at least, would be new in international law. True, according to the existing rules of international law, no power is compelled to prohibit the export of weapons and ammunition, but at the same time every state is also justified to issue such an embargo. It is true that no nation with greater tenacity and consistency has opposed the issue of such embargo than has the United States. In 1793 Secretary of State Jefferson, in a note to the British Minister in Washington, declared: 'Our citizens always had the right to produce weapons, sell, and export the same. It can hardly be kept in mind that they should be stopped in their business, perhaps, their only means of subsistence, because in foreign regions war is going on. This would be a burden in principle and impossible in practice.' Jefferson's successors followed these principles. But they always kept in mind the interest of the American industry and American commerce, but it never was sustained on the ground that an embargo would be a violation of American neutrality. In fact, such reasoning would be in contradiction of the spirit of the laws of neutrality as set forth in Article 7 of the two Hague Conventions as to the rights and duties of neutrals. With the idea of neutrality this argument would be in conflict, for how can a state more completely show its noninterference than by withholding support of the contending parties and prohibiting its citizens from doing the same? A number of leading authorities, for example, Hautefville, held that only through such an embargo true neutrality is conserved. A power, therefore, like the United States, which is interested in the re-establishment of peace and constantly emphasizes this wish, has all reason to issue such an embargo which would lead to a shortening of the war. A positive law is unable to prevent the union from doing this, for, according to Article 7 of The Hague Convention, no neutral nation is prevented from placing an embargo on weapons and ammunition of use to one or other of the belligerents. Whether the neutral State makes use of its undoubted right to prohibit such export is one of national tact."

SUES MORSE FOR $1,050,000.

A new complaint has been filed in the Federal Court in the suit of the Manhattan Navigation Company against the Hudson Navigation Company and Charles W. Morse for treble damages aggregating $1,050,000, on the ground that the defendants were guilty of violating the law against monopoly and restraint of trade and commerce. The first complaint was criticised by Judge Lacombe of the Federal Court, and the criticism resulted in the filing of the new complaint.

The present accusation against the defendants alleges that Morse, during 1914, repeatedly urged and solicited creditors and stockholders of the plaintiff company to extend it no further credit and to take such action as would result in throwing the company into the hands of a receiver, and so destroy its business. It also alleges:

"In consequence of the unlawful and corrupt conspiracy participated in by the defendants, the Manhattan Navigation Company has been injured and damaged to the amount of $350,000."

Under the Sherman law treble damages may be asked for.

MORE ARMY RESIGNATIONS.

Ten of the Best Ordnance Experts Have Left the Service.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Major Wilford J. Hawkins of the Coast Artillery, stationed at the Sandy Hook proving grounds, and Captain Walter M. Wilhelm, also of the Coast Artillery, and assigned to the arsenal at Philadelphia, have resigned from the army to take places with munitions manufacturers.

Secretary Garrison will accept their resignations in accordance with his announcement some time ago that the country might eventually be benefitted by having its army officers develop munitions plants.

There is also pending before the Secretary the resignation of Lieutenant John J. Thomas of the Coast Artillery Corps and the application of Lieut.-Col. Tracy C. Dickson for retirement. So far ten of the best experts of the Ordnance Department have retired or resigned from the service.

Lion Bite Poisons Snyder.

Head Keeper William Snyder of the Central Park Zoo, who was bitten three weeks ago by a two-year-old lion which he was taking from a cage to send to the Prospect Park Zoo in Brooklyn, was threatened with a serious case of blood poisoning from the injury and has been under treatment by physicians at the Presbyterian Hospital. He has, however, continued right along with his duties at the Central Park Zoo and is now practically out of danger.

MUSHROOM HOUND RIVALS TRUFFLE HOG

FINDS THE FRUIT BY SCENT

Picknickers So Interested That Tramp Steals Their Chocolate-Drop Luncheon.

Three young women students of the Columbia Summer School went picnicking yesterday in the Bronx woods. They took with them three novels by a popular department store author, one large box of chocolates, a negligible amount of nut sandwiches, some cream puffs, and a large quantity of iced tea.

Besides a varied assortment of mosquito bites they brought back the story of their experience, which they related last night to some friends. Today, in all probability, they are hopping mad because their friends, who were slightly incredulous last night, are now openly disbelievers.

The young ladies, begged prettily that their names be sacred. Therefore they can only be designated by their physical peculiarities. Their friends call them "The Three Graces," and they are, respectively, tall and meek, short and very assertive, and the last is otherwise, or medium.

Naturally, the little one had her way when they reached the woods yesterday, and they soon left the beaten paths and dived into the more or less unexplored regions. Soon they found a lovely, shady bank, and after helping the tall sister unload the provender they fell to reading the exciting, thrilling, fascinating, and devilish novels. This is where they started their own story.

"We were having the loveliest time," said the little one, "when suddenly we heard a queer noise. It was just as though some one were creeping up on us. We listened and heard the stealthy approach, and we began to be alarmed. I remembered my police whistle and then remembered also that I had left it at home.

"Just as the suspense became intolerable we heard a peculiar whine, followed by two sharp barks.

"'It's a dog,' I said, and we all breathed freely again. But then came the rumble of a man's voice and our blood again froze. It was a pleasant voice, though, and its owner seemed to be petting the dog.

"Finally the voice died out and the man seemed to be going away. Then we all got curious, and as soon as we felt that he was far enough away not to have seen us we stealthily got up and peered through the bushes. A short way off we saw a bent and bearded man, with his eyes on the ground, attentively following a large brown dachshund, one of those German badger hounds. The dog scuttled to and fro, covering as much ground as possible. He kept his nose to the ground and wagged his tail frantically. We watched closely and decided that he was hunting something.

"Just as we made up our minds the dog stopped short, his body grew rigid, his tail stood straight up like a signal, and he gave a long whine followed by two sharp barks. His master caught up to him and then came the most curious thing of all. He quickly stooped, and, after an effort, extracted something from the ground from right under the dog's nose, and slipped it into his bag. Then he petted the dog and off they went again.

"This was too much for us. We just had to know what it was all about and we went after them. The dog went through the same movements, to and fro, back and forth, for a time, and then again came a short bark and his master added to his bag.

"We were now in a little valley and the performance was repeated over and over again, the man, after each addition to his booty, patting the dog on the head and making much of him.

"We probably never would have known what he was finding if I had not slipped on a mossy rock and had a nasty fall. It frightened me so that I screamed just a little scream, and both the man and dog turned around and saw us."

Here the tall and meek student, who had been following the tale with affirmative nods, took up the narration.

"He was the nicest old man," she said. "He came right over to us and asked what was the matter and offered to give us any help we might want. We told him nothing really was the matter and started talking to him. Pretty soon I got courage enough to ask him what he was doing and what his dog was hunting. He smiled and said, 'Mushrooms, of course!' We were as much in the dark as ever, and then he explained.

"'When I was at home in Normandy,' he said, 'I used to hunt truffles with my hogs. We would start out on a nice day, and if the fields had not been hunted over before, soon we would have many, oh, many, truffles. Then these I would take to market. It was a good business, yes, very good. I was kinder than my neighbors, though. They would make their hogs hunt, hunt, hunt all day long, and then when they had gathered all the truffles they would drive the poor animals back to their pens and never, never give them even one of the truffles they had rooted so hard for. I was kinder. Each night when we came back I would give a truffle to each hog. Soon they knew that they would be rewarded, and would run home, ah, so fast, and wait for me to arrive with their little treat.

"'But now they do not hunt the truffles at home. No, the Germans have eaten the hogs and the truffles are going to waste, except where the soldiers dig them for themselves.

"'When I came to this country and went to live in the Bronx, I soon learned that the woods were full of mushrooms. I used to go and hunt for them, and I found very many. But I am an old man, and my back used to get tired and I missed many—my eyes are not so good as they were. Then I remembered my beloved truffle-hunting hogs, and one day it came to me that I might be able to train one to hunt mushrooms. I tried, but it was a failure. He would run away from me, and when he found the mushrooms would eat them all up. Then I thought of a dog. A dog would not eat mushrooms, and soon I bought this little dog, Charlemagne. Soon did he learn! In a very short time he knew what was wanted. I taught him to know the difference between the mushrooms and the poisonous toadstools—he tells them by their odor. Now, when I get home with my bag full, I always throw them on the floor and let him smell them over. Invariably, if I have made a mistake, he finds the toadstools and noses them out from among the others. So that is why you see us today hunting mushrooms. Charlemagne does all the hunting, and all I have to do is to pick them up. Between us we get more than any two people can find, and my mushrooms are always welcome at the market.'"

For a moment there was silence, and then she turned to the third girl and told her to tell "what else happened yesterday."

So the third one, who was neither tall nor short, told of the real tragedy of the day.

"We asked the nice old man and his mushroom hound to come and share our lunch and he was quite willing. So were we, and I just knew that Charlemagne would like a chocolate. So we started back to our little retreat, but when we got there our hearts were broken.

"Some horrid tramp had taken all our good things to eat and made off with them! Everything was gone, except the books! Even the box of chocolates! The books were just where we'd put them down except that one had a fly-leaf torn out. This was stuck on a twig and the wretched thief had written 'Thanks, ladies' on it with blue pencil! The nice old man laughed when we explained what had happened, and then just to show how really nice he was, he took us where we could buy some lunch."

Form New Synagogue on West Side.

A new liberal Jewish congregation, to be known as "The New Synagogue," is being founded on the west side in the Broadway-West End Avenue section by Rabbi Ephraim Frisch, now of Temple Israel, Far Rockaway, N. Y. A hundred representative families are already associated with The New Synagogue. These include Victor David Brenner, the sculptor; Morris D. Waldman, director of the United Hebrew Charities; Menko H. Wolfe, Dr. Marcus A. Rothschild, John Levy, Joseph Shay, Samuel Lovenberg, and others. The temporary officers are Morris H. Rothschild, Chairman, 200 Beaver Street; Jerome Wile, Treasurer, 160 Fifth Avenue; J. L. Frankel, Secretary, 95 Fifth Avenue. Clarence Adler, the pianist, is to be the organist. The synagogue will open on the Jewish New Year's, Sept. 8.

AUTOMOBILES NOW FOR SUB-FIRE CHIEFS

TO SAVE $400 A YEAR EACH

Motorization of the Department Going on Rapidly — Will Be Completed in 1917.

The Battalion Chiefs of the Fire Department are in the future to travel to and from fires in up-to-date auto runabouts instead of in the familiar horse-drawn buggies. Commissioner Adamson has just closed a contract for twenty motor runabouts. The department is to pay $423 for each of them. They can be maintained at a cost of less than $200 a year. Each Battalion Chief at present requires two horses for his needs, and each of these horses costs the department $300 a year to feed and stable.

The motorization of the department is going on rapidly. Many of the horse-drawn fire engines have been converted into motor-driven engines by equipping them with tractor engines. In December, 1914, there were 1,167 fire horses. The previous year there were 1,341 horses. The department is getting rid of them at the rate of 200 a month. If the necessary funds are provided the completion of motorization will be accomplished by the end of 1917. Last year the city appropriated $380,000 for mbtor fire apparatus.

Already much work has been done in the way of motorization. Stalls have been removed from many fire houses, gasoline storage tanks have been installed, and floors strengthened. Fire houses which were illuminated with gas have now been electrified. This extensive work has been done without an interruption to the service of any of the companies.

The department is being equipped with three classes of motor apparatus. These are: Tractor engines, high pressure auto hose wagons, each of which will save the department $250 a year, and gasoline motor-driven engines with a pumping equipment.

These are busy days for the Automobile Training School which the department has established in its repair shops at Fifty-sixth Street and Twelfth Avenue. Young firemen with a mechanical bent are sent to the school, where they receive a six weeks' course of instruction in the working parts of motors. The school is in charge of Battalion Chief James Henry. Chief Henry takes his charges out daily in a motor truck, and gives them practical instruction in auto driving. In this way the department is training and developing chauffeurs.

An exceedingly high standard for its chauffeurs has been set by the department. Before a man can act as such he must have passed successfully the severest of tests. The department requires chauffeurs to be absolutey perfect. If the chauffeur of a motor apparatus runs into a fence or vehicle he is immediately put under charges, and he must show that it was not through his negligence that the accident occurred.

Fire officials assert that the superiority of the motor apparatus to the horse has been clearly demonstrated. The motors have been found to be much faster than the horses. It has been demonstrated that they can navigate the streets in heavy snowstorms and with the improvement in auto building they do not break down easily. Then it has been estimated that the motorization of the department will save the city thousands of dollars. The fire horses when discarded are sold at auction. Those placed on the auction block thus far have brought good prices. Many of the horses have been purchased by farmers.

SHOT IN ROW OVER WOMAN.

BIVALVE, N. J., July 31.—During a quarrel over a woman last night Richard Lacy, it is charged, shot and probably fatally wounded Robert Gaff. Lacy was arrested. It is alleged Lacy made remarks about Mrs. Mabel Stevens, who is Gaff's housekeeper, that were distasteful to Gaff, and that took Gaff and Mrs. Stevens to Lacy's home at 10 o'clock last night.

They were ordered away by Lacy, who after many words threatened to shoot if they did not leave his premises. Gaff demanded an apology, and said he would not leave until satisfied. Lacy, it is charged, fired twice. The second shot entered Gaff's stomach. He is in the Millville Jail, and it is said he cannot live. Lacy was taken to the Bridgeton Jail.

GAIN OF $2,600,000 IN GOLD RESERVES

Federal Bank Settlement Fund Has Now Passed the $50,000,000 Mark.

AGRICULTURAL PAPER OFF

Drops to About 8 Per Cent. of the Paper Holdings—Acceptances Increase.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—The Federal Reserve Board's statement shows a gain in total gold reserves of about $2,600,000, the larger gain at the New York bank being partially offset by net withdrawals of gold, mainly from the Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and Minneapolis banks. An increase of $3,700,000 is shown in the gold settlement fund, which for the first time is in excess of $50,000,000, while gold in vaults shows a decrease of about $1,000,000. The total cash reserve of the system declined about $1,200,000, Chicago, St. Louis, and Minneapolis reporting the largest losses of cash for the week.

The amount of rediscounted paper held by the banks shows a slight increase, each of the Southern banks reporting a further gain over the figures of the preceding week. Acceptances on hand increased about $1,300,000, and constitute at present 28.5 per cent. of the combined total of the two classes of paper held by the banks, as against 28.2 per cent. shown for the previous week. All the banks holding this class of paper, except Philadelphia, report larger figures than the week before. Of the total amount of paper held 29.6 per cent. matures within thirty days, as against 30.3 per cent. reported the week before. The proportion of paper maturing within sixty days shows an increase from 62.8 per cent. to 62.1 per cent. The holdings of agricultural and livestock paper show a further decline and constitute at present less than 8 per cent. of the total amount of paper as against 13.9 per cent. reported about the beginning of the month.

No changes are reported in the amount of United States bonds held. Municipal warrants on hand show an increase for the week of about $1,000,000, New York and Philadelphia reporting the largest gains. The combined total of bills and investments stands now at $64,800,000 and constitutes 119.5 per cent. of combined capital of the banks, as against 115.3 per cent. for the previous week.

The aggregate capital of the banks shows an increase of about $11,000, which is due mainly to the shifting of accounts as the result of transfers of member banks from one district to another. Net deposits increased over $5,000,000, Boston, New York, Chicago, and St. Louis accounting for practically the entire increase.

Federal Reserve agents report a total of $136,600,000 of reserve notes received from the Controller of the Currency, and a total of $97,800,000 issued to the banks. Against the latter amount they hold $81,400,000 of gold and $16,800,000 of commercial paper. The banks report $85,100,000 of notes in circulation and a net liability thereon of $15,000,000.

BOSTON, July 31.—Attorneys for the plaintiffs today filed in the Supreme Judicial Court amendments to the bill of Ralph S. Bartlett and other minority stockholders against the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, and the Directors of that corporation who served between the years 1903 and 1909.

The plaintiffs seek to have the individual defendants ordered to pay to the corporation $102,000,000, which amount it is asserted they unwisely and illegally expended in acquiring steam and street railway lines and steamship enterprises.

The amendments are designed to meet the objections of the full bench of the Supreme Court, which on the original action decided that the plaintiffs could not, as minority stockholders, sustain a bill until it was shown that the directors, after reasonable notice, had failed to act.

The amended bill avers that the withdrawal of funds of the corporation by its directors for the purposes specified, made them liable as trustees or quasi trustees; and as establishing that the directors had refused to act, cites a resolution adopted by the board on January 21 last, providing that no suits should be brought against any Directors of the company, or their representatives, upon any of the grounds stated by attorneys for the plaintiffs or presented in the bill already filed by them in the Supreme Court.

B. & M. HAS UNITY PLAN.

CONCORD, N. H., July 31.—It was made known today that representatives of the Boston & Maine Railroad and its leased lines had agreed upon a bill for the amalgamation of the properties which would be submitted to the New Hampshire Legislature in the event that Governor Spaulding decided to call a special session. The bill, if accepted by the full conference board on Monday, will be presented to the Directors of all the corporations interested for ratification.

The plan calls for the retirement of the floating indebtedness of the Boston & Maine and the raising of adequate floating capital by stock assessment or otherwise. It is understood that Governor Spaulding will have to be convinced that a bill embodying these provisions will have a fair chance of passage before he consents to a special legislative session.

The Matches Stayed Good.

So far as is known, nothing has been written of an authoritative nature dealing with the longevity of friction matches. This is probably due to the fact that the average person thinks only of a match as an article for "immediate consumption." At any rate, American manufacturers and many foreign producers of matches would hardly have the temerity to guarantee the usefulness of their products for a period covering a quarter of a century. Yet, the other day, while De Witt P. Dutcher, Chief Clerk of the Board of General Appraisers, was rummaging among some old samples deposited with the board as representative of merchandise importations, he ran across several boxes of friction matches made in Germany. They had been filed away and forgotten for twenty-five years. To the Chief Clerk's surprise, the matches when put to the test proved as serviceable as if turned out of the factory the day before. Mr. Dutcher said yesterday that he considered the durability of the matches in all this time a fine tribute to the thoroughness and care of the German manufacturers in putting up their product.

Hinders American Business.

Several complaints have been received, reports Commercial Attaché William C. Downs from Melbourne, Australia, that the failure of American manufacturers promptly to confirm transactions which have been closed by cable leaves the agents in Australia in doubt as to whether all the conditions of the transaction are clearly understood, and whether everything is in order, not only as regards the prices stipulated, terms and conditions, but also the time of shipment. It should be impressed upon American manufacturers that cables sent or received should be confirmed by letter on the date on which they were sent or received, in order that any misunderstanding which might arise from the use of codes, which do not always express the meaning in exact language, may be promptly corrected.

SPECULATORS HOLD PIG IRON FOR RISE

Most of the 300,000 Tons Bought Last Spring at $12 Is Now Selling at $14.

BOOM IN STEEL CONTINUES

Leading Interest Said in Pittsburgh to be Trying to Check Inordinate Jump in Prices.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, July 31.—The Eastern section of the United States is feeling the effect of a boom in steel and iron. Not so the West, however. That section must be content with the overflow. Exports figure more in the boom than does domestic demand. There is some fear is expressed of a runaway market. Prices are advancing rapidly and some effort is being made by the Steel Corporation to restrain them.

More light is being shed on the big sales of pig iron by the Buffalo furnaces during April and May when more than 300,000 tons were disposed of within a few weeks. It seems that much of it was purchased by speculators, many of whom are holding it for a big rise. One furnace operator purchased 60,000 tons for his own account, paying $12 per ton. Another manufacturer of locomotives bought 10,000 tons for a rise. He believes that before the end of the year he will be able to sell at around $30 per ton.

Sales of pig iron during the grand clean-up were made as low as $11.50 per ton. Now the same iron is selling around $14 per ton. Bessemer iron has gone to $14.25 and $14.50, Valleys, with prospects of reaching $15 within a short time. Basic pig is held at $13.50 to $13.75 and large sales are reported around these figures. Bessemer is closely held and is expected to advance more rapidly than other grades of pig iron. Foundry is selling at $13.75 to $14. Inquiries are many and sales more numerous than have been noted for several years past.

Every available blast furnace in the country which is idle is being got ready for an early start. The furnaces that can only be operated when iron is exceptionally high will also be put in operation. The output of the country is on the basis of about 30,000,000 tons a year. By the opening of the third quarter, several million tons will be added to the capacity.

Southern Pig Iron Being Exported.

Exports of pig iron are increasing. Italy is taking cargoes as rapidly as they can be loaded. Spain has also purchased some iron in the United States, but reports as to the quantity have been exaggerated. Some Southern iron is being shipped abroad, relieving that part of the country which has been hampered by under consumption.

Reports to the effect that large quantities of rifles are to be manufactured in this country for almost all of the belligerent nations contain more fact than fancy.

Steel billets have been sent upwards during the week and buyers are willing to pay as high as $25 in some instances. The market nominally stands at $22 to $22.50 per ton for open hearth and Bessemer billets, but no sales are reported in this district at these prices. Less than a month ago billets were selling at $19.50.

As billets go upward so will all lines of finished steel. Plates, now held at 1.30c, structural shapes 1.25c to 1.30c, steel bars at 1.30c to 1.35c, are likely to advance from $1 to $2 per ton.

Steel bars continue the centre of attraction in finished steel lines. Fully 500,000 tons are required for shells and shrapnel that have not been contracted for. Mills are so filled with this class of work that it is difficult to find takers and the orders will have to be split among many small mills to be filled. Steel bars have reached 1.35c, although some mills continue to quote 1.30c, but are not accepting orders except from old customers. The Carnegie Steel plants, Jones & Laughlin, and other steel companies in this section are operating their bar mills to capacity. Bar iron has gone up $1 a ton.

There is a big demand for high-grade steel bars to be used in the manufacture of rifles.

Car Builders Are After Plates.

Plate mills are working at 90 per cent., with orders months ahead. Car builders are entering the market for plates, which added to what shipbuilders have already contracted for, will keep the plate mills operating comfortably for the next three months on existing orders. Plates are due for another advance. Domestic demand is supplemented by large orders from abroad for steel cars, most of which are being built in this city.

Structural mills are operating to better advantage at better prices. Some of the shape mills are being used to roll billets, as are also rail mills that otherwise would be idle. Erectors who have been bidding extremely low on buildings are beginning to advance their bids because of the rise in the price of steel.

Wire manufacturers of this district continue to refuse orders for barbed wire. Plain wire and nails can be had in any quantity. Mills are working to capacity. Considerable export is being done but is hampered by shipping facilities.

The sheet market shows a better tone. Galvanized sheets continue erratic and there is no way of gauging the market. It is anticipated that there will be a large demand for sheets among the warring nations when they prepare for the winter campaign.

Tin plate mills continue working at 100 per cent., with a somewhat better demand from home canneries and can manufacturers. The export trade is taking care of all the plates not used at home and as the canning season advances higher prices can be looked for. Tin plates are quoted from $3.15 to $3.25, while export orders bring five to ten cents more.

The scarcity of ferro manganese continues acute. While substitutes are being resorted to, prices have gone up on these, making many prohibitive. Imports from Great Britain continue meagre.

BATHTUB MURDERER TO DIE.

Smith's Appeal Fails, and He Is to be Hanged on Aug. 13.

LONDON, July 31.—His appeal having been denied, the hanging of George Joseph Smith was today set for Aug. 13 at Maidstone Prison.

Smith was convicted on July 1 on the charge of murdering three of his wives while they were in their baths, for the purpose of collecting insurance money on their lives.

Dress Goods and Labor.

The possibility that there may still be trouble in the coat and suit trade has had a disturbing effect on the sale of dress goods. The manufacturers are pursuing directly opposite courses. Some are determined to wait upon the course of events and complete filling their Fall requirements only when the situation has cleared up. Another group is inclined to rush orders in the hope of gaining a good start before anything serious develops. There is no change to be reported in the nature of the demand for dress goods outside of this, the same fabrics still maintaining their favored positions. Jobbers who are operating quietly for next Spring are understood to be placing very fair-sized orders with the mills.

POSTAL CUTS RATE ON PRESS WIRES

50 Per Cent. Reduction on Night Leased Lines Starts Tomorrow.

BIG SAVING TO NEWSPAPERS

Announcement Indicates Commencement of a Rate War with the Western Union.

The Postal Telegraph-Cable Company yesterday announced a 50 per cent. reduction in the rates for press night leased wires, to take effect tomorrow. The official statement given out from the Postal offices, 253 Broadway, said:

Charles C. Adams, Vice President of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, in charge of the Traffic Department, states that on Monday, Aug. 2, that company will make a 50 per cent. reduction in its leased wire rate to the press at night throughout the country.

The cut means many tens of thousands of dollars savings to newspaper and press associations of America, it is said. It is estimated that the reduction will affect upward of 75,000 miles of wires, although it was stated that the exact figure is problematical because many wires used at night for press purposes are used for commercial messages in the daytime. The flat Postal rate at present for leased wires is $10 a year a mile. Cutting this to $5 means that a newspaper having a leased Postal wire between New York and Chicago would save approximately $5,000 a year on the lease cost.

Although Mr. Adams and other Postal officials refused to discuss the change further than to refer to the official statement, it is believed that the move marks a change in policy on the part of the Postal. In the last year the company has not been known as aggressive in obtaining leased wire business. In October of 1914 it was announced that the company would give up the leased wire business with private concerns, referring specifically to brokers. Critics of the company charged at an Interstate Commerce Commission hearing in April at the Hotel Bresslin that the company had not given up all of its business of leasing wires to business houses. It was commonly understood that officials of the Postal were willing to have the Interstate Commerce Commission make a ruling against leased wires to business houses. This, however, would not have affected the newspaper wires, it was said.

While the Western Union has a majority of the newspaper leased wire business of the United States, the Postal's new order means a benefit to scores of big newspapers. It is also taken to mean that the Postal has begun a rate war on the Western Union in an effort to win over a larger part of the press leased wire business.

The Associated Press, has 28,000 miles of leased wires of which 4,000 miles are leased from the Postal. The great gainer by the reduction will be the big morning newspapers which maintain leased wires from Washington and New York, from State capitals, and other news centres.

Newcomb Carlton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, was told last night of the Postal announcement, and asked if he regarded it as the beginning of a rate war by the Postal.

"This is the first I have heard of it," he replied. "You cannot expect me to discuss it until I find out just what it amounts to."

Mr. Carlton refused to say whether the Postal cut would be met by a reduction in the Western Union scale.

In view of the announcement of Mr. Adams, interest attaches to the annual report of Clarence H. Mackay, President of the Postal, made Feb. 16, 1915, in which he predicted a general increase in telegraph rates, analogous to the increase in railroad rates, because of the increased cost of operation, labor, and materials. In his report he said that certain decreases in telegraph rates in certain classes of service the past several years had been without justification.

Tones from your Record that you never heard before

YES, it is true that the Aeolian-Vocalion voices new music beauties from your records—beauties you never knew they possessed!

Put a record in this Aeolian-Vocalion—this "tonal phonograph whose voice is Art." Let us take Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody, interpreted by many instruments. It will be a difficult test.

Soft, deep, profoundly mystic, the sombre traceries of tone wave forth. And as they unfold from the Aeolian-Vocalion you feel a strange solemnity. You recognize new, fresh-born, living qualities of tone. Now the bass tuba sounds—so low that you hear it phonographically reproduced for the first time. Now the wistful flutes throat unmistakably their purities of clear wood-tone—that "woody" quality before unuttered by a phonograph. Never have you heard such delicate distinction between instrument and instrument upon a phonograph—never such subtle tonal tints. The long-dumb beauties in your records are finding utterance at last—through the Aeolian-Vocalion!

BUT there is yet even a stranger "miracle of sound." Under your simple pressure of the Graduola device—a part of every Aeolian-Vocalion—a remarkable effect occurs. To the exact proportion of your pressure the music softens. You find you are actually shading your music to your mood. You are literally pressing your feeling into it with the spontaneity with which you "hum an air." Notes, phrases, passages, melt at your will into softened, liquid ecstasies of sound. You are bringing unexpected color, inspiring variety into a record that you thought was "set!"

What is the secret of this modern "miracle of sound?"

Not one invention—many.

Thus the Symphonetic Horn, whose use is to preserve even the subtlest character of instrumental tones, is but one characteristic of the Aeolian-Vocalion.

Its Sound Box, which helps to record so majestic a range of tone, is but one more.

The very Graduola device itself which shades without smothering tone—which you play, but play only when you do not prefer the Vocalion to "play itself"—is but one more.

It is the whole of these units meeting in one great unit—the Aeolian-Vocalion—which has made the dumb tones of all records speak a new language of tonal beauty never voiced from record before.

The Aeolian-Vocalion

"THE PHONOGRAPH THAT CALLS FORTH HIDDEN BEAUTIES FROM YOUR RECORDS"

REMEMBER that, in spite of their manifest superiority, Aeolian-Vocalions are no more expensive than are many grades of other phonographs.

They range in price from $90 to $375 (special art designs from $400 up) and you can purchase one for a very small initial payment and terms as low as $5 a month.

Remember, too, that all "Vocalions" have an artistic beauty of form and finish which suggests that a phonograph at last can be a beautiful and decorative element in a room. And all grades are alike in the actual quality of tone.

A visit to Aeolian Hall may suggest an exchange arrangement for your present instrument.

AN INVITATION

We are anxious that all music lovers shall know by personal experience what the Vocalion can do. We cannot translate into words its tonal qualities. We therefore invite you and your friends to visit Aeolian Hall between nine A. M. and five P. M. Hear, in a private room, any records you desire—to be played for you. If convenient, we suggest that you bring with you one or two of your own familiar records.

Perhaps play the Aeolian-Vocalion yourself. Hear how sweetly it brings out the buried beauties that records were not known to possess. You need not feel the slightest obligation for this really amazing experience. Consider it rather a favor granted us, in spreading the knowledge of the Aeolian-Vocalion among music lovers.

Drop in to Aeolian Hall whenever you may happen to be near. You will be welcome any day.

Informal demonstrations daily at 11 and at 3 in the Vocalion Salon. Admission Free. Illustrated Booklet sent upon request.

THE RECKONING.

After one year of war Germany possesses Belgium, Russian Poland, where her immense armies are battling mightily, is nearly within her grasp, and she occupies a part of some of the richest provinces in northeastern France, where for many months since her retreat from the Marne she has carried on trench warfare, chiefly defensive. These are her spoils, the twelvemonth achievements of the vast military forces she has for forty years been training for the conquest of Europe.

Germany has lost three million men, approximately 5 per cent. of her population. She has lost her island colonies in the Pacific, her West African possessions, her fortified outpost of Kiao-Chau—more than a million square miles of German territory and more than ten million people who acknowledged the German rule. She has been driven from the seas. The ships of her great merchant fleet have been destroyed or have sought refuge in her home waters or in neutral ports. Her foreign trade has been annihilated save for some precarious exchanges through the Baltic Sea and the little traffic she carries on furtively across the territory of neutral neighbors. Of her great and costly navy only submarines are at large and active—all the rest has either been sent to the bottom by her enemies or because of fear of the enemy lies concealed at Wilhelmshafen or Kiel. And her submarine boats gain for her no military advantage; they merely harass the enemy without diminishing his fighting power.

These are Germany's material losses. For a great nation they are trifling; a few peaceful, recuperating years would make them good. What we may call her moral loss is incomparably greater. It is beyond all measurement and irretrievable. The Germany of the HOHENZOLLERN is damned forever. A thousand years from now the awful story of violated Belgium will be read by school children in their history books as the children of today read of Hun and Saracen. A little more than a year ago Germany was on terms of real friendship with all nations save for one or two that harbored resentment for past, or suspicion of future, aggressions. Germany was respected and admired for her marvelously swift advances in science, in industry, and in commerce. She held a secure place among the foremost. Now not one nation on earth has a friendly feeling for her, with the exception only of Austria and Turkey, two Powers of such mean estate that for half a century no country has been so poor as to do them reverence; Turkey, the land of the unspeakable, which would have been effaced years ago but for the miserable immoralities of the European concert, and Austria, long stagnant and decaying under the rule of a monarch as narrow, as selfish, and as stupid as GEORGE the Third. These are Germany's allies, her friends, all she has left.

The admiration and respect Germany had won for herself have given way to abhorrence, to a great fear and a stern resolve, as men have tardily comprehended her monstrous designs against the world's peace and freedom and have witnessed the unbelievable savagery of the methods by which she seeks to gain her ends. But most of all men have been appalled by the extent and the completeness of her preparations for war. History has no precedent for it, nor any such tale of millions of people under a rule that directed their every energy in the planned way to make them more efficient for butchery. It is a spectacle to marvel at, but a standing menace too near and dreadful to be put up with. Germany unconquered, Germany not brought to her senses, threatens the peace and security of all the nations of the world. So her neighbor nations have resolved to conquer her, to put it out of her power ever again to cause blood to flow in rivers as it has flowed during this year of war.

They are going to do it. They are going to conquer Germany and put her mad rulers under such restraint that her people will have the opportunity they have never been able to conquer for themselves to put Germany under the rule of reason. A slow, a rude and bloody process it is. Beset by four great Powers Germany holds her own—as yet. She will have victories, as in Poland, and her people will be deluded by their false rulers into believing that triumph awaits her. That can never be. The Allies will win because win they must. For free England, republican France, aspiring Italy, and for vast Russia there can be no Caudine Forks, their armies will never pass sub jugum at the German behest. They would perish first, to escape the living death of subordination to Prussia. Their immense superiority in men, in wealth, in power will determine the contest, even if it be prolonged for years.

There are Germans within the empire who condemn the imperial purposes, who well know the nature of the raging fever that besets Germany. Some of them speak out, they will not be silenced, but when the organ of the Social Democrats with daring frankness gave a name to the disease the paper was suppressed. Of the "terrible crisis" in German affairs Vorwaerts said the other day:

> It shows us that the German people is stricken with a malady which in the end may prove fatal; and this malady is jingoism. Thus one names a diseased nationalism which sees neither virtue nor courage in any nation but its own, and which has only insults and suspicion for others.

The Kaiser's decree may keep the printed page from the sight of the people, the too audible voice it may still behind prison bars, but all the Hohenzollern power cannot shut out the thoughts that are finding lodgment in the minds of the people, it cannot long veil from their eyes the great national disaster that awaits them. Germans at home are now thinking and saying what German-Americans here should have thought and said many months ago—it is one of the greatest marvels of all history that they did not. They came here to find freedom and they doggedly cling to the monstrous anachronism of a dynastic tyranny, of a ruling class demanding of the people their lives, their all, for its own ends and advantage. The fathers of some of our citizens of that race came here from German prisons, yet they resent all censure of the immeasurably more oppressive jailers of today. Why did not our Germans give counsels of truth and wisdom to the Germans of the Fatherland? Why do they not give saving counsels now? They know that we of the United States condemn only militarism, imperialism, the Prussian spirit and the ruthless Prussian ambition. For the German people we feel only friendship, sympathy, pity. The German folk are not under the ban of the civilized world's detestation, they are not hated, not feared. Guided by their own thoughts and impulses, they would be like other peoples. They are in subjection to the senseless, sterile, impossible policy of world dominion, to a ruling class of strapping braggarts in gold lace of whom they should have rid themselves years ago. They can end their thralldom now.

It is only by regeneration, by a new birth of freedom, that Germany can recover what she has lost. The odium of the gigantic war, of the deluge of blood poured out to insure the "free hand" to ignoble Austria, will not attach to the German people after they have once subjected to their will and their commands the responsible authors of the crime. It is only in that way that Germany can recoup her moral losses, can regain her place in the sunlight of the world's respect and friendship. Many Germans already see in the clear light of truth the real position, the real danger of the empire. The need is that light shall come to the eyes of more Germans, of the great mass of German people.

MR. ROOT AND THE SHORT BALLOT

Whatever their party or independence of party, all the voters of the State of New York who want it to have a Government really representative of and strictly accountable to the people will say Amen! to ELIHU ROOT'S expression of his personal belief in the straight, simplest, genuine short ballot, containing only two names, that of the candidate for Governor and that of the candidate for Lieutenant Governor. Convinced, however, that the temper of the Constitutional Convention is adverse to the short ballot and a wholly responsible State Government, Mr. ROOT consents to compromise, and will defend on the floor the "shorter ballot" which adds the names of the candidates for Controller and Attorney General.

Mr. ROOT says that in the last forty years the Government of the State of New York "has been about as representative and responsible as that of Venezuela." Then why not reform, or try to reform it altogether? Why leave it in part, and great part, still Venezuelan? Why should the Controller and the Attorney General of this State be elected any more than the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General of the United States are elected? Under the dead forms of the electoral machinery we vote with real directness for President and Vice President. Why is what works admirably in the case of the Executive at Washington inadmissible or but partially admissible at Albany?

The passion for patronage, the old politics of the trough, inspires the resistance to the short ballot. The bosses and their henchmen want to keep the voter's attention confused, responsibility diffused. They want to keep their grip on the spoils. But are there not in the convention many fair-minded men, brought up under the old system, but not deaf to argument as to the merits of the new plan? Mr. ROOT is the most powerful member of the convention. Why should he not stick to his belief in the short ballot? Why should he not strive to undo utterly Venezuelan government in this State instead of leaving it semi-Venezuelan?

THE PROGRESSIVE PARTY.

Dissension seethes in the midst of the Progressive Party of this country. Some of the brethren are tiptoeing back to the old Republican conventicle. Others are, or are thought to be, stealing very gently toward the Wilson assembly.

These rash and sudden persons should beware of the great majority of the Progressive Party, its fount and origin, its beginning and perhaps its end. That votes at Oyster Bay. Have they forgotten the heat and hurry of some of this majority's remarks about Mr. WILSON'S foreign policy, remarks regretted by many of us who, in spite of all his divagations, occasional explosions, and incorrigible infancies, admire and like that complex, salient, "diverse and undulating," always profoundly interesting character.

The essential Progressive Party is ferociously anti-Wilsonite. How does anybody else, if there is anybody else, dare to lean toward Mr. WILSON? Wait till the Progressive Party speaks pontifically. That won't be till he knows where he is at in 1916. Meanwhile, they count not well who leave him out; and we defy anybody to smoke him out. But if he is to be a Republican, what will the little Progressives have to do but follow humbly? Some of them need discipline, but for the present he only grins.

THE ISSUE NOT TO BE OBSCURED.

It is gratifying to be assured that there is no present prospect of an extra session of Congress. The ideas of the people in relation to the national problems developing so rapidly these days need to be clarified before their elected representatives meet to put some of them in the form of legislation. In the matter of strengthening our national defenses on land and sea much more thought must be devoted to the various plans proposed before they are laid before Congress. They must be presented with clear arguments for their acceptance, and the vital issues must not be confused with measures of no immediate importance which may attract support for various reasons not directly connected with the present urgent need of army and navy reform.

There are indications that the essential matter may be more or less befogged by a movement to appropriate large sums of money for the establishment of new military academies in various parts of the country. Such a plan, though it might appeal powerfully to certain members of Congress for reasons which need not be definitely stated, is premature and would tend to overburden the nation with needless charges and lead to political squabbles in Congress over the claims of various States and communities, for which there will be no time to spare after Congress assembles. All that need be done by Congress for the immediate improvement of the army will be duly set down in Secretary GARRISON'S recommendations. We have strong hope that nothing further will be attempted until it is absolutely required.

The New York American asserts that "THE TIMES combats the proposition for the establishment of great national universities for the education of young men for military service and civil life." THE TIMES has not hitherto taken note of this proposal. There are, however, plenty of schools and colleges to fit young men for civil life. We do not think the nation should establish more such institutions. West Point and Annapolis are excellent national institutions for training officers for the army and navy. They must serve for the present. It would be foolish to complicate the much-needed work to be done by Congress without delay for the improvement of our defenses by plans for new public buildings which would lead to perplexing disputes about sites and involve the interference of politicians in the interest of local communities, contractors and real estate operators. If new schools for officers are needed they will be established in due time. This is not the time.

DEFENSES OF PANAMA.

The official history of the construction of the Panama Canal, edited by Mr. IRA BENNETT, which is the subject of a noteworthy article in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW today, contains nothing of larger vital interest at the present moment than its authentic account of the provisions for defense on the canal and in the adjacent territory. The facts are reassuring. The big guns at either end of the waterway, the mortar batteries at the Gatun locks, the size of the garrisons, the provisions for quartering extra troops in case of trouble, and the means of storing large quantities of ammunition, seem to assure the safety of the canal from attack by a foreign enemy, while the system of surveillance should serve to prevent any tampering with its works by ill-disposed persons at large on the Isthmus. From attack by sea or land the canal should be impregnable. Something has been said of the need of protection from assault by air. Undoubtedly the chief danger to the canal would be an assault by aeroplanes carrying bombs. But Mr. BENNETT points out that an aeroplane could do no harm except by dropping a bomb filled with high explosive directly behind one of the lock gates, and he is of the opinion that "aerial navigation has not yet reached the degree of skill required for such accuracy of aim." Nevertheless, it is likely that something more will be done to meet the emergency of an air attack. The mortars at the Gatun locks throw a heavy projectile eight miles in the air, but they were not designed to fight airships.

The old theory that the canal would double the efficiency of our navy, however, is no longer entertained, if it was ever seriously considered by naval officers. Our Atlantic fleet must be increased and our Asiatic and Pacific fleets greatly strengthened. Our nearest naval base to the canal is at Guantanamo, Cuba, which is fifty-eight hours distant, and needs stronger defenses to meet its requirements. We may rest assured, however, that in view of the strength of its defenses no foreign power is likely to meddle with the Panama Canal.

AMATEUR RATE REGULATION.

The Railway Age Gazette devotes a page to the consideration of the suggestion by SETH LOW in THE TIMES that passenger fares should be reduced and freight rates increased because "passengers vote and freight does not." President UNDERWOOD of the Erie and others of less authority have made similar suggestions, which The Age Gazette dismisses with scant respect. What redeems President UNDERWOOD'S suggestion is the large increase in freight rates which he proposes in consideration of a comparatively small reduction in passenger rates. Applied to the Erie Railway, his suggestion would decrease its passenger earnings $3,000,000 and increase freight earnings $8,500,000. That would be a good bargain for the Erie Railway and its comparatively small passenger business. It would be a bad thing for its shippers. The plan would make the passenger business of all railways unremunerative, and might bankrupt railways dependent on passenger business rather than freight, like the New Haven. In short, President UNDERWOOD'S suggestion is based upon so large an increase of freight rates that it would be impossible to get the assent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and if the increase were reduced to feasible proportions the plan would fall into the class of foolish suggestions made by those whose ignorance of the subject The Age Gazette exposes.

Mr. Low's argument from the low fares of the European roads falls because European freight rates are as high as passenger rates are low. That is to say, the freight earnings of European roads are made to carry the passenger deficit. Our Interstate Commission has forbidden the making of rates on that principle. It has ruled that the passenger fares were unremunerative, and that the railways' earnings should be increased from this source. The Supreme Court in the Norfolk & Western case decided that each branch of the service should earn its own income. Therefore, even if the suggestion of Mr. Low and Mr. UNDERWOOD were feasible in fact there would be no thoroughfare for it in law.

The argument that the reduction of fares would stimulate travel to a profitable volume is contrary to experience with other reductions. In 1907 many States passed two-cent fare laws on that theory. In the seven years before the reduction travel increased 59 per cent., and in the seven years after the reduction the growth was 21 per cent. When the Interstate Commerce Commission ordered a reduction of 20 per cent. in the price of upper berths of sleepers the demand for upper berths decreased a trifle. The density of travel is highest on the roads with the highest fares. That is partly because of the density of population along their routes, and more because of the fact that what American passengers want is the best service, rather than the cheapest fares.

These are facts, not theories, and are the result of trying the recommendations of amateurs, in and out of Legislatures, who do not hesitate to venture where experienced men fear to tread. The railways are in their present condition because so many who never made a study of the railway question have found a way to enforce their views by laws or persuasion of the regulators.

Perhaps Mr. Low would think it unkind or unfair to suggest that his suggestion is as immoral as it is unlawful and impracticable. The theory of rate regulation is that rates should be reasonable. The philosophy of Mr. Low's suggestion is to make friends for the railways with the voters by reducing fares which already are unremunerative. In that way he hopes to balk Government ownership, and to prevent reduction of freight rates unreasonably. That would be rate regulation in which unwisdom is tempered by largess, and a quasi bribery of the electorate. That would be a substitution of privilege for reason and intelligence. When the passenger fares are reduced in that manner can it be supposed that the railways will be content with rates which are merely reasonable? Would the people then be in any position to hold freight rates down to a strictly reasonable level? Would not the result be the disproportionate increase of freight rates which Mr. UNDERWOOD suggested? The proposal would base the prosperity of the railways upon a philosophy not consistent with our theory either of government or of rate making. When Americans substitute the rule of favor and unreason in rate regulation something worse has happened to them than to the railways from reasonable regulation.

THE CENTENARIAN.

The late WILLIAM J. THOMS, that doubting English THOMS, devoted a good deal of his life to asserting furiously that there are, and of right ought to be, no centenarians. He contradicted the birth registers. He was prepared to deny Old PARR himself. Yet in Rumania, for whatever reason, these artists in life are, if not common, commoner than anywhere else; and the greater accuracy with which vital statistics are recorded shows no diminution in the number of these conquerors, or partial conquerors, of Time.

Let us salute, then, and congratulate Mrs. ANNA KIRCHMER of the Isabella Home uptown, who came into the world a little more than a month after the battle of Waterloo. Her hundredth anniversary found her last Monday strong, active, unimpaired of every faculty, toasting her friends in champagne. Whatever Mr. BRYAN may say, THE TIMES will not be so cruel as to refuse to any of its readers or anybody else, if there is anybody else, a glass, or even two glasses, of "champagne wine," as Mr. GREELEY used to say, at 100. The habit is safe, if postponed till then. To be sure, Mrs. KIRCHMER needs no artificial cheerfulness. She has always looked "on the bright side of things." So she lives and flourishes like the green bay tree, while many a crooked, crabbed stick has been laid low.

There is sufficient sermon, though we shall not preach it, in this preservative art of the simple and kindly soul, the long life and merry. Most of the talk about "weariness of life" is pose or unconscious insincerity. Men in the veriest lees of existence cling to it instinctively. They pray for "a hundred Winters," as the makers of the Vedas did. As a matter of poetry and imagination they may admire the swift, turbulent, triumphant passage of ALEXANDER the Great, or SHELLEY, or BYRON; but these high passions are for the few "favorites of the gods," and that again is but a phrase. He or she to whom are given, as to Mrs. KIRCHMER, long, quiet, healthy, pleasant years, that is the darling of the immortals and the enviable one among the children of earth.

A GERMAN-AMERICAN SPEAKS

New York, July 30, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Those who boast and brag so much about the strength of the German-American vote, especially in the Middle West, and what a factor this will prove in the coming Presidential elections, with a view to embarrassing and intimidating the present Administration in its relations with Germany, I would respectfully refer to the recent Mayoralty contest in Chicago, Ill., which have almost always, with rare exceptions, resulted in the election of a Democratic candidate to this office, in spite of the preponderance of the Republican press, as represented by The Chicago Tribune, The Record-Herald, The Daily News, and The Evening Post, as against several reactionary papers which never followed a very consistent policy.

During the last campaign for Mayor, Mr. Sweitzer, the Democratic candidate, was defeated by the most overwhelming majority in the history of the city. And to those who are still asking themselves the reason for such a humiliating defeat I wish to point out that up to within a week or so before Election Day it was freely admitted on all sides that Mr. Sweitzer would win in a walk. This was in nowise surprising or disconcerting, considering the past performances of the Democrats when it came to electing a Mayor in Chicago. However, as Election Day approached it became evident that a complete change of sentiment had been undergone by the voters at large with respect to the Mayoralty campaign, with the result that Mr. Sweitzer was swamped at the polls.

In view of the persistent threats of our hyphenated brethren who are bent on making capital out of the German-American vote, as well as to calm the fears of those true citizens of this glorious country who may think that the German-American vote is capable of accomplishing all that its pro-Kaiserists would have us believe, allow me to explain the true reason for the great Republican landslide at Chicago. Mr. Sweitzer being of German descent, the German press of Chicago and other pro-German propagandists thought they saw a great opportunity to demonstrate the Democratic candidate, in order, as they put it, to further the cause of true neutrality in this country; the election of a German-American Mayor by a majority of German-American votes in the second largest city of the United States could not fail to have a great moral effect on the policy of the Administration at Washington. What the voters actually thought of this method of campaigning—including those Germans who have become naturalized or are of German descent—needs no better illustration than the results at the polls.

Germany's wonderful and efficient spy system and nothing else is at the bottom of all the present pro-German agitation in this country. Those of our true citizens of German birth or descent who have not perjured themselves in taking the oath of allegiance to this country can be relied upon to take their place shoulder to shoulder with the rest of us in support of this country, the President, and the Administration.

I trust that you will think it worth while to give this letter space in your esteemed columns. I am sure that you will earn the gratitude of those of our citizens of German origin or ancestry whose attitude, on account of the machinations of the pro-Wilhelmists, has been so grossly misrepresented.

Owing to the fact that my parents are at present in the zone of war controlled by the Germans, I would appreciate it very much if you did not print my signature to this letter.

TANTALIZING DITTIES.

Other Versions of the Reilly Song —The Punch and Passenjare.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"Touching upon and appertaining to" the Reilley lyric of the early eighties, would say that the writer used to sing second tenor to Georgy W. Hills, and the following "comes back" as the proper wording of the jingle:

Is this Mr. Reilley,
Can any one tell?
Is this Mr. Reilley
Who kapes the hotel?

Is this Mr. Reilley
They spake of so highly?
Er-pon me sowl, Reilley,
You're (looking) (doing) d—d well.

Before a drink at Reilley's bar it was sung "looking." As the drinker returned the glass to the bar it was "doing."

Since the above lyric discovers Mr. Hills, the writer would be glad to have "Georgy" give us the third stanza to the following song, which he wrote in the early eighties. It was sung to the tune of "Hold the Fort":

ODE TO THE FRESHMEN.

Ho! my comrades, see the freshmen
Rushing forth to prayers;
Hear them ripping through the entries,
Tumbling down the stairs.
Hold! My God! the proctor's coming,
C. J. 's on the way;
Shout the answer back to Pea-Bo,
Going to "cut" today.

Seniors, juniors, laughing at them,
All around the yard;
Bogus summons! Soph. committees!
Thunder! ain't it hard?
Whoop 'er up for "aught and eighty"
Freshmen, greener 'n grass.
Here's hoping, boys, that Jimmy Harris
Conditions the whole class.

Possibly this may be the whole song, but only Georgy can tell, and if we succeed in "smoking him out" again, all the better. It was always a pleasure to hear from him.

Boston, Mass., July 26, 1915. P. W. H.

It Was Both.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We did not catch the first series which brought forth the several renditions of "The Reilly Song," but we think we can set you aright. We have before us a song book, published by the Oliver Ditson Company, and on Page 70 appears a copy of the song, entitled: "Is That You, Mr. Reilly?" (P. Rooney.) Used by permission of E. H. Harding, N. Y. Copyrighted 1888, by O. Ditson & Co.

The lines of the first verse commence thus:

"I'm Terence O'Reilly, I'm a man of renown," &c., but the chorus runs thus:

Is that Mister Reilly, can any one tell?
Is that Mister Reilly that owns the hotel?
Well, if that's Mister Reilly they speak of so highly,
Well, upon my soul, Reilly, you're doing quite well.

It will be observed that in the title the name is Reilly, while in the lines of the first verse it changes to O'Reilly, then going back in the chorus to Reilly again. J. W.

Credit to Mark Twain.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What is the "irritating problem" connected with the line "Punch, punch, for the passenjare?" Not since I saw it published, probably about forty years ago—a year or so after the hand-bell punch for conductors came into use—have I considered there was anything mysterious about it. There were several verses, three or more, and they appeared over the signature of Mak Twain.

'Twas When the Punch Held Sway.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the Topics of the Times column of July 22, in speaking of the chorus verse of Mr. Reilly, you say "If nobody could remember it then, how can anybody remember it now, thirty years after? For it is a problem as irritating as 'Punch' in the presence of the passenjare.'" There is no problem as to "Punch in the presence of the passenjare." Mark Twain was its author, his only metrical composition, which was very popular when the bell punch held sway in the 70s and 80s. B. B. VALLENTINE.

According to the Divine Calendar.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Last Sunday's TIMES contained an article by W. W. Mead headed "Declares It Is the Lord's War."

Ten years ago that great authority on the teachings of the Bible, Rev. Dr. I. M. Haldeman, preached at his church—the First Baptist of New York—a series of sermons in which he proved from the prophecies of the Bible that The Hague Convention was a farce; that there was imminent a universal war involving every nation, and that there would be no peace until the Prince of Peace should come. Two years ago he repeated these prophecies, saying that the time was at hand and urging that this nation should prepare itself for the inevitable outcome. He even foreshadowed who the "war god" was and where the war would begin—all from the Scriptures as he interpreted them.

Licensed Speech.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Tonight I stopped for a short while at the corner of Forty-fifth Street and Broadway and listened to the unpatriotic ranting of a street lecturer. As an American I cherish the right of freedom of speech, but it struck me as being violative of that right almost to the point of treason when the speaker made the statement that Americans on the Lusitania should have been blown up for the reason that they were acting as shields for the Allies. As a lawyer I fear that the speaker has a legal right to express his views, but as an American citizen it cannot understand why the City of New York should grant licenses to persons allowing them the use of the streets for such expressions. I know nothing of the license other than the statement of the speaker to that effect when interrupted by some one other than myself, at which time the speaker threatened arrest of some one interrupting. THE TEACHER'S SUMMER.

[Extract from letter to THE TIMES on Sunday: "All sorts of courses at reasonable prices are open to those who seek knowledge. The Summer months give teachers a chance to equip themselves for better work and higher station. Too many teachers refuse to consider the vacation at all seriously, and it will not be until it is taken from them that they will realize what opportunities have slipped by."]

Oh, sea, thou rapturous, rolling symphony,
Oh, pines, rich slakers of the beauty-thirst;
Oh, wind and earth and heavens over me,
Oh, blessed stillness after sounds accurst,

What oil of quiet, what wine of inspiration
Binds now my raveled brain, my spirit worn!
What mounting pulses grip with exultation
My jaded heart; my body is reborn.

My mind reviews the world afresh, my eyes
Look far unseeing, back, within and on;
Leisure and solitude, those luxuries,
Spur me to paths and labors of my own.

No Summer school, no crowded class, no train
Of wise professors with insistent themes,
Can bring me to the little ones again
As do my books, my mountains, and my dreams.

What do they teach in all the tedious day?
I've learned to be a child again and play.

FREAKISH HUMAN TIDES PRODUCED BY WAR

How Italy Was Nearly Swamped by a Returning Population—New Problems of Immigration to be Solved in the Future.

By GINO C. SPERANZA,

New York, July 29, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have been so interested in considering the questions presented by a vast immigration to our country that we have given little, if any, thought to the problems caused by such mobile population in the countries of their origin. We have generally assumed that such thousands and tens of thousands of aliens came to us solely to improve their condition and that, therefore, their mother country was all the better for such migration, if, indeed, it did not encourage it for its own benefit.

The European conflict has made very manifest not merely the inconveniences of such large migratory currents, but the actual dangers involved in them to the countries of their origin. This has been shown in a very striking manner in the case of Italy, which furnishes the best example of absolute freedom to the forces of migration.

Let it be borne in mind that the Italians emigrate not only to the Americas, but spread in equal, if not superior, numbers all over Europe and the countries of the Mediterranean basin. When the European war began there were, in rough numbers, between 800,000 and 1,000,000 Italians outside of Italy in the various States of Europe. Between Aug. 1 and Sept. 15, 1914, 470,886 of these Italians rushed back to their native country from every part of the Continent. These are the figures given by Italian official statistics, which, it should be noted, do not include persons below the age of 15 years. During the succeeding months to May 1, 1915, a conservative estimate adds 60,000 Italians following the first rush. There was an increase in the usual Winter exodus from the Americas, traceable, no doubt, to the war. The number of Italians crossing the ocean, homeward, from Aug. 1, 1914, to Jan. 1, 1915, was 122,741, while the number of those who sailed from Italy across the seas dropped from 165,591 in the same period a year previously to 42,628 in the corresponding period of the war year.

In other words, Italy, during the first months of the European war, before she entered the lists, had the tremendous problem of taking care of an abnormal and sudden increase in its population of about 700,000 human beings in need of work. Of the half million in Europe that stampeded into Italy at the outbreak of European hostilities, 62,000 were women, most of them, like the men, wage-earners. The Venetian provinces gave the largest contingent of over 160,000, while Lombardy and Piedmont followed with about 80,000 and 60,000, respectively. The Southern provinces gave the smallest contingents.

The mere physical labor of receiving these vast hordes at the frontiers and distributing them to their destinations was a task of stupendous magnitude, especially when it is considered that many of these travelers were, in a real sense, frightened refugees from war countries, and had received the very minimum of care and attention owing to the fact that the States from which they fled were engaged in the work of mobilization. Thousands and thousands, including women and children, were put on open freight cars and sent to the Italian border by circuitous routes, the journey requiring in some instances two weeks for transportation from Prussia to the Italo-Swiss border. There were cases reported to the writer, who had an opportunity of watching the inrush, where the father of the family was taken suddenly from his place of labor and put on a train, while his family were ordered from their home and entrained on a different route, the divided family traveling in the uncertainty of ever meeting again. Instances of women and children dying in transit owing to the hardships of the journey were cited.

An appreciable number of such refugees were Italians who had established themselves abroad, married alien wives, and had had children born outside of the fatherland. The majority of such cases presented instances of business ruin, while thousands of others had been obliged to abandon all their belongings and reached Italy in an indigent condition.

The writer can testify to the excellent way in which Italy tackled the problem—tackled it largely through the work of volunteers. Men and women from the nobility to the humblest trades gave their services at the various stations from 5 o'clock in the morning to late at night, receiving the refugees, caring for them, and sending them to their homes, while volunteer professional men—medical and legal—attended to matters of hygiene and to recording such proofs as might eventually establish the legal claim of these refugees.

The Government had to meet the urgent question of unemployment due to their sudden inrush and the general slackening of all work owing to the war. This it did largely by intensifying public works and offering to able-bodied men enlistment in the army in Africa at fair wages. Private and philanthropic enterprises endeavored to help as best they could. Among the refugees a large number were peasants, but skilled trades were substantially represented. Thus there were over 25,000 masons, nearly 26,000 miners, some 25,000 glass workers and stone cutters, and 13,000 textile workers, mostly women.

In the face of these facts and figures one may well agree with the opinion expressed by an Italian student that immigration as a source of national wealth must be considered extremely hazardous, depending, as it does, under existing laws, largely upon circumstances and events beyond the control of the mother country. "Emigration," said Angiolo Cabrini, a member of the Italian Parliament who has made this question his special study, "when of the proletariat character, such as that from Italy, constitutes an element of weakness in the foreign policy of a nation, increasing, as it does, the number of paralyzing preoccupations of the Government and decreasing its freedom of action."

What will happen, after the war, to that million of Italy's children who yearly leave her for foreign labor markets? The war has killed off most of the prophets and the maimed ones who still survive had better be very modest in their claims. Let it be said, then, that one opinion is as good as another and no more, and the one here stated is given as such. Wheresoever victory may alight, Europe, however exhausted, will be a field for considerable enterprises requiring both unskilled and skilled labor. The Italian laborer has been in great demand in just such enterprises, in Europe no less than in America, possessing, as he undoubtedly does, a special "genius" for hard work. Even after the war broke out the Italian Government had to pass severe regulations to prevent its emigrants from answering attractive inducements for labor in the belligerent States. It is said that there are several thousand Italian workmen employed in Germany even today, held there by all sorts of inducements.

If Europe then, at the close of the war, will absorb a great deal of Italian labor, will it appreciably affect this country? Professor Bertarelli of the University of Parma is of the belief that transoceanic emigration "will greatly diminish," and such is the opinion of not a few Italian observers.

The question may be raised, however, whether an impoverished and tax-burdened Europe will be able to compete with American wages, even allowing for the saving in time and money between a journey from Italy to nearby States and a voyage to the Americas. But even if this should not intervene it seems doubtful that Italy, unless terribly depleted in its population by a lengthening of the war, will not have, out of her immense storehouse of human energy, an ample supply for both the American and European markets.

Not only in the case of Italy, but in that of almost every other country of Europe, neutral and belligerent, the war will leave great masses of men raised by their trying experience to new outlooks on life; many will have to begin the daily struggle anew with very little opportunity in their own stricken lands; many more men, timid and stay-at-homes by nature, will have been changed into more daring and adventurous spirits.

Nor is this all. The vision of America will have penetrated even deeper and into the most remote corners of Europe than ever before; it will stand out, strong, deliberate, and safe; it will seem the universal helper to the stricken and the hungering. "It has not fought because it did not want to fight"—such will be its message. Surely all these things will fire the imagination of countless men, however patriotic, however loyal, in the silent watches of the battlefields and the trenches.

It is the sum of many such considerations that leads the writer to believe that the aftermath of the war will see a great migratory wave toward the Americas, and especially toward this country. Are we prepared? The war has surely been a lesson to us on many matters, but peculiarly so, let us hope, on our mistaken policies regarding immigration and naturalization. Are we doing anything to mend our ways?

GINO C. SPERANZA.

SHAKESPEARE IN GERMANY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the place of honor you publish today a moving letter, headed in black and generous type, "German Tolerance of Art; Even Shakespeare Will Continue to be Played as Usual."

The writer admits that French, Belgian, and Italian dramatists are taboo, and it seems strange that while the churches are imploring God to hate England the theatres around the corner are playing "The Merchant of Venice." Perhaps I can explain the puzzle.

The Teuton mind has been always devoted to England's greatest son, and last September the theatrical managers were aghast at the prospective loss to their repertoire. In glorious German fashion they met and overcame the trouble. A poem was written explaining that at the declaration of war the spirit of Shakespeare immediately left detested England and came to Germany, vowing that he repudiated the unworthy place of his birth, and proclaimed himself, in fact, what he had long been in soul, a true German.

It was a delicious poem and was recited before the performance of each Shakespearean play. That there might be no kiss of loyalty to the reincarnate dramatist the verses were published in the daily papers and the delighted Teutons went, of course, go see the dramas to which the zest of conquest had been added. Not only God hated England, but Shakespeare, too; he said so!

The Seaworthy Ark.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Modern water craftsmen laugh at Noah's ark as a relic of barbarism; they have never looked closely at the particularity of its pattern. Since it came from the hands of the master builder, wisdom dictates a scrutiny of its meaning in prefiguring the ark of safety wherein life is kept protected from the deluge of insanity now threatening the world. As samples of modern pomp, the Titanic and Eastland show some slips in the cogs of boasted workmanship. We do well, therefore, to equip ourselves with the inspired stabilisers of Holy Writ, since without such balancers the plunge into the deep of lawlessness will be much more insured. JOSEPH GREIG.

RUSSIA UNCRUSHABLE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is interesting to compare the German military ambition of today, as a result of the successes against Russia, with that of yesterday as expressed by the greatest apostle of militarism, Bernhardi. In his "War of Today" he says:

> "In a great number of cases it is not possible entirely to destroy the power of resistance of an enemy. For example, conditions make it impossible for no matter what European power totally to crush Russia."

Perhaps the pupil thinks he is greater than the master, and can accomplish the impossible. Perhaps, too, this great offensive is prompted more by political than military motives. Though Mackensen seems to cherish the ambition to destroy the Russian Army, or to place it for a long time hors du jeu, his real purpose will not carry him further than Warsaw. Here, in the Polish capital, will be delivered the political coup that is expected to win over the Polish people, and to help Germany hold what she has won at such great cost and which she holds so precariously—that is, to proclaim in the palace of the old Diets of Poland the independence of Poland under the King of Saxony or an Austrian Archduke.

But the success of such a coup is more than doubtful, for how can the Poles have any faith in German promises in view of the abominable persecutions the Prussian Poles have undergone? Still, this seems to be the dream of the German Emperor, as seen by the clairvoyant Russian and French press. The Germans have talked too

CUPS FOR DANCERS AT MARBLE HOUSE

AID CONGRESSIONAL UNION

Prizes Awarded to Miss Roberts Willard and Lieut. Brandt for the Best Fox Trot.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 31.—An interesting dancing contest was held this afternoon on the terrace of Marble House, the residence of Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont, for the benefit of Congressional Union work and children left destitute by the war.

Prominent women of Newport and from near-by resorts sat about the terrace, watching the competition, with Lawrence Durant in charge of the dancing and Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt and Mrs. Hamilton W. Cary the judges. Mrs. Belmont presented the cups given by Mrs. Marsden J. Perry, Mrs. Preston Satterwhite, Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas, Mrs. J. J. Mason, and Mrs. G. C. Barrows.

The first contest was a one-step for children, won by Cathleen Vanderbilt, daughter of Mr and Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, dancing with Consuelo Vanderbilt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr. Little Misses Lucille Carter and Susan Pierson danced beautifully. For the contests Henry Oelrichs was announcer.

The second contest a one-step for men and women was won by Miss Katherine Knight, daughter of Rear Admiral Austin M. Knight, dancing with Lieut. John J. London, of the flagship Wyoming.

The last contest, a Fox Trot, brought many dancers out including the Misses Roberts and Natalja Willard, sisters, the former dancing with Lieut. Edmund S. R. Brandt, U. S. N. Miss Mimi Scott danced for a short time in the contest with Paymaster William J. Hine of the U. S. S. San Francisco, and others in competition included Miss Dorothy Buckley Leake and Richard B. Leake, Jr., Albany, N. Y. The judges awarded cups to Miss Roberta Willard and Lieut. Brandt.

The Consolation Cup went to Henry Oelrichs.

The flower booth was in charge of Mrs. Charles May Oelrichs, assisted by the Misses Doris Duke, Evelyn Lowe, Barbara Lowe, Emily Pierson, Suzane Pierson, Bettie Pierson, Lucille Carter, Elizabeth Sands, Anita Grosvenor, Ethel Huhn, and Sylvia S. Hillhouse.

To assist French soldiers after leaving the hospitals, a committee has met Mme. Corcoran, the founder of the Corcoran Art Gallery in Washington.

OLD GLORY IN WHITE BORDER

Iowa Peace Advocates to be Prosecuted If It Is Repeated.

DES MOINES, Iowa, July 31.—The recent display of an American flag with a white border around it by a society at Fort Dodge, Iowa, interested in world peace, caused Attorney General Cosson today to instruct Fort Dodge authorities to take action if the society repeated the display.

Complaints were made by G. A. R. veterans of Fort Dodge, who declared the act as much a desecration of the flag as if a border of red had been sewed around it.

ANDREW CARNEGIE FISHES IN RAIN.

Special to The New York Times.

BAR HARBOR, Me., July 31.—Andrew Carnegie spent the forenoon yesterday at Eagle Lake fishing in spite of a drizzing rain. He drove the three miles to the lake accompanied by his physician, and seemed to enjoy the trip thoroughly, in spite of the weather. This would seem to put at rest for good the rumors of Mr. Carnegie's illness.

Miss Hill Weds Lieut. Crawford.

Miss Leslie Van Cortlandt Hill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Tracy Hill, was married to Lieutenant David MacLean Crawford, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., yesterday afternoon at the home of her parents, 230 Willoughby Avenue, Brooklyn. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Charles Howland Hill. After their honeymoon Lieutenant Crawford will resume his duties at the coast defenses in Boston Harbor.

RELIEF TO NEW CITIZENS.

League Arranges to Expedite Details of Naturalization.

Arangements were concluded by the League of Foreign Born Citizens, of 82 Second Avenue, yesterday whereby foreigners will be able to obtain naturalization papers without several days delay. The difficulty was overcome at a conference held in the office of County Clerk Schnieder. Others present were Herman Glauberman, Director of the Naturalization Committee of the League, and H. P. Cowley, Chief Naturalization Examiner.

Mr. Glauberman recommended that night sessions be held in the United States District Court and the Supreme Court, so that naturalization proceedings should not compel a man to lose a day's work. The proposition was found acceptable. It was agreed to set apart two nights each month from 7 to 10 o'clock for naturalization in the United States District Court and two nights each week in the Supreme Court. The league will be permitted to designate the nights when naturalization proceedings shall take place.

UPSET IN MOTOR WITH WIFE.

Herbert Morris, 36 years old, of 63 Mount Vernon Avenue, Boston, Mass., and his wife were injured on returning from Great Neck, L. I., to Manhattan, when their automobile was overturned in a collision with another automobile, at Wilbur Avenue and Radde Street, Long Island City, yesterday afternoon, and overturned.

The machine in which Mr. and Mrs. Morris were riding is owned by Clarissa L. Hobson of 969 Park Avenue, Manhattan, and was driven by Chauffeur Charles Conkling of 38 Forty-first Street, Corona. The other car was owned by Benjamin Fulkner of 914 St. Mark's Avenue, Brooklyn, and driven by Charles Brittton of 1,256 Fulton Street, Brooklyn. The Fulkner machine escaped undamaged, but that containing Mr. and Mrs. Morris was turned over on its side.

Passersby ran to the assistance of Mr. Morris and his wife, who were dragged out of the broken side door of the limousine and carried into a grocery store. Mrs. Morris quickly recovered, and it was found that her injuries were slight. Mr. Morris's left foot was badly hurt. Another automobile conveyed the couple to Manhattan.

TRAIN KILLS WOMAN IN AUTO

Victim, Misunderstanding Watchman's Signal, Drives Upon Track.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BANCH, N. J., July 31.—Mrs. Mary Knowles, aged 40, a resident of Belmar, was struck by a passenger train on the Eastontown division of the New Jersey Central Railroad here this afternoon at 3:40 o'clock and died an hour later at the Monmouth Memorial Hospital. The accident occurred at the Branchport Avenue crossing.

Mrs. Knowles was in a runabout and, evidently misinterpreting the flagman's signal, drove the machine upon the crossing directly in front of an eastbound train. The automobile was wrecked and both occupants were hurled fully thirty feet. The friend accompanying Mrs. Knowles sustained only minor bruises. Mrs. Knowles's death was due to a fracture of the skull.

Sun's Rays Set Barn Ablaze.

MADISON, N. J., July 31.—The sun shining this afternoon through the panes of glass in the windows of the hayloft of Patrick Martin's barn in Park Avenue found a spot where the glass was thickened and formed a lens. The rays were concentrated on a wisp of hay, which began to smoulder. Before any one was aware of it the mow was blazing furiously. By the time the firemen arrived the barn was destroyed.

Dr. Shaw Heads Elmira College.

ELMIRA, N. Y., July 31.—The trustees today elected the Rev. John Balcolm Shaw, pastor of a Presbyterian Church at Los Angeles, Cal., as President of Elmira College, to succeed the late Dr. A. Cameron Mackenzie. Dr. Shaw at one time was pastor of a Presbyterian Church in New York City, going from there to Chicago, and then to California, where he now has a church of 3,000 members.

WOMEN TO ORGANIZE THEIR OWN CITY CLUB

Like the Men's, It Will Take an Active Interest in Civic Questions.

TO FURNISH A CLUBHOUSE

Miss Hay, In Reply to Anti Statement, Says Telephone Day Was a Huge Success.

To prepare for the full exercise of their influence when they shall have the vote, prominent New York women yesterday announced a plan for the founding of a woman's city club, analagous in purposes and formation to the men's City Club. Among the leaders in the movement are Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, Miss Alice Carpenter, and Commissioner of Correction Katharine B. Davis, and Mrs. Claudia Q. Murphy.

The committee for the formation of the club expects to have its membership roster include the names of women from every section of the city and representing all interests. It will take an active interest in all civic questions and conduct campaigns for many reforms.

The following letter has been sent to 100 women whom it is aimed to make charter members of the Woman's City Club:

You are invited to join a temporary committee which has been organized to form a Woman's City Club of New York. The object of this club will be to take up various city problems as they present themselves to back all movements for city betterment along social and political lines, and to form a centre of civic interests for the women of New York.

The Phelps-Stokes estate has been approached and has favorably received the idea of providing and furnishing a suitable clubhouse which will make possible membership dues of only $20 a year. It is generally recognized that a club of this kind has long been needed in New York and with the proper response and enthusiasm it should at this time become possible.

It will be necessary for the committee to know your decision at your earliest possible convenience in order that the work of permanent organization may be pushed forward without delay.

Woman's City Club Committee.
MRS. NORMAN DE R. WHITEHOUSE,
MISS ALICE CARPENTER,
DR. KATHARINE B. DAVIS,
MRS. OGDEN MILLS REID,
MRS. ALICE DUER MILLER,
MRS. V. G. SIMKHOVITCH,
MRS. CLAUDIA Q. MURPHY.

Among the women who have been invited to become charter members are Mrs. Willard Straight, Miss Anne Morgan, Mrs. Mary Beard, Miss Ida M. Tarbell, Miss Lillian D. Wald, Mrs. Marie Jenny Howe, Mrs. William Einstein, Miss Virginia Gildersleeve, Dr. S. Josephine Baker, Miss Mary E. Dreier, Mrs. Florence Kelly, Miss Belinda Scott, Miss Pauline Goldmark, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, Mrs. Helen Phelps Stokes, Miss Louisa Lee Schuyler, Mrs. T. Douglas Robinson, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, and Mrs. Charles S. Whitman.

"The Woman's City Club will enable us to make our influence felt more effectively when we get the vote," said Mrs. Murphy yesterday. "The club will be more or less along the lines of the Men's City Club and from what I know of the men's club will work for about the same ends. It will interest itself in all matters of city betterment. There is much lost effort in the workings of various separate woman's organizations for reforms and we feel greater effects may be accomplished by unifying the work as far as possible. Of course the new club will be a factor in city life whether we get the vote this Fall or not. When we do get the vote, the club will be correspondingly stronger."

MISS HAY REPLIES TO ANTIS.

She Denies That Telephone Day Was a Hit-and-Miss Affair.

Anti-suffragists need not waste their sympathies on the suffragists, said Miss Mary Garrett Hay, Chairman of the Woman Suffrage Party, at the headquarters of the party, 48 East Thirty-fourth Street, yesterday. Miss Hay gave out an answer to the criticisms of the suffragists' Telephone Day made by Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge, President of the National Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage. It said in part:

"I can't see how Mrs. Dodge can say that we only called up men suffragists if she had really read the reports in the newspapers. Our Vice Chairman, Mrs. Martha Wentworth Suffren, called up wholesale meat dealers, taking them from the telephone book, hit or miss, not knowing whether they were in favor or opposed, but found them favorable to the amendment. Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw carefully selected a number of antis, called them up, and found that since the time they were interviewed last the majority had changed their minds on the question of votes for women.

"I do not agree with Mrs. Dodge when she says that men answered 'yes' because 'it was quicker, easier, and cooler' on a hot day. It surely takes no longer to say 'No' than 'Yes,' and it is easy for a man to hang up the receiver if he doesn't want to discuss a subject. I do not think the men of New York City would give false replies to women.

"In regard to Mrs. Dodge's statement that we had no consideration for the telephone girls, I want to say that our day was planned weeks in advance and we did not anticipate such hot weather. As we believe, however, that suffrage will be a great help to working girls, we do not feel that it is too much to ask of them extra work for just one day when hundreds of women throughout the State are devoting themselves to the cause morning, noon, and night.

"I would like to refute Mrs. Dodge's statement that nothing but publicity was gained by Telephone Day. We received many favorable returns from people we had never interviewed before. I readily see why our anti-suffrage friends are not undertaking work of this kind. There are so few of them they cannot branch out, while we have so many capable, energetic workers that we have to keep thinking up tasks to keep them satisfied and busy.

"Mrs. Dodge will have to change before Nov. 2 her figures of 150,000 to 200,000 votes against the amendment, or if she won't before, I am sure she will on Nov. 3."

WOMEN'S EYES ON CONGRESS

Suffragists to Prepare an Index of Each Member's Standing.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Every member of Congress is to be "indexed" by experts attacked to the cause of woman suffrage in order that it may be known just where they stand with respect to the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Federal Constitution, which provides for giving women the right to vote throughout the United States. This announcement was made today by Miss Alice Paul, President of the Congressional Union for Woman Suffrage. Among other things the indexers are to put down "whom each member of the Senate or the House married and what church he affiliates with," to quote Miss Paul, but for what purpose this information is to be obtained is not disclosed.

Miss Paul announced also that there would be a great suffrage demonstration in Washington, December 6, the day Congress will reassemble. A suffrage convention will be held here from December 6 to 12 and during that time, are to be within a stone's throw of the White House where the President can see the suffragists swarm in and out." A large dwelling on Lafayette Square has been obtained for this purpose.

"By the time Congress meets," said Miss Paul, "we will have every member of the Senate and House indexed so that we can tell just how he stands on our proposition. If he is for it, we will know, and give ourselves no more concern about him; but, if he is against it, we will leave no stone unturned to bring him into line.

"Mrs. Lucia Grimes, an expert in research work, and Mrs. W. Lowe, a historical student, are coming to Washington to make a careful index of congressmen for us. They will ascertain who each member of the Senate or House married, what business he is in, what church he affiliates with, and what interest, if any, influences him. Miss Mildred McKinnon of Wisconsin will assist them and other workers at union headquarters.

"Mrs. Edward Breitung, a wealthy Michigan woman, will take a large house in Washington next winter and add much to the social side of the suffrage campaign. Her home will be a favorite gathering place for society women in the suffrage movement.

"Mrs. Breitung gave us $1,500 to start our campaign in Michigan. Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont of New York will spend much of her time next fall and winter in Washington, working for the Anthony amendment. She and a number of other New York wome will urge Empire State congressmen to vote and work for the Anthony amendment."

Miss Paul left here today for Delaware to address a meeting of suffragists. She is on her way to California and will speak in Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Michigan, Oregon, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, and San Francisco. She will attend the conventions in a number of these states.

"The purpose of our strenuous activities this summer," said Miss Paul, "is to crystalize the sentiment in the country for woman suffrage, and by a great demonstration in Washington the day Congress meets, convince the legislative representatives of the people that the demand for our amendment is vigorous and general. The first day of Congress we will march to the Capitol and present one of the most formidable petitions ever filed with that body.

"The social side of the suffrage campaign has been quite a success this year. Miss Margaret Whittemore and Miss Isabella Mott have worked up considerable enthusiasm at Newport, where a number of important social functions have been a feature of the season. Immediately after the people begin to leave Newport, activities in behalf of the suffrage campaign will open at Great Neck, L. I.

"Mrs. William L. Colt, of New York City, who is now in Tennessee doing field work, will go in a motor car from there through New York, Vermont and New Hampshire, making suffrage speeches alon gthe way."

MEADOW BROOK WINS CUP.

Takes the W. W. Astor Gold Trophy at Narragansett.

Special to The New York Times.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 31.—Around the small tables of the lawn of the Point Judith Club, in motor touring cars, and in the grand stand many members of the villa colony at Naragansett, cottagers from Newport and others from Watch Hill assembled this afternoon to witness the senior championship polo match between the Meadow Brooks and Great Neck of Long Island.

Meadow Brook won the match and the gold cup presented by William Waldorf Astor through the Tuxedo Club. The trophy was presented by Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman, wife of Governor Beeckman. Mrs. Beeckman sailed ot the Pier from Newport with a party of twelve on the motor boat The Shark. Governor Beeckman joined her on the return trip to Newport. In Mrs. Beeckman's party were Mrs. John R. Drexel, Mr. and Mrs. David Dows, Mr. and Mrs. George McFadden, Roger Wmthrop, Eugene S. Reynal, and Miss Margaret Perrin of Newport.

Mr. and Mr. August Belmont sailed to the pier from Newport on their boat the Scout for the polo tournament, and were among the spectators on the field. Miss Margaret Andrews of Newport and Morgan Belmont were also at the Journey and joined Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont. Dinner for 100 was held at tables, and along the border of the field were Mrs. Charles R. Snowden, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel S. Valentine, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred E. Norris, Miss Dorothy Norris, Mr. and Mrs. O. Richard, Mr. and Mrs. Howard L. Welsh, John Welsh, Miss Lucy Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah P. Robinson, Miss Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome N. Bonaparte, Duke Arturo de Majo Durazzo, Mrs. Benjamin K. Gatins, Harry D. Holloway, Mrs. Albert Bond Lambert, Mrs. George S. Mcleod, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Mitchell, Mrs. John Corbin, Mrs. James A. Roosevelt, Mrs. Rufus MacLuffie, Braddin Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Kane, Miss Florence Kane, Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Strawbridge, P. S. P. Randolph, P. S. Randolph and Miss Hannah Randolph, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Fell, James B. Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth, M. Murchison, S. Hinman Bird, and Dr. Archibald G. Thomson.

After the polo match many of the cottagers and their friends went to the Point Judith Country Club for tea.

In the two-ball mixed foursome golf tournament which took place today at the Point Judith Country Club Miss Marguerite Prescott of Washington and John Wilde of Brookline, Mass., won with a net score of 81 for the eighteen holes. William C. Marrow of Washington and Mrs. Irving H. Chase of Waterbury, Conn., were second, with a net score of 82 for the course. Among other players were Mrs. S. Hinman Bird, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Maurin, Howard Hitchcock, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Stevenson, Mr. and Mrs. Roland Hazard, and the Misses Beatrice and Gertrude de Coppet.

Among those entertaining at dinner at the Casino tonight were Winthrop McKim of Tuxedo, N. Y., and Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Kane, who were joined by Miss Henrietta Wickes. Dinners were also given on the plaza before the dance by Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Tangeman, Ridley Watts, Charles G. Curtis, and Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Johnston.

A subscription dance was given tonight by members of the Scarborough Beach Club at the pavilion. The patronesses were Mrs. Henry B. Stewart, Mrs. John R. Fell, Mrs. S. Hinman Bird, Mrs. R. H. I. Goddard, Jr., Mrs. Caryl Roberts, Mrs. Philip Stevenson, Mrs. Rowland Hazard, Mrs. Ben Ali Haggin, and Mrs. Alexander Brown.

CHILD WELFARE BOARD.

Nassau County Members Named Under Widow's Pension Law.

MINEOLA, July 31.—County Judge James P. Niemann this morning named two women prominent in society to be members of the Nassau County Board of Child Welfare, under the Widowed Mothers' Pension law.

The board will consist of William F. Britt, formerly County Superintendent of the Poor, of Sea Cliff, term six years; John A. Albertson of Old Westbury, term five years; Mrs. Katherine Crocker, wife of Frank Crocker of Piping Rock, term four years; Mrs. Dorothy Straight, wife of Willard D. Straight of Old Westbury, term three years; Frederick Reifschneider, Jr., lawyer, of Hempstead, term two years, and L. I. Monito of Hicksville, term one year.

The board serves without compensation. County Superintendent of the Poor C. D. Van Deusen is a member ex officio.

A Vacation for You and "Tenement Tommy"

We know many puny children down in Allen, Cherry, and other crowded streets who are starving for fresh air. They're like plants kept in a cellar all Winter.

Three dollars will pay for a week's seashore vacation for one of them.

Won't you give at least one the same health-restoring opportunity you are going to have this Summer?

Multiply the number of days you expect to be away by forty-three cents, send us the amount and we will keep at least one of these little victims of poverty at Sea Breeze while you are away.

KIDNAPPING RUMOR AS HEIRESS WEDS

Miss C. Barker, Worth $30,000,000, Marries H. Spaulding, Jr., While Police Guard House.

THREAT TO STEAL FIANCE?

A Demand for $75,000 Regarded by Some as a Hoax—200 See Ceremony in Bride's Home.

Special to The New York Times.

HARBOR POINT, MICH., July 31.—The wedding of Miss Catherine Barker, orphan heiress to a fortune of between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000, and Howard Spaulding, Jr., of Chicago, took place this afternoon after rumors of attempted kidnapping and dissension in the wedding party had been set afloat and denied.

Early in the day Harbor Point, from the dock to the lighthouse, was guarded by special police. They were there it was said, because Miss Barker had received a threat that unless she paid $75,000 immediately, Mr. Spaulding, her intended, would be kidnapped. By some the threat is regarded as a hoax, but the police took no chances. The existence of any threat at all was denied by some of the bride's friends.

Peculiar markings about the window of the cottage in which her fiancé has been sleeping added to the concern of Miss Barker's guardian, James H. Forgan, and he went to George M. Gould, president of the village of Harbor Springs, and arranged for protection. The guard will remain until the costly presents have been removed.

As an additional means of barring undesirables Mr. Forgan arranged that guests must drive to the wedding.

In the last week from three to six suspicious characters have been arrested each day in the neighborhood of Miss Barker's cottage and escorted from the township. A woman, who was found lingering near the cottage at night was taken away by a watchman, and since then has been hiding in the woods near by.

Mrs. A. W. Goodrich confirmed the report that her daughter, Elizabeth, would be a maid of honor. She would say nothing further, and Miss Goodrich and the bridegroom refused to talk of the affair. There was no maid of honor at the wedding. Mrs. Goodrich emphatically denied that her daughter, Rosamond, is or ever has been engaged to Lieutenant Spaulding, brother of Howard Spaulding, Jr.

The ceremony by which the Michigan City, Ind., heiress became the wife of Mr. Spaulding was observed at 4 oclock in the presence of more than 200 guests.

Father Bleckman of Michigan City performed the ceremony in the Persian Room, a sort of enclosed veranda, which had been elaborately decorated. The bridal couple stood in a bower of tropical flowers, while song birds that had been cleverly concealed carolled in the foliage.

The bridal couple started tonight for British Columbia, where they will pass a week at Lake Louise. They will go to visit the Panama-Pacific Exposition and proceed to Honolulu.

Mr. Spaulding is a son of Mrs. Howard Spaulding of Chicago. He was recently graduated from Yale, and for several months has been employed by the General Manager of the Haskell and Barker Car Company of Michigan City, the stock of which formed a considerable part of the Barker legacy.

The wedding is the culmination of a romance which began here several years ago, when the Barker and Spaulding cottages were only a short distance from one another. Miss Barker is 19 years old and Mr. Spaulding is 21.

Employes of the Haskell & Barker Car Company, numbering about 3,000, had a holiday today on account of the wedding.

MRS. H. P. WHITNEY STRICKEN

Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, the sculptor and artist of 871 Fifth Avenue, was operated on for appendicitis early Friday morning at her Summer home in Old Westbury, L. I. She had been in excellent health until recently and the attack was sudden and severe. It was decided to operate early in the week and last night Mr. Whitney said that the operation had been successful and the condition of the patient even better than might be expected.

Mrs. Whitney was Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, daughter of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, and her mother left Newport several days ago to be with her when the operation took place. Widely known as an artist, Mrs. Whitney has a studio at Wheatley Hills and another here in the city at 10 West Eighth Street. She is widely known as a patron of art, and has given much assistance to the younger artists of New York. Three great works in relief from her studio now occupy the semi-circular wall behind a fountain in one of the courts of the Tower of Jewels at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The theme of the composition is "El Dorado," and the reliefs portray processions of seekers for "The Gilded One," men, women, and children fighting, struggling, and fainting on the march. At present Mrs. Whitney is working on her Titanic memorial, the money for which was contributed by women all over the country.

Harry Payne Whitney was to have played with the Meadow Brook polo team in a championship match at Narragansett Pier yesterday, but his wife's illness prevented.

CAUGHT AS BOGUS OFFICER.

Alleged Collector from Peddlers Accused by Woman and Others.

Joseph F. McCourt of 453 West Thirty-seventh Street was arrested at Tenth Street and First Avenue by Detectives Harnett and Culhane of the Second Branch yesterday after being accused of collecting 50 cents apiece from pushcart peddlers who had no licenses. He was charged with impersonating an officer and held in bail of $3,000 by Magistrate Corrigan in Men's Night Court for examination tomorrow in Essex Market Court.

Samuel Smith of 228 Henry Street said that he had seen McCourt arguing with pushcart peddlers until they paid money to him. When anybody asked what he was doing, according to Smith, McCourt showed a badge and said:

"I'm a Deputy Sheriff. Don't interfere. I am only doing my duty."

Smith said that McCourt offered to go to the East Twenty-eighth Street Police Station to have the propriety of his conduct verified, but that the Fifth Street Station was nearer. They started toward it when, according to Smith, McCourt fled. He was caught after running half a block.

One pushcart peddler told Magistrate Corrigan that he had given McCourt 50 cents and another said that he had given McCourt a quarter, promising another quarter the next day.

Miss Mary Mason of 119 First Avenue, a social worker, testified that McCourt had been guilty of collecting money in the same way before. It was asserted at on complaints of the same kind two policemen in the neighborhood had be called before Commissioner Woods.

Magistrate Corrigan said that the evidence against McCourt might warrant the charge of extortion and, therefore, fixed bail at $5,000.

82,000 Persons in Elizabeth.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., July 31.—Census Supervisor James J. Kelly this afternoon announced that an official count gave the population of Elizabeth as more than 82,000. This is an increase of about 10,000 in the last five years.

INVENTORS' GUILD GIVES AID

Asks Nominations Among Members for Naval Advisory Board.

The Inventors' Guild, of which Dr. Edward Weston is President and F. J. Sprague and Peter Cooper Hewitt are Vice Presidents, has requested each of its members to nominate by letter not fewer than two nor more than four members whose names they would like considered by the Board of Governors of the society as members of the Naval Advisory Board of Inventors, of which Secretary Daniels has named Thomas A. Edison the head. The Board of Governors will select three or more names, from which Dr. Weston will be empowered to select the two men who will represent the guild on the naval board.

"Included among those members of the guild who would be eminently eligible for the appointment," Thomas Robins, Secretary of the guild, said in a communication to the members, "there are some who are also members of the great technical societies, and it is therefore possible that their names may be presented by one or more of those societies. It is to provide against this double nomination of the same man that it is proposed that the final selection of our candidates be left to our President, who will consult with the governing bodies of the other societies before making the final appointments."

FORD EXPECTS TO REACH 95.

Wants to Work All His Life, He Says on Fifty-second Birthday.

DETROIT, July 31.—Henry Ford, on the fifty-second anniversary of his birth, yesterday, said that he believed that he would live to be at least ninety-five, that he wanted to live just as long as he was able to work, and that he hoped to be able to work just as long as he lived.

If he had not been reminded that Friday was his birthday by the newspapers and his personal friends Mr. Ford would have forgotten it.

In his brief birthday statement Mr. Ford attributed his excellent health to moderation in food.

DIES AFTER A HOME RUN.

Young Brooklyn Glass Blower Had Just Finished Circling the Bases.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., July 31.—Overcome by his exertions and the heat, Landon C. J. Bell, 23 years old, of Brooklyn, N. Y., dropped dead just after he had made a home run in a factory league game here this afternoon.

Bell was pitching for the Franklin Electric Company, where he was employed as a glass blower. After making the run he complained of a stitch in his side, but when advised to rest, laughed it off. A moment or two later he toppled over dead.

Charles Dod Ward.

Charles Dod Ward, a retired civil engineer and one of the oldest members of the American Society of Civil Engineers, died on Friday at his home, 702 St. Nicholas Avenue, in his seventy-eighth year. From 1894 until 1910 he was an engineer in the Department of Water Supply of Brooklyn, before which he had done much railroad and water works surveying and designing. Mr. Ward is said to have been largely responsible for Gatun Dam on the Panama Canal, which was to have been located at Bohio prior to his report. His widow and a daughter survive him.

Obituary Notes.

MRS. MARY MCELHINNY AMADOR, widow of Dr. Maria Amador, who was formerly a Vice Consul for the United States in Colombia and a relative of Dr. Manuel Amador, first President of the Republic of Panama, died on Friday at the home of her sister, Mrs. H. Keating, 863 Stirling Place, Brooklyn. Her husband died in 1910.

Mrs. EMILY M. THOMAS TODD, wife of William R. Todd and a daughter of the late Captain Thomas Mayhew Thomas, died yesterday at her home in Morristown, N. J., and her funeral services will be held at the home of her brother, Alonzo A. Thomas, 1,288 Dean Street, Brooklyn, Tuesday. Besides her husband she left three sons, Dr. Maurice John J. Todd, W. Parsons, and James M. Todd.

NICHOLAS YOUNG, 38 years old, a member of Old Glory Council, Jr., O. U. A. M., died on Thursday at his home, 105 Bleecker Street, Brooklyn, leaving a widow, two sons, and a daughter.

Mrs. MARY SARLE, wife of Michael Sarle, died on Friday at her home, 7 Broadway, Flushing, L. I. She was 49 years of age.

ROBERT R. WILSON, 28 years old, a stationary engineer, is dead at his home, 11A Somers Street, Brooklyn.

Mrs. MARCELLA GATES, widow of Patrick Coates, and for many years a member of St. Augustine's R. C. Church, died on Thursday at her home, 130 Sixth Avenue, Brooklyn, aged 80 years. She had been a resident of the borough for more than sixty years, and is survived by three daughters.

CIRO MARESCA, an Italian merchant and grocery importer, died on Friday at his home, 15 Charlton Street, in his sixty-fifth year. He came to this country thirty years ago and was a member of the Church of Our Lady of Pompeii.

800 MACHINISTS QUIT AT LEADERS' ORDERS

STARTS SERIES OF STRIKES

Other Factories, Including E. W. Bliss Works, to Face Demands, Each at Different Time.

More than 800 machinists swarming out of the Garvin Machine Company's plant, at Varick and Spring Streets, yesterday at noon were informed by business agents of the International Association of Machinists that a strike had been declared on the company. The announcement caused excitement and surprise. The men loitered about the big doors of the factory for several hours, discussing the advisability of the strike, which they learned had been ordered by J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the International Association.

Three business agents of the association, E. J. Deering, M. J. Carney, and William Bramley, were at the place to proclaim the strike. They told the machinists not to return to work tomorrow unless the company made three concessions: An eight-hour day throughout the shop, a wage ranging from $3.50 to $5 a day, and double pay for overtime.

The Garvin Machine Company has been manufacturing a great deal of machinery used in the production of ammunition. Keppler said the strike would paralyze the plant. On the other hand, the officers of the company asserted they had received no notification of the strike. Eugene E. Garvin, Vice President, said he first suspected trouble when he saw excited groups of machinists on the sidewalk outside of the factory. He would not discuss concessions.

"The whole matter," said Mr. Garvin, "will have to be referred to the National Metal Trades Association."

The strike was ordered by Keppler after a long conference in the Marlborough Hotel. Those present, besides Keppler, were J. J. McEntee, general organizer, and the local agents, Deering, Bramley, and Carney. They had been considering the declaring of a general strike on all the munition plants in the city, including the E. W. Bliss works in Brooklyn, but decided to take up the various plants in succession instead of calling a general strike. Keppler favored this method, because with only a part of its men out in a given period the union would conserve its financial resources and be in a better position to win.

"We are going to go after every one of them," said Keppler last night. "We started with the Garvin Company because it was one of the high players, and the conditions under which the machinists work are bad in both hours and wages. But once we have brought the Garvin officials to a settlement, we will swoop down on all the rest like a cyclone."

Asked to give the names of the other firms which the union intended to assail, Keppler replied:

"I am not going to announce beforehand just what companies we are going to attack next. It is best to take them by surprise. When the men strike, we will make the announcement, and not before."

Keppler said it would be impossible for him to tackle the situation at the E. W. Bliss works until the end of this week. By that time, he expected, the strike at the Garvin plant would have been settled. He said he would go to Philadelphia today to confer with the union leaders there, and tomorrow would go to Plainfield, N. J., for two days or more to superintend agitation which might result in a strike of 1,500 machinists.

"The outlook in Plainfield is very bright," said Keppler. "From what information I have, there seems to be a possibility for a peaceful agreement satisfactory to the machinists."

As part of the general campaign for better hours, the mechanics and laborers employed in the Neurer Steel Barrel Works at 307 Borden Avenue, Long Island City, struck yesterday morning. Their demand for a nine-hour day and a half holiday on Saturdays was refused. They have been working ten hours a day. The employers decided to close the plant. The men who struck numbered 175.

MOTOR PLANT RAISES WAGES.

War Bonus Also for Workmen in Plainfield, N. J., Factory.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., July 31.—L. F. Ayer, Superintendent of the International Motor Company, notified 1,000 men who are manufacturing auto trucks at the rate of six a day for the Allies that beginning Monday, a day's work would consist of eight hours and in addition to 10 per cent. wage increase, the men would receive a special war bonus of 20 per cent. The wage schedules cover tool makers, machinists, machine operators, assemblers and kindred labor.

The war bonus aggregates 20 per cent. of the total amount earned by the men in the classes affected. This unexpected action has placed a damper on the strike movement which was scheduled for Monday next by J. J. Keppler, Vice-President of the International Association of Machinists.

The change in conditions will apply also to 500 men employed in the Allentown (Penn.) branch of the company.

RAISES STEEL MEN'S WAGES.

Bethlehem Company Grants a 10 Per Cent. Increase to 17,000.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Penn., July 31.—A voluntary increase in wages, which will average about 10 per cent., was granted the 17,000 employes of the Bethlehem Steel Company today, according to an official announcement. The increase will go into effect Aug. 1. The monthly payroll of the local company is now about a million and a quarter.

It is believed that the Bethlehem Steel Corporation will take similar action with its subsidiary plants, the Union Iron Works, San Francisco; Pore River Shipyards, Quincy, Mass.; Harlan & Hollingsworth, Wilmington, Del., &c.

The increase is expected to quiet whatever unrest among the workmen there may have been and also to attract here skilled mechanics, some 2,000 more being needed.

DEAR COPPER AIDS WORKERS

Bonus of 5 Per Cent. Given to 1,200 Miners in Calumet.

CALUMET, Mich., July 31.—The Wolverine and Mohawk Copper Mining Companies in paying their 1,200 employes today included an extra check for 5 per cent. of the total wages of June as a bonus, because of the high price at which copper is selling. It came as a surprise to the men.

It was unofficially announced that the two companies might continue to pay the same bonus every month while copper remains at 20 cents a pound or better. It was said that several other mining companies will follow this example.

Wage Bonus for Colt Arms Makers.

HARTFORD, Conn., July 31.—Employes of the Colt Patent Fire Arms Manufacturing Company were informed today that a bonus of 12½ per cent. would be paid to all, based on wages earned and dating from May 1 last.

GARMENT WORKERS VOTE IN FAVOR OF A STRIKE

60,000 Will Quit if Employers Fail to Accept Terms Made by Mayor's Council.

Officers of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union announced yesterday that 30,000 members had voted yesterday in favor of declaring a strike within a few days if the Cloak, Suit, and Skirt Manufacturers' Protective Association fails to approve the rulings of Mayor Mitchel's Council of Conciliation.

The voting was done at Forward Hall, 175 East Broadway, and at eight other polling places. The instructions accompanying the ballot were printed in English, Yiddish, Russian, and Italian, and the vote, according to the union officials, was almost unanimous in favor of striking. There are about 60,000 members of the union in all, and the remaining 30,000 will vote today and Monday.

President Schlesinger of the union said yesterday that there had been attacks by gunmen recently on pickets of striking unions, and that he had appealed to Police Commissioner Woods for police protection for union men if the general strike is ordered.

Dr. Felix Adler, Chairman of the Council of Conciliation, who is out of town, has been urged to return and open peace negotiations. It was said yesterday that Mayor Mitchel on Monday will call for another meting of the Council of Conciliation.

Union officials say that they have made arrangements to call out workers on short notice from 2,000 shops.

GOMPERS LAUDS 8-HOUR DAY

Calls It Greatest Boon to Humanity in Meriden Speech.

MERIDEN, Conn., July 31.—Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, was the chief guest of the Meriden Central Labor Union today when that body observed its twenty-fifth anniversary with an outing.

Speaking of the recent strike at the plant of the Remington Arms and Ammunition Company at Bridgeport, Mr. Gompers said:

"The employes have gained a better organization, higher pay, and that greatest boon, not only to labor, but to the country and humanity in general—the eight-hour day."

Profit Sharing for 3,000 Workers.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 31.—Notice was given to 3,000 workmen by the Locomobile Company of America today that profits would be shared with them. The plan is to increase wages proportionately with the increase of product.

AIDING DESTITUTE FAMILIES.

Brooklyn Bureau of Charities Appeals for Two Mothers.

Lack of employment and intemperance have brought T.'s family to the brink of destitution. The man has been committed to the State Farm for inebriates, and Mrs. T. finds it beyond her strength to support her six children, the youngest only 2 years old. The Bureau of Charities, 69 Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, is endeavoring to keep the family together. The mother earns $4 a week, but the necessities of life cost her large family nearly $12. A fund of $100 is being raised to make up the $8 each week for three months, when it is hoped the father again will be able to return to work. Gifts may be marked "for 0220," and mailed to the bureau.

When B. deserted his wife he left her with four small children dependent on her. On account of poor health the woman has not been able to undertake much work, and each week the expense bill is some $4 larger than her earnings. She has applied for aid to the Bureau of Charities, and a fund of $105 is being raised to give the family a weekly pension. Meantime, the health of the mother and children is receiving attention. Gifts may be marked "for 0221."

The bureau acknowledges the following contributions received from persons who could not be reached by mail: Appeal 0216, from B., $1; 0216 and 0217, C. P., $2; cash anon., $2; in response to letters, cash anon., $1; cash anon., $1; from H. D. H., for Mrs. N., $2.

WIDOW NEEDS MORE AID.

Second Plea for Poor Mother Suddenly Bereft.

The Widowed Mothers' Fund Association, 192 Bowery, issued an appeal last week for a widowed mother with six children, whose husband died in his sleep very recently of heart disease. The woman has been served with a notice to move from her rooms, and the association appealed for donations to pay for rent and food. Various sums amounting to $24 in all, have been received, but much more than that will be needed to set the mother's mind at rest for at least the next six months. Her baby will be born in September, she is very weak, and must be spared as much as possible. A little boy of 3 is suffering with pneumonia since Monday last, and the poor woman is at her wits' end.

Any one wishing to relieve the pitiful conditions in this home will kindy address Mrs. Henry Zuckerman, 80 Broadway, New York.

Thanks are offered to "L. M. S." for $10, "Mrs. E. D. C.," and "M. L. B." for $5 each, N. M. Levy, "Friend," "Mrs. L. M.," "J. G.," "R. G. & Co." for $1 each in response to previous appea.

DRUG LAUNDERED INTO SHIRT

Warden Finds Tombs Prisoners Have New Way of Getting Heroin.

Warden John J. Hanley of the Tombs prison was puzzled to find several prisoners chewing their fresh laundered shirts and collars yesterday and his investigation revealed the source of the mysterious supply of heroin these prisoners have been obtaining for the past few weeks. Keepers have noticed for some time that these prisoners seemed to take delight and relish munching their laundry and reported the matter to the Warden.

"They are eating their shirts again!" they told the Warden yesterday, and he investigated.

It was found that the shirts and collars were laundered by relatives of the prisoners who used starch containing a strong solution of heroin. The Warden said that the laundry would be handled differently in the future. Another trick the Warden caught yesterday was when a man with a glass eye called to see a prisoner. When the eye was examined it was found to contain a tiny package of heroin.

SUES HAVEMEYER ESTATE.

Composer Says Mrs. Emily de Loosey Promised Him $30,000.

The executors of the estate of Mrs. Emily de Loosey Havemeyer, who dieu in Switzerland on May 3, 1914, were sued in the Supreme Court yesterday by Max Vogrich for $30,000. Mrs. Havemeyer was the wife of Theodore Havemeyer.

The plaintiff says that he was employed by her in February, 1898, as a composer and pianist; that he was induced to continue in her employ by her promise to leave him $30,000 in her will, and that he refused many advantageous offers because of the agreement. She left him $10,000, but no fund out of which the bequest could be paid. The plaintiff says that Mrs. Havemeyer sent him a copy of an alleged clause in her will bequeathing him the amount promised.

MID-SUMMER FURNITURE SALE
A Cash-Created Opportunity

PRICE decides, when you come down to facts. Do you—does any one else—want to pay more for furniture when you can get it for less?

People take it for granted nowaday that a good store carries furniture worthy of its reputation. Other great stores besides Macy's may claim high quality and fine, extensive stocks.

The point is that Macy's has all these advantages—and another advantage, besides, that no other store can claim.

IT'S the absolute, final advantage of price that only a business on a wholly CASH basis can possibly secure!

With no heavy burden of "charge accounts" or "instalment plans" to bear—with no need to reckon the cost of credit—with CASH resources always ready to swing the biggest deal—Macy's can and DOES undersell all other stores in the City.

Bedroom Furniture

An air of restful dignity should be characteristic of the design of furniture for the bed-chamber. The symmetry and grace of these pieces contribute to achieve that effect of harmonious repose. Their beauty will be as great a surprise as these matchlessly low prices:

Rich Oriental Rugs

You will take an esthetic delight in the inspection of these rugs and a far greater, permanent delight in their possession. Beauty only possible to the Eastern weaver's art—and prices only possible to a store with ready cash.

Spot cash secured these wonderful pieces before the prices advanced, so we can say with assurance that other stores can't equal our values.

Nor can their beauty be duplicated. The Chinese Rugs, especially, are noteworthy for elegance. They are deep-piled, silky beauties, mostly with a ground of marvelous blues, ranging from a faint azure shade to the dark, vibrant hue of midnight. The designs reproduce famous 16th, 17th and 18th Century antiques, and shades of gold and tan predominate.

Oriental Runners for Hall and Stairs at $26.75

New Moussoul Rugs at $14.48

HORSE SHOW HONORS GO TO F. M. WARBURG

White Plains Entries Head List of Winners at Monmouth County's Annual Exhibit.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., July 31.—With ideal weather and a card of extraordinary merit, embracing no less than six championship events, the closing session of the Monmouth County Horse Show at Hollywood Park today attracted the largest gathering of the week. Cottage colonists appeared in numbers, equaling, if not surpassing, the best attendance mark reached at any time since the initial exhibit twenty-two years ago.

As a sort of skirmish preliminary to the later events of the afternoon Charles E. Coxe and Walter H. Hanley competed in the opening class for ponies in harness. The silver cup offered by Myron H. Oppenheim was awarded to Mr. Coxe's Tissington Amity, a bay mare, which has figured prominently in the distribution of first awards during the week. Mr. Hanley's Bit of Fashion captured the second ribbon, the third going to James C. Brady's Mel Valley Flame.

Of the ten entrants in class 36, the judges awarded first honors and the Martin Beck prize to Harry Balfe's chestnut gelding Maximum as the best exhibit for saddle horses 15 hands and over, carrying not less than 200 pounds. George Crouch's Fisherman received the red ribbon, A. W. Atkinson's Sandy McDonald, the yellow, and George G. Rohlig's Wanderer, the white.

Two of the principal exhibitors at this year's show engaged in an interesting contest for honors in Class 6, for pairs of harness horses. The competitors were Felix M. Warburg of White Plains, N. Y., and Emil Seelig of New York. The former showed Woodlands Empress and Woodlands Emperor. Mr. Seelig's stable was represented by his pair of chestnuts, Flashlight and Golden Rod. Mr. Warburg got the decision.

In the same division later in the afternoon Mr. Warburg joined issue with William Ziegler, Jr., of Noroton, Conn., and was again victorious. The conditions called for pairs over 15.2 hands. For this contest Mr. Warburg sent into the ring Woodlands Marquis and Woodlands Countess, who were pitted against Mr. Ziegler's handsome team of big geldings, The Pilot and The Steward. The trophy was offered by J. Horace Harding.

Keen interest was centred in the judging of the children's event, Class 44, for ponies under saddle. This class, which attracted a field of seven, was open to ponies not exceeding 13.2 hands and ridden by children under 14 years of age. Kate Cahn, a girl of 10 years, piloted James C. Brady's Lady Mine to victory and won the John McE. Bowman silver cup. Miss Katherine Garner West, with her brown geldint Swagger, was second, while Miss Laura Harding finished third with Humming Bird.

A. W. Atkinson of Merchantville won distinction for New Jersey in a pretty three-cornered competition with Felix M. Warburg and William Ziegler, Jr., in Class 25 for harness tandems. Mr. Atkinson exhibited Supreme Polonius and Walton Treasure, and second honors fell to Wr. Warburg's Empress and Emperor.

Admirably ridden by Miss Louise Webb, John T. Hartford's bay mare Gossip won the blue ribbon and President Content's prize, having triumphed over a formidable field in Class 35 for ladies' saddle horses exceeding 15.2 hands ridden by ladies. Harry Balfe's Maximum, with Mrs. C. M. Allaire as the rider, carried off second honors. F. M. Warburg's Marquis and Countess won their second blue of the afternoon in Class 11 for pairs to mail phaetons. William Zeigler, Jr.'s, The Pilot and The Skipper got second award.

The first of the championship events was Class 42 for horses having taken a first or second prize under saddle at any recognized show. Four horses were shown in the first division, which was won by Walter H. Hanley's bay gelding Twilight. The winner was ridden by James Schweiger; second place in this division was won by C. Douglass Frank's Sefton Girl, in charge of Hugh Willoughby. There were three entrants in the second division, the championship going to John A. Hartford's bay mare Gossip, who was also ridden by James Schweiger.

The Corinthian class for qualified hunters was marked by a series of thrills, Miss Cornell's Rock Cress starting the excitement by plunging into the five-rails jump. S. B. Wing's Butler Thompson helped to enliven matters by wildly bolting the second jump and throwing his rider at the first hurdle. There were a dozen entries ridden by amateurs in regular hunting costume. After a long session of judging, the blue rosette was pinned upon Charles E. Coxe's Bally Heather. The reserve ribbon was given Bloodstone, from the same stable, and S. B. Rice Wing's Maple Leaf won third place.

Rock Crest, with Dick Donnelly up, redeemed himself by winning the championship for Miss Vira Cornell in Class 53 for hunters and jumpers. James C. Brady's Foxy Foot was second. The championship prize for horses not exceeding 15.2 hands in single harness was won by Edward B. McLean's Lady Dilham, and A. W. Atkinson's Polonius was awarded the reserve.

F. M. Warburg, who heads the list of winners, won his third blue ribbon of the afternoon and the seventh at the show by capturing the championship in Class 21 for pairs, with Emperor and Empress. William Ziegler's Meteor and Marquis were second. The championship in Class 20 for horses in single harness exceeding 15.2 hands, was won by William Ziegler, Jr.'s The Pilot, while Edward B. McLean's Nala took the reserve.

William Ziegler, Jr., showing The Pilot and The Steward, triumphed in the final championship event for pairs exceeding 15.2 hands. Second place went to F. M. Warburg's Countess and Marquis.

After trailing along in second place for one circuit of the oval, Molly Gibson, owned by Mrs. Karl Whittendale and ridden by Harry Bamberger, leaped into the lead coming down the stretch, and won the half-mile race for galloways, which ended the show. Willie Payne Farm's Pat was second.

YANKEES BEAT WHITE SOX—GIANTS LOSE AND WIN—PROBABLE A. A. U. VICTORS

CHICAGO BASEMAN TOSSES GAME AWAY

With Score Tied, Blackburne Throws Over Fournier's Head and the Yanks Win.

Hughey High, the baby-grand outfielder of the Yankees, made all the full-grown players feel cheap at the Polo Grounds yesterday when he cudgeled a home run to the right field stand. Hughey committed this hit against Joe Benz of the White Sox in the fourth inning.

Benz was even more surprised than Hughey and Joe said to himself that if a little bit of a player like High could puncture his pitching for a man-sized clout, it was about time he retired from the game. Joe's anger increased until the last half of the ninth inning, when Dan'l Boone slashed out a double and Benz completely lost control and hit Hartzell.

Then Russ Blackburne shared Benz's loss of control and threw the ball over Jacques Fournier's roof while Boone romped home with the victory. Score 2 to 1. When it comes to throwing a game away, Blackburne has gained a place up near the head of the class.

They had a nice day for the game anyway. If it was hotter anywhere than at the Polo Grounds yesterday, it wasn't in this world. Palm Beach suits felt just like fur overcoats. Even in the shade of the grandstands, men got sunburned. It was so hot that even Umpire Tommy Connolly almost got thawed out. They didn't have to light the grill in the hot dog department, but just laid the frankfurters out in the sun until they sizzled. Even the ice cream cones were scorched.

The position of the equator was temporarily moved to the Polo Grounds. The warm spell agreed with the pitchers and Ray Caldwell and Joe Benz had the closest twirling argument of the season. Caldwell was in rare shape and made Chicago's best hitters bow in subjection. The slim telegraph artist fanned Jean Jacques Fournier three times and made the crowd happy. Folks were thrown into spasms of delight in the fourth inning when Caldwell struck out Edward Trowbridge Collins.

The only time that Caldwell gave the Sox any leeway was in the fifth inning, when a cluster of three singles paved the way for the Chicago's lone run. Fournier opened the session by striking out.

The fans considered this a huge joke and laughed heartily. It's a funny thing about baseball fans. When a visiting player strikes out, everybody laughs, but when one of the home lads fans, the umpiring is something awful.

John Collins whacked a clean single to right and died stealing. Happy Felsch got a pass and Mayer poked a grounder to deep short. Boone made a difficult stop, but was not in position to make an accurate toss to first, so the ball was high. Blackburne singled to right and Felsch romped home. Doc. Cook toyed with the ball for a few moments for some reason or other and by that time Mayer was around at third. Caldwell then decided to squelch the White Sox gayety and made Benz sky to High.

That run happened to tie the score because in the fourth inning High, the first man up, smashed a homer against the balustrade of the upper tier of the right field grandstand.

Caldwell and Benz were both pitching so well that if it had not been for Blackburne's wild throw, the teams would be playing yet. Eddie Murphy got a scratch hit off Ray in the sixth inning and Weaver sacrificed. Eddie Collins hoisted a fly to Barney in centre. After the catch Murphy raced to third. Ball and man arrived together and Hartzell was positive that the runner was out. Connolly took the side of the question which prompted Bill Donovan to dispell his smile and think terrible things about the umpire. Two things that Bill doesn't like are umpires and hot weather.

Dan Boone opened the ninth with a two base slam to left field. Hartzell was struck on the leg by one of Benz's shoots. Pipp was the next man up and the crowd yelled for him to give the ball a ride. Donovan and Pipp had a chest-to-chest talk and Wallie laid down a sacrifice to Blackburne at third. "Lena" scooped up the ball neatly and heaved it high over Fournier's head, while Boone raced in with the glad news. The score:

Athletics Win in Fast Time.

PHILADELPHIA, July 31.—A pitching duel between Wyckoff and Harstad here today resulted in a victory for Philadelphia over Cleveland, 1 to 0. Only twenty-eight batsmen faced Wyckoff. The only run of the game was scored by Healey in the eighth inning on his single. Wambsgans's muff of Turher's throw on Walsh's grounder, an out and Schang's single. The game was played in one hour and eleven minutes, it being one of the shortest ever played here. Score:

MATTY FAILS IN BOX, BUT JEFF TRIUMPHS

Giants Again Share Honors with Cubs in Double-Header at Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., July 31.—Another bargain baseball bill was divided on the West Side today. Heavy batting by the Cubs gave them the opener 7 to 3, but poor playing by Cheney and Pierce cost them the second contest, which went to the Giants 9 to 2. By breaking even the Cubs fell back into fifth place.

Two big innings, each featuring a home-run drive, boosted the Cubs to victory in the first game. One of these exploded Christy Mathewson when a circuit shot by Cy Williams, producing three runs in the fourth, and Ritter, who succeeded the veteran, also took a mauling which added four runs in the fifth.

Ten thousand fans turned out for the second double-header of the series, and were treated to a regular game of ball despite the four errors committed by Pete Knisely, who was substitute second baseman. Seven chances sailed Pete's way and he managed to handle three without erring. Despite the rocky support accorded him in the vicinity of the keystone sack, Big Jim Vaughn pitched in spectacular fashion until the eighth, when he was touched for two runs. The southpaw fairly steamed as he turned in round after round of good pitching, and finished his assignment by having yielded eight hits, Doyle batting 1,000 with three bingles and a pass.

Matty got safely by Roger's heavy artillery during three sessions, allowing but two hits. Then trouble beset the Old Master. Fisher pried open the fourth with a single and advanced on Schulte's sacrifice, but was nipped on the line when Zim grounded to Lobert. Knisely singled past Lobert and followed Heine home when Williams spanked a liner into the corner of right field.

Ritter got a merry reception in the fifth, McLarry leading the attack with a homer against the score board in right field. Vaughn followed and Good was safe on Ritter's low peg to first base. Fisher doubled and scored with Good on Schulte's swat to right. Knisely then poled one, counting Schulte.

The Giants scored in the sixth on Knisely's muff of Robertson's fly and Doyle's single. They added two more in the eighth on a pass to Burns, singles by Robertson and Doyle, and Fletcher's sacrifice lift to Williams.

Cheney's sojourn on the peak in the second game was short. At the end of the first round McGraw's men were holding a five-run margin. Larry's excessive wildness spelled his undoing. Seven Giants faced the Oklahoma pitcher—two walked, one singled, another tripled, and a fly rounded out four runs. Pierce, his successor, was touched up for another tally, allowed one in the second, and two in the third, then Zabel was pressed into service and checked the visitors.

With one gone in the opener Robertson and Doyle walked, the former scoring on Fletcher's drive to right. Merkle hit to Murray, who subbed at second base, and Red's late throw home missed Doyle. Lobert lifted to Schulte and Fletcher registered, Merkle following on Brainerd's triple to left. Pierce replaced Cheney and Brainerd scored when Meyers rolled a dinky hit to Fisher. The Giants got another in the second on a pass to Burns, an infield out, and Fletcher's drive. Murray doubled in the Cubs' half, took third on Meyers's wild heave to centre, and scored on Archer's sacrifice fly to Merkle, who was posted in centre field.

Pierce disappeared after the third inning, in which a pass to Lobert and hits by Brainerd and Tesreau netted two more runs. Zabel was airtight in the fourth. He passed Meyers in the fifth, and successive shots by Tesreau and Burns put over the ninth for Gotham.

Zabel pitched fine ball during the last four innings, allowing only two hits. Tesreau was never in danger. Errors in the field by Fletcher and Tesreau spared Williams and Archer and Cyrus scored the final run on McLarry's lift to Robertson. Scores:

Alexander Unable to Save Game.

ST. LOUIS, July 31.—St. Louis divided a double-header with Philadelphia, winning the first game, 2 to 1, and losing the second, 8 to 0. A ninth-inning rally won the first game for St. Louis. Bescher opened with a double, and Long tripled, tying the score. Then Demaree was relieved by Alexander. After Miller walked and Wilson flied to Paskert, Snyder singled and scored Long, winning the game. Perdue was easy for the leaders in the second game, Luderus putting the ball in the right field bleachers for a home run with two men on bases. Scores:

CINCINNATI, Ohio, July 31.—Cincinnati batted Rudolph hard and won the fifth and last game of the series from Boston today, 5 to 3. Dale pitched fine ball for seven innings, but weakened a little in the eighth. The two errors made by Cincinnati cost two runs. Gowdy's throwing to bases was poor. Killifer and Mollwitz carried off the batting honors. Score:

SAM JACKSON TAKES JEROME HANDICAP—BROOKLYN NATIONALS DEFEATED TWICE

Sensation of Aqueduct's Closing Day—Time Has Been Beaten Only Once.

Sam Jackson furnished a sensational finish to the race meeting of the Empire City Jockey Club at the Aqueduct track yesterday. Ridden by "Tommy" McTaggart and carrying 113 pounds, he ran a mile in 1:36 4-5. This time has been beaten only once in a race—by August Belmont's Stromboli, at Belmont Park on Sept. 7 last, when he defeated Gainer and others in the race for the Jerome Handicap. Stromboli then ran the distance in 1:36 3-5, one fifth of a second better than the record Sam Jackson made yesterday.

Sam Jackson's time was a second and two-fifths better than the previous mile record over the Aqueduct track, made by M. L. Hayman's Orthodox eleven years ago. Amalfi was credited with a mile over the circular track at Syracuse last Fall in 1:36¼, but that has never been accepted as a record. The track was a hard rolled one such as is used only for horses driven to sulky. The filly Cristophene is credited with having run a mile over the Juarez (Mexico) track during the Winter meeting of 1913 in the same time as Sam Jackson's mile yesterday. There has always been a doubt as to the accuracy of that time, as the filly has never shown any such extreme speed since; nor had she done so before and she was a very common selling plater.

There is no doubt about Sam Jackson's performance, however, as there were in the neighborhood of a hundred owners and trainers experienced in timing who caught the time at from 1:36 1-5 to 1:37. While the first three furlongs were run in 0:12, 0:24 and 0:36, those were not Sam Jackson's records. He was last away at the start of the race and did not get to the front until the half-mile pole was reached. At that point he caught and passed Surprising and Coquette, which had been the pacemakers. Sam Jackson was at the three-quarters in 1:11, at the seven furlongs in 1:23 4-5, and finished the mile a half-dozen lengths in front of Coquette. Hodge, the favorite, was a poor fourth.

As a spectacle the race was hardly so exciting as three or four others run during the day. But when Sam Jackson won, and when the time was announced, it aroused a whirlwind of applause. The victory was a popular one. Every holiday visitor seemed to have a "tip" on Sam Jackson. They bet on him so confidently that the layers were badly hit. They had laid from 2½ to 3 to 1 against him freely. All of the "educated money" and the money of the "form players" was on Hodge, at evens or thereabout. But the layers were swamped with Park Row and Tenth Avenue money on Sam Jackson in small sums. The intake on Hodge did not begin to equal the outgo on Sam Jackson.

"Jack" McGinnis, who trains Sam Jackson, bought him as a suckling colt for $250, trained him, and nursed him along until he won the Saratoga Handicap in sensational fashion in 1913. He then took him to Louisville to train for the Great Endurance Stakes of four miles. Sam Jackson broke down in the work of preparation, and was pronounced a hopeless cripple, but McGinnis persisted with the horse, had him fired, and for two years worked at him until he came back here to run second in the Suburban Handicap, third in the Empire City, to win the Dunwoodie, and crown the performances with yesterday's fest. The horse is not in the Saratoga Handicap, but will be taken up there and an effort will be made to arrange a special race at a mile and an eighth, in which he may meet Roamer, Stromboli, The Finn, and such other good ones as may care to enter into such a sporting event as this would be. Sam Jackson's dam, Ravello II., is now owned by H. B. Duryea. She is in England, and she was the dam of Sweeper II., a much fancied horse for the Derby, which won the Two Thousand Guineas.

In the final race of the meeting yesterday, Racing Commissioner John Sanford introduced another of his rather sensational string of two-year-olds, Sevillian, which won easily. This, following the victories of St. Isidore and Royalist on previous days, indicates a pretty strong string of home-bred youngsters, and Mr. Sanford admits these are not the best. He has reserved the best for the Saratoga meeting, as is his custom. Summary:

FIRST RACE.—For two-year-olds which had not won at this meeting; selling; purse $500; five furlongs. Time—0:59.

Nollie, W. C. Daly's b. c., 112, 30 to 1 and 8 to 1, (R. Hoffman).....3

Resistible, Flag Day, Dancer, Jose, and Belle of the Kitchen also ran.

GREAT NECK LOSES IN POLO.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, July 31.—The withdrawal of the Philadelphia team, Bryn Mawr, from the senior polo championship left only two clubs to play in the series this afternoon at the Point Judith Club. Meadow Brook defeated Great Neck by a score of 15 goals to ½.

The trophy for this titular series, presented through the Tuxedo Club by William Waldorf Astor, represents the championship for the current year. Individual cups are awarded by the Polo Association. Teams enter this series without handicap.

The Great Neck team played poorly today in every period. This same North Shore four has played against this same Meadow Brook team several times this season and has always held the Westbury players to a small score. Twice Meadow Brook has won only by narrow margins.

H. P. Whitney was unable to play for Meadow Brook, and Malcolm Stevenson took his place. The winners scored in the opening chukker and increased their total in every period. Great Neck would hold for two or three minutes at a time and then the whole team would collapse.

At half-time the score stood 7 to minus 1½ goals. Not until the eighth period did the losers show form. Then Rumsey tallied twice in two minutes.

Line-up and summary:
Meadow Brook—Raymond Belmont, J. M. Waterbury, Jr., M. Stevenson, D. Milburn.
Great Neck—C. C. Rumsey, J. Watson Webb, C. P. Beadleston, L. E. Stoddart.
Goals earned by Meadow Brook, 15; allowed by handicap, 0; lost by penalty, 0; net score, 15. Goals earned by Great Neck, 2; allowed by handicap, 0; lost by penalty, 1½; net score, ½ goal.
Penalties—Stoddard, 2½; Beadleston, ½.
Referee—J. C. Cooley.

TEST FOR CAVALRY HORSES.

Lord Decies Offers Trophy for New Military Class in National Show.

Lord Decies, who won the Irish Derby with his thoroughbred colt Ballaghtobin, has notified the National Horse Show Association that he will offer a trophy this year for a new military class at the annual exhibition in Madison Square Garden, Nov. 6. Conditions of the competition have not yet been made, but it is thought the British army officer will set a new test for cavalrymen and horses.

STEEPLECHASE JOCKEY HURT.

Griffin Gets Bad Fall When Stars and Stripes Stumbles on Last Jump.

In the steeplechase at Aqueduct track yesterday, which was won by Senegambian, after a pretty race with Dixon Park and Cloud, Stars and Stripes fell at next to the last jump. His rider, a lad named Griffin, received a bad shaking up and was carried from the track at the conclusion of the races to St. Mary's Hospital in Jamaica. He was then in an insensible condition.

The attending physicians said that while no bones were broken he was so badly shaken up that the extent of his injuries could not be learned until he was fully restored to consciousness, though they would probably not prove fatal.

Montclair Horse Show Cancelled.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., July 31.—Owing to the death of J. M. Greenfield, the Montclair Horse Show Association has announced that this year's show, which was to have been held on Sept. 25, has been called off. Mr. Greenfield was President of the Association, and active in promoting the success of the annual show. He also was a prominent exhibitor, owning some of the finest carriage horses in the metropolitan district. He was planning to show a new pair at the coming show. The Horse Show Association Directors, at a meeting in the home of the Vice President, Vincent S. Mulford, decided to omit the show this year in respect to the memory of Mr. Greenfield.

Brilliant Colts in New Race.

The substitute for the Doncaster St. Leger, which will be called the September Stakes, will be decided over the last mile and a half of the famous Cesarewitch course at Newmarket next month. This race, which is the last "classic" of the English season, will bring together two of the most brilliant colts in recent years, Lord Decies's crack three-year-old Ballaghtobin, which won the Irish Derby, and Solly Joel's Pommern, winner of the English Derby.

McGOORTY KNOCKED OUT.

LONDON, July 31.—Eddie McGoorty of Oshkosh, Wis., was defeated at Sydney, N. S. W., tonight in the sixteenth round of a middleweight championship match with Les Darcy, an Australian boxer, according to a dispatch to the Central News Agency.

Notter Disappoints Boxing Fans.

The large crowd of boxing enthusiasts who braved the heat last night and attended the boxing show at the Broadway Sporting Club of Brooklyn were disappointed. Frankie Notter, the Brooklyn welterweight, who was scheduled to oppose Johnny ("Kid") Alberts of Elizabeth, N. J., in the main ten-round event, failed to appear and the contest had to be postponed. One of the advertised ten-round bouts was put on as scheduled, however, and while it lasted it was interesting. The principals were Tommy Bergen of this city and Lew Brown, of Brooklyn lightweight, and for four rounds the Manhattan boxer administered a severe beating to his opponent. In the fourth round, however, the referee intervened to save Brown from unnecessary punishment.

A four-round bout was then put on to replace the postponed main event, and at the conclusion of this contest the spectators were told to line up in front of the box office, where they would either receive their money back or obtain "rain checks" which would admit them to next Saturday night's show.

Western A. A. U. Associations Unite

SAN FRANCISCO, July 31.—Delegates of the Western associations of the Amateur Athletic Union from five States were in session here today. They adopted resolutions which will be placed on the ticket at the annual meeting of the A. A. U. to be held in New York next November. If these resolutions are adopted by the A. A. U. they will mean revolutionary changes in the constitution of the union. They are:

First—That any association be allowed to vote by proxy.

Second—That each association be allowed to elect its own members on the Board of Governors.

Third—That not more than one delegate-at-large be allowed from any one association.

The associations participating in the meeting were the Pacific, Pacific Northwest, Southern Pacific, Rocky Mountain, and Intermountain. These have combined to hold Western championship competitions in track and field, swimming, boxing, and wrestling.

The combination of these associations is the outcome of the desire for better and stronger representation with the parent body. It is the consensus beyond the Missouri that the A. A. U. is not doing all it can for track and field sports in the far West.

DODGERS HURLED BACK BY PIRATES

Brooklyn Loses Two Games—Mamaux Allows Three Hits in Shutout Victory.

PITTSBURGH, July 31.—The penannt aspirations of the Brooklyn team were jolted this afternoon when the Dodgers were beaten by the Pittsburgh Pirates in both games of a double header, by scores of 5 to 0 and 5 to 4. The Dodgers were outplayed in both contests. In the first game they could not do much with the delivery of Mamaux, the phenomenal young pitcher, off whom they got only three hits. O'Mara was the only Brooklyn player to reach third base, and this occurred in the last inning, and an error placed him that near to the plate. He started off with a single, the third and last hit made off Mamaux. He stole the only base in the game, and got to third on a fumble by Baird, of Wheat's grounder. There he was left.

Appleton pitched good ball for Brooklyn. The Pirates did not succeed in getting a hit off him until the fourth inning. They they got three in succession, but failed to score, because the first hitter was caught attempting to steal second base, and the other two were left on the bases.

In the eighth inning, however, he was fiercely attacked. Up to that period not a Pirate had reached third base, and only one got as far as second. Every Pirate batter went to bat in the eighth. Gibson led off with a three bagger and Schang was sent to run for him. Mamaux struck out, and was the only man fanned by Appleton. Then followed two hits in succession by Carey and Collins, which scored Schang. Johnston was hit with a pitched ball, filling the bases. Then Appleton let slip a wild pitch and Carey and Collins scored, while Johnston reached third base. He scored on a long fly by Hinchman. Then Wagner hit for two bases and a little later crossed the plate on a single by Viox. Five runs were in and the game was gone.

The second game lasted 10 innings and reserve players took part in it. The Pirates took what looked like a commanding lead by scoring four runs in the first two innings. But there was no let-up in the aggressive tactics of the Brooklyns, who amid the wonder of the spectators and the confusion of the Pirates tied the score in the eighth inning and compelled the contest to go into an extra period.

The Brooklyns used three pitchers, one stronger than the other. Smith began the struggle, but in the third inning he evidently became exhausted from bringing home Brooklyn's first run. When he faced the Pirates after his strenuous journey around the bases, they hit him for a single and a triple, and he was followed on the rubber by Dell. The latter did splendidly, not a Pirate getting to first base while he was in command.

During his stay the Brooklyns tied the score, and in order to accomplish this, a pinch hitter was used instead of Dell. The "sub" was Schultz, who made good by rapping out a single, which advanced McCarty, who started off with a single, to second base. Myers forced Schultz at second, but on a wild throw by Fox to first base to complete a double play, McCarty scored, and Myers reached second. O'Mara hit safely, sending Myers to third. Here Cooper took the place of Adams as pitcher, and at once made a wild pitch, on which Myers scored and O'Mara went out to second. A single by Daubert brought in O'Mara with the run that tied the score.

The Pirates won the game in the tenth after two men were out. Pfeiffer began the inning strong by striking out Carey. Collins hit for two bases, but Johnston was cut out on a foul fly to Miller, who had succeeded McCarty behind the bat. Hinchman rapped the ball into centre for a single, and Collins scored the run that won the game. The scores:

CHICAGO, July 31.—Chicago and Newark divided a double-header today, Chicago winning the first game, 7 to 5, and losing the second, 2 to 3. Moran was pounded for six runs by the locals in the first two innings of the opening contest. Campbell's home run with two on bases in the third inning of the second game gave Newark its victory. It was Schaefer Day, and friends of the veteran gave him a diamond ring. The scores:

Kansas City Takes Double-Header.

KANSAS CITY, July 31.—Kansas City took two games from Baltimore on "Stovall Day" by scores of 2 to 1. The first contest was a pitchers' battle between Rankin Johnson and George Johnson, the local Indian twirler. The second game also developed into a tight affair with pitchers dominating the situation. Baltimore had three men on bases with two out in the eighth, when a double play and an easy grounder retired the side. Manager Stovall of the Kansas City club was presented with a purse filled with gold pieces, and a bag of golf sticks. Scores:

Middletown Pitcher Drops Dead.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., July 31.—Landon C. G. Bell dropped dead here today while pitching in a factory league baseball game. Death was attributed to heated over-exertion. The young man had made a run in the previous innings. He succumbed as he reached for the ball, which had been batted to him as he stepped into the pitcher's box.

FLYING BOAT RACE FOR NEW YORK—MARSTON GOLF VICTOR AT EKWANOK—TENNIS

NEW YORK TO SEE FLYING BOATS RACE

Will Compete Here Soon for Power Boat Association's Cup.

For the first time in ten years a contest for the gold challenge cup of the American Power Boat Association is to be held this year on water adjacent to New York. This is the one classic of motor boat racing in America. There is promise of a fleet of ten contesting high speed boats.

The contest will consist of three races to be held on a course laid out in Manhasset Bay, off Port Washington, on Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday, Aug. 14, 16, and 17. The challenge cup is now held by the Motor Boat Club of America by virtue of the victory of its representative boat Baby Speed Demon II., owned by Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton, over all other contestants on Lake George last August. This cup is subject to challenge on six months' notice by any club in North America that is a member of the American Power Boat Association, or any motor boat club in the world having a membership of twenty-five or more. When a contest has been provided for clubs that are qualified may enter the contest by challenging not less than ten days before the date set for the first race of the match.

This year's match was made possible by the acceptance more than six months ago by the Motor Boat Club of America of a challenge issued by the Lake George Regatta Association, the previous holder of the cup. Any other club qualified to challenge may therefore come into the game by taking proper action within the next three days. The owners of at least seven of the ten boats whose appearance in the race is anticipated are members of the Motor Boat Club of America, whatever the clubs may be that they represent in the races.

Ankle Deep Too Will Race.

The boat representing the challenging organization is Ankle Deep Too, Count Mankowski's successor to the original Ankle Deep, winner of the cup in 1913. It was one of the challengers for the Harmsworth cup in the same year, one of its defenders in 1912, and winner of many races. Ankle Deep Too was designed by Toms, Lemoyne & Crane and built by Wood of City Island. She came to grief temporarily on her first spin at City Island about three weeks ago. Something went wrong, and she sank, and in sinking suffered such damage that it became necessary partially to rebuild her.

The defense of the cup by the Motor Boat Club of America will rest with Baby Speed Demon II., the winner last year. Commodore Blackton of the Motor Boat Club of America and his associates are inclined to the belief that nothing faster has been built as yet. The average speed of Baby Speed Demon II. in the three gold cup races of last year was forty-nine miles an hour, and in the mile trials that followed the races she covered the distance at the rate of 51.66 miles an hour. These were land miles. The nautical mile is a useless thing except in off-shore navigation. It is a sixtieth part of a degree of a great circle, and, therefore, convenient in making calculation at sea.

First Series in 1904.

The first series of races was held in June, 1904, on the Hudson River, off the Columbia Yacht Club, and the winner was Standard, a famous boat of the time, owned by Carl Riotti, and entered by the Columbia Yacht Club. A second series, held in August of the same year, was won by Vingt-et-un, owned by W. S. Kilmer of the Chippewa Bay Yacht Club. From that time until 1913 the cup remained on the St. Lawrence River, held at times by the Chippewa Bay, Frontenac, and Thousand Island Yacht Clubs. Two years ago it was won by Ankle Deep, and was taken to Lake George, and last year it fell to Mrs. Blackton's Baby Speed Demon II., representing the Motor Boat Club of America. During these ten years the speed of which a motor boat is capable has been more than doubled. Standard's record in 1904 was 22¼ miles an hour. That of Baby Speed Demon II. last year was 50.5 miles an hour, and her average for the total of 90 miles for the three races was 49 miles an hour.

Watch Hill Yacht Races.

WATCH HILL, R. I., July 31.—Light breezes favored the weekly racing program of the Watch Hill Yacht Club in Little Narragansett Bay today. Both the dory and handicap races were held in the afternoon, the dorw even starting at 2:30 and the handicap at 2:37. Gertrude, sailed by Ridley Watts of New York, finished first in the dory race, the time being 4:26:01. Schaden, sailed by R. B. Metcalf, finished second in 4:26:17, while Dorine, sailed by Miss Jean Turnbull, was third. The time was 4:26:36. In the handicap race Twinkle was a winner in 4:13:01; second place went to Marie, sailed by George Clark; time, 4:37:39½. Peanut, steered by Robert Barrie, finished third in 4:53:52.

Oarsmen Prepare for Regattas.

Harlem River oarsmen are preparing for the regattas of the next three months. Mehrhof, 1900 senior singles champion, is training Waldo Smith of the New York Athletic Club for the senior singles in the national championships at Springfield, Mass. By lowering Smith's stroke about four to the minute Mehrhof has increased his pupil's speed. Captain Sam Cramer of the Lone Stars is training six men and will pick a centipede for the Middle States regatta on the Schuylkill Sept. 6. The Interclubs are getting ready for their club regatta on Aug. 22, when they will row an eight-oared race with the Metropolitans. Heller of the Metropolitan, who lost the intermediate singles at Philadelphia last year by two seconds, is entered in the same event this year at Springfield, Mass. The Metropolitans expect to put crews in eight races in the Middle States regatta.

Old Rowing Champions Compete.

In the first week of June an aquatic fete was held on the Parramatta River, Sydney, to raise contributions for the Belgian Relief Fund, and among the many interesting events the one that stood out as the feature was the veteran scullers' handicap, in which Elias Laycock, Peter Kemp, and Jim Stanbury—all prominent in rowing circles in days gone by—competed. General disappointment was felt when it became known that William, Beach, another old-time rowing favorite, could not compete. Kemp, who was on the scratch mark, defeated Stanbury by half a length. The latter was the recipient of a handicap of three seconds. Laycock, allowed eighteen seconds, finished third. The latter was born on May 8, 1845; Kemp on Nov. 14, 1853, and Stanbury on Feb. 18, 1868.

Gadix Leads Motor Boats.

Special to The New York Times.

RED BANK, N. J., July 31.—A ten-mile handicap race featured the mid-summer regatta of the Red Bank Motor Club today on the North Shrewsbury here. William Russell's Gadix won the event in 1:52:25, corrected time, beating Archibald L. Miller's Jessie M. 11. by 12 seconds. Frank O. Grattan's Jeane was third. Cups were awarded the winners. A large fleet of yachts lined the course. A dance was held tonight on the lawn in front of the clubhouse.

JONES YACHT IN LEAD.

Carolina II., Pembroke Jones's yacht, of the New York Yacht Club fifty-foot one-design class, sailed by A. Bryan Alley, won the race for her class in the annual regatta of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club yesterday. Her victory was largely due to the fact that her skipper guessed right in the matter of a shift of wind on the last leg. She led Spartan over the finish line by 1 minute and 37 seconds.

She had rounded the first mark ahead because an earlier shift had enabled her to finish the first leg with a reaching jib, while Acushla and Iroquois, previously ahead of her, were still on the wind, but lost her position in a reach across the Sound, and regained it in the last half dozen miles.

The course for the 50-foot yachts was from the starting line, off the western end of Great Captain's Island, diagonally across the Sound to a buoy off Lloyd's Neck, thence to a buoy off Long Neck Point, and thence home, 20 miles in all. As the wind was east southeast at the start, windward work on the first leg and reaches on the others were anticipated, but the change in the wind gave some of the yachts a reach at the end of the first leg and a run with spinnakers set during the first half of the last leg.

There were 39 yachts in the regatta, but none of them attracted nearly as much attention as did Count Mankowski's high-speed motor boat Ankle Deep II., which came up from City Island during the starting interval. County Mankowski, who was at the wheel, said he had made the run from City Island in fifteen minutes. Ankle Deep II. flirted around to leeward of the fleet until after the last class had started, and then came alongside the committee boat, and disclosed herself as a short, very broad craft, very "wicked" looking in respect to speed possibilities.

Just to indicate what the boat can do, the Count, later in the afternoon, ran her twice across the bow of the committee boat, with her engines turning 800 times per minute, and the amateur sailors aboard, who don't know much about high-speed boats, were sure that she was the fastest thing afloat. Some of them, who are more familiar with such craft, guessed that she was going at the rate of better than 50 miles an hour. Then, as a squall threatened, Ankle Deep Too disappeared at speed in the direction of City Island.

Of the thirty-nine yachts at the starting line, four were of the fifty-foot class, six of the thirty-foot class, and seven of the handicap class. There were also two of Class R, five of the Larchmont Interclub class, a like number of the Indian Harbor one-design class and of stars, and three of the Glen Cove jewel class. The wind was light at the putset and the starts were not very brisk. At the finish there was a good breeze and some of the finishes were close. Opal of the jewel class, won from Brilliant by 15 seconds. Three of the Indian Harbor one-design class finished within 13 seconds, and Huihuhu, the first of the three, won second prize. Whiff and Lewanna, second and third of the Larchmont Interclub class, were only 7 seconds apart at the line. Winners in the several classes were:

SMALL BOATS IN REGATTA.

Star Class Will Be Feature of Atlantic Yacht Club Race Week.

George A. Corry, one of the most enthusiastic yachtsmen of Long Island Sound, is leaving no stone unturned to make the annual race week of the Atlantic Yacht Club, which starts on Monday, Aug. 23, the most important in the history of the club. Mr. Corry is particularly interested in the Star Class. There are more than sixty of these little fellows in commission, and Corry is trying to get at least one-half of the craft at Sea Gate. Twenty-two raced during the annual race week of the Larchmont Yacht Club, and they gathered without any particular effort on the part of the Regatta Committee of the club.

Not only are the Star boats coming to Sea Gate in goodly numbers, but the owners of other small yachts are rapidly entering the lower bay classic. Two of the thirty-footers of the New York Yacht Club have already been entered. One is Okee, the property of J. H. Mahlstedt, Commodore of the New Rochelle Yacht Club, and the other is Banzai, which belongs to Edmund Land, New York Yacht Club. At least four more of the thirty-footers are expected.

The Atlantic Yacht Club has issued a challenge for the Childs Perpetual Challenge Trophy, now held by the Larchmont Yacht Club. The challenge has been accepted, and the race will be sailed on Friday, Aug. 27. Other clubs may enter the struggle, each club being allowed two representatives.

CLARA LEADS MOTOR BOATS.

W. H. Frank's Cabin Cruiser in Poughkeepsie Club's Race to Fire Island.

Poughkeepsie yachtsmen made a clean sweep of the cabin-cruising motor boat race, which started on Friday night from their club house on the Hudson River, and finished off Fire Island Light, a distance of 125 miles. The first boat to cross the line yesterday afternoon was the Clara, owned by W. H. Frank; H. Vonderlinden's Bondy was second, and the Aloha, sailed by D. Saltford, was third. The winner's corrected time was 8:48:04.

The course was down the Hudson River, through New York Bay, around Coney Island, then on to Fire Island Inlet. There were seven entries, all of which finished. The yachtsmen were entertained at dinner last night by the Brightwater's Association, when the winners received their prizes. W. H. Frank was presented with a silver comfeq service valued at $125.

The success of the event was so marked that it has been decided to make it an annual affair. Next year's race will be from Fire Island Inlet to Poughkeepsie.

Josephus, a Nut, Won.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., July 31.—Yachtsmen that arrived here to take part in the cruise of the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club were entertained this afternoon by a regatta for the nut boats and the fifteen footers of the Centre Island organization. Among the former craft, the winner was Josephus, the property of Colgate Hoyt, Jr. The first fifteen footer home was Tamale, which belongs to S. Shaw.

EKWANOK CUP FOR BALTUSROL PLAYER

Max R. Marston Beats Parsons Seeley, 8 and 6, in Final on Manchester Course.

Special to The New York Times.

MANCHTSTER, Vt. July 31.—By playing almost faultless golf in the morning round of eighteen holes, Max R. Marston of Baltusrol took a commanding lead of 7 up on his opponent, W. Parsons Seeley of the Brooklawn Club of Bridgeport, and won the first President's Cup in the final at the Ekwanok Country Club today by a score of 8 up and 6 to play.

Marston's morning round of 68 was the best golf that has been seen in tournament play on the course in many years. He played five holes better than par, his game on the greens being perfect. The Baltusrol player's putting was deadly and he holed out from all corners of the greens.

Aside from a missed drive from the first tee and a foozled second shot on the seventeenth, his playing was noteworthy.

Seeley, who is a former Connecticut champion and a former member of the Yale golf team, won only two holes of the first eighteen, the others being halved or won by Marston. He did not play so well on the afternoon round, but Seeley did not play well enough to take advantage of Marston's faults. Seeley's medal score of the morning round was 79.

Seeley reduced Marston's lead slightly in the early part of the afternoon round, and was 6 down at the fifth hole, but the New Jersey champion's advantage returned to 7 at the eighth, where Seeley lost by getting into a trap. The match ended when Seeley took six for the twelfth, while Marston, after driving into the rough, got a 4 and ended the match. The summary:

First President's Cup, 36-Hole Final.—Max R. Marston, Baltusrol, beat W. Parker Seeley, Brooklawn, 8 and 6.

Third Sixteen, Final.—C. R. Leak, Garden City, beat Fulton Cutting, Essex County, 1 up.

Losing Eight of Third Sixteen.—C. M. Lark, Sunnybrook, beat A. M. Chase, Brockton C. C., 4 and 2.

Fourth Sixteen.—W. Nash Reid, Montgomery, beat J. A. Allen, Baltusrol, 1 up.

Sixth Sixteen.—H. MacMaster beat H. B. Knight, Philadelphia, C. C., 4 and 3.

Eighteen-Hole Handicap.—Won by C. H. Gardner, Agawam, 78, 3—75.

Gross Score Prize.—F. Snare, Havana, 84, 7—77, and E. Williams, Springfield, 97, 20—77, tied for net score prize.

Play off of the tie for prizes in best ball foursome contest.—Won by D. C. Corkran, Baltimore, and C. B. Buxton, Huntington Valley, 72, winning from A. G. McIlwaine, 2d, Hartford, and C. P. Eddy, Arcola, 73.

Cup Competition at Greenwich.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., July 31.—The golf competition at the Greenwich Country Club today was for the W. H. Truesdale Cup and the Club Cup for medal play. H. S. Marston led in the former event with a score of 87, 15—72, and also in the Club Cup event with the same score. The summary:

Truesdale Cup—H. S. Marston, 87, 15—72; M. B. Foster, 85, 12—73; L. J. Ehret, 97, 22—75; H. Hilton, 84, 78—76; D. Chapman, 85, 9—76; T. M. Hodgens, 94, 18—76; C. W. Tripp, 90, 14—76; G. H. Miller, 101, 16—85; D. T. Woodbury, 103, 18—85; P. H. Knapp, 100, 12—88.

GOLF ON NEAR-BY COURSES.

Play for Watkins Cup at Apawamis —Other Competitions.

Considering the season and the weather, there was a surprisingly large muster on the Apawamis Club course yesterday, more than 100 members playing rounds during the day. The chief incentive was a cup presented by B. H. Watkins, and his son, C. L. Watkins, was really the winner, returning a card of 74, 5—69. This was the best score Watkins had ever made, and although he felt justly proud of the performance he refused to take the prize on account of it being presented by his father. That left that well-known veteran, George H. Barnes, with a 75, 5—70, winner of the prize. C. L. Watkins, however, with his previously mentioned score, won the morning sweepstakes, while Harmon S. Graves, with 73, 5—68, won in the afternoon. The score:

C. L. Watkins, 74, 5—69; George H. Barnes, 75, 5—70; W. F. Hart, 86, 12—74; Harmon S. Graves, 79, 6—74; H. A. Goode, 87, 12—75; L. Platt, 85, 9—76; C. R. Manville, 90, 14—76; B. B. Lawrence, 91, 15—76; T. C. Fogel, 90, 15—75; Frederick S. Keeler, 82, 7—75; E. J. Laidlaw, 87, 8—79; C. R. Randebrock, 97, 17—80; H. Choate, 91, 12—79; Arthur Pell, 93, 13—80.

Final rounds in three classes in the July tournament were decided on the links of the Montclair Golf Club yesterday. J. Z. Baton won in the first division, defeating A. L. Pierson, Jr., 1 up, while J. C. Platt beat W. C. Cravath, 2 up and 1, for the B Cup. Ralph Starrett beat E. F. Miller, 3 up and 2 to play, in the final of the third sixteen. R. H. Gregory won the Class A handicap, returning a card of 83, 12—71, and A. R. Copper, with 72 net, led the field in the B division. The scores were as follows:

Class A.—R. H. Gregory, 83, 12—71; J. Z. Baton, 84, 11—73; W. E. Marcus, Jr., 77, 4—73; C. J. Turner, 80, 6—74; A. R. Allen, 83, 9—74; J. B. Cramer, 85, 10—75.

Class B.—A. R. Copper, 90, 18—72; J. W. Allen, 89, 14—75; H. L. Delano, 92, 16—76; R. C. Barbour, 94, 17—77; W. H. Loftus, 93, 15—78; A. D. Brown, 96, 18—78; E. W. C. Gray, 98, 18—80.

There was a sweepstakes on the card at the Country Club of Glen Ridge yesterday, F. W. Burdick winning Class A with 78, 6—72, while W. H. Humphreyville, with 90, 21—69, led in Class B. The following returned cards: Class A.—F. W. Baldwin, 78, 6—72; C. E. Schwinn, 84, 11—73; J. Lancaster, 90, 15—75; Russell Bickford, 89, 13—76; H. W. Benson, 96, 17—79; W. D. Lyons, 97, 17—80; W. F. Baggs, 94, 14—80.

Class B.—W. H. Humphreyville, 90, 21—69; C. Beckman, 97, 23—74; H. B. Rogers, 107, 27—80; C. R. Ellicott, 99, 18—81; T. W. Lindsay, 109, 27—82; J. R. Smith, 117, 25—92.

Members of the Forest Hills Field Club qualified in two classes for the August Cup yesterday, and, in conjunction with the testing round, was an eighteen-hole medal play handicap. J. Barton Garfield won in Class A, with a card of 77, 5—72, while there was a tie in the second division between J. Wells and S. Dixon, with respective cards of 89, 18—71, and 96, 25—71. The following qualified for subsequent match play:

J. B. Garfield, 77; W. Firth, 86; T. J. Liptott, 86; W. Becker, 87; R. Sanderson, 88; Dr. Washington, 89; H. O. Christl, 88; A. Wells, 89; C. Olozaga, 91; S. Michael, 93; Robert Gordon, 94; Dr. Bahling, 94; Victor Christl, 95; S. Dixon, 96; Schoonmaker, 96; M. Shayer, 98; M. Hontess, 100; Porter, 100; T. E. Owens, 100; S. Stanley, 101; S. Stiles, 102; J. E. Lott, 102; J. Fairbanks, 103; J. H. Blue, 104; J. J. Corcoran, 106; S. S. Gaylord, 104.

At the Deal Golf and Country Club yesterday there was an old-time turnout of members desirous of qualifying for the J. F. Shapley Memorial Trophy presented by W. R. Delehanty. There were thirty-two to qualify, and the leading cards were returned by E. V. Hartford, 92, 15—77, and H. A. Watson, 89, 12—77. These two players finished tied for the prize in the Class A Handicap. The leading scores were as follows:

Shanley Memorial.—E. V. Hartford, 92, 15—77; H. A. Watson, 89, 12—77; P. A. Proal, 86, 8—78; Stacey Smith, 95, 17—78; J. McQuail, 96, 15—78; R. S. Porter, 95, 16—79; C. J. Lyon, 97, 18—79; J. H. Hawley, 94, 15—79; A. B. Rode, 94, 14—80; E. W. Cone, 94, 14—80; J. E. Kelley, 97, 17—80; J. P. Gillespie, 90, 9—81; Warren S. Smock, 96, 15—81; W. R. Hockster, 94, 13—81.

At the Wykagyl Country Club the golfers tried their luck in a handicap versus par yesterday. A. B. Hunn won, finishing 3 down. He had an allowance of 14 strokes. The results were as follows:

A. B. Hunn, 14, 3 down; G. R. Gillett, 6, 4 down; J. H. Dinwiddie, 14, 5 down; C. R. Query, 14, 5 down; J. H. Burger, 20, 5 down; W. S. Stevenson, 7, 6 down.

In addition to the usual red card handicap in Classes A and B, at the Dunwoodie Country Club yesterday, members also qualified for the August Cups in two divisions. William Chilvers, with 79, 9—70 won the Class A red card, while N. K. Dalland returning 84, 19—65, showed the way in the B division. The final round match for the Class B Cup resulted in W. S. Evans winning decisively over N. Gough, by a 10 and 8 margin. The leading scores in the competition for the August Cup were as follows:

Class A.—William Chilvers, 79, 9—70; Ernest Terrence, 83, 12—71; J. C. Sharp, 84, 13—71; W. St. John, 78, 5—73; F. A. Jones, 86, 11—75; F. H. Sissin, 90, 14—76; Fuller Colville, 89, 12—77; A. M. Morris, 91, 12—79; N. D. Becker, 90, 8—81; F. E. Olin, 95, 10—85.

Class B.—N. K. Dalland, 80, 19—65; R. E. Forbes, 93, 18—75; A. Davenport, 99, 22—77; C. F. Keogh, 102, 25—77; John Macnair, 98, 20—79; W. Nye, 99, 20—79; W. C. Phillips, 106, 24—82; W. A. Milligan, 102, 18—84; A. Patterson, 116, 28—88; N. Bader, 107, 18—89.

At the Scarsdale Golf and Country Club yesterday W. C. Morrill and H. Menka tied for the Class A sweepstakes, with respective cards of 82, 6—76 and 86, 10—76. There was also a four-ball competition, in which E. P. Sanford and H. W. Shatman won with a combined total of 149.

Despite the heat quite a number of the Fox there yesterday, and in the eighteen-hole medal play handicap P. C. Parker, with 97, 30—67, won the net prize. This is one of the rare instances in which a Class B man happens to play several strokes better than his usual form. There was also the second round for the W. J. Elias Trophy, resulting as follows:

Howard Woolley beat J. D. Barnhill, 6 up and 4 to play; A. Anderson beat H. H. Lloyd, 4 up and 3 to play; H. L. Wyatt beat L. G. Spindler, 4 up and 3 to play; W. W. Van Loan beat J. D. Clarke, 1 up.

Aided by an allowance of nine strokes, N. W. Peters succeeded in winning the competition at the Englewood Country Club yesterday. It was a handicap versus bogey, and the player in question finished 5 up.

GOLF ANALYZED AND SIMPLIFIED.

This is the first of a series of articles on golf, with advice principally to beginners by such famous players as Vardon, Travis, Braid, Taylor, Ouimet, Ray, and Duncan.

No. 1—The Grip, Left Hand.

To establish a correct connection between player and club, is the fundamental of golf. Vardon, Braid, and Taylor, who have, between them, won the open championship of Great Britain (generally acknowledged as the world's championship) sixteen times in the last twenty years, all use the same form of grip. It is safe, therefore, to assume there is sound reason for their method of gripping the club or they would not be in accord in using it.

They represent three different physical types, in height, sie of hands, length of arms, &c., in fact, there are no points of physical resemblance. Ray and Duncan, still different types, use the same style of grip. "There is a reason."

The grip these men use is the overlapping grip, usually called the Vardon grip, because his use and success with it first called attention to it, although there is some doubt as to its origin.

To illustrate it, we will use photographs of Vardon's hands. Photograph No. 1 used with this article, shows the left hand. It will be seen that this hand is so placed, partly over the shaft, as to permit one using it, to see the joints of the first three fingers, where they join the hand. The V formed by the thumb and hand is pointing toward the right shoulder, not straight up. The thumb is on top of the grip and against the hand, closing the V. That part of the forefinger which shows in the photograph is pointing downward, in line with the V.

It is this position of the left hand, the right conforming to it, that automatically gives the "turn of the wrists" in taking the club to the top of the swing, as will later appear. It is the very beginning of a correct golf swing.

If the club is held in this manner with the left hand, it will be found that the tips of the second and third fingers will touch the large lump at the base of the thumb, the end of the second finger just at the joint where the thumb joins the hand. The end of the little finger will not quite go around the grip; there will be a space between it and the palm. The end of the forefinger will come to the first joint of the second finger.

EASTERN TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP

Williams and Washburn Defeat Wright and Johnson in Final Round of Doubles.

Special to The New York Times.

BROOKLINE, Mass., July 31.—R. Norris Williams, 2d, of Philadelphia, national singles tennis champion, and Watson M. Washburn of New York, won the doubles championship of the East yesterday on the courts of the Longwood Cricket Club, defeating Irving C. Wright of Boston and Wallace F. Johnson of Philadelphia, three sets to one, at 3—6, 8—6, 6—3, 6—4. The contest brought out the largest crowd of the week, one of the foremost spectators being Miss Molla Bjurstedt, holder of the national title.

As was predicted some spectacular work was witnessed and the winners were forced to play four sets before being proclaimed the victors. The play of both teams differed somewhat. The Washubrn-Williams team played a hard hitting and driving game, while Wright and Johnston used the chopstroke off the ground. To close followers of the sport the teams averaged up to what might have been expected of them.

Wright was active throughout the match, stopping hard drives, and although he could not quite hold his own he obtained many splendid gets, volleyed exceptionally well, and his overhead ball was powerful. Johnson lobbed well and checked the short lobs with good judgment, his volleying being better than usual. His low-out stroke hit the barrier often and he was weak on lobs which went deep.

In the first set both were uncertain, Williams being charged with thirteen errors—five being on double faults, three in one game, and one placement. His poor playing did not worry those who know his game, for in the second set a different story was told. He was wild, but was effective and reached the climax in the eleventh game with six successive places. Washburn, too, was better in this set, and had they not done so it might have proved disastrous, as their rivals put up such a clever defense that they forced them to go fourteen hard-fought games before being defeated, Johnson especially playing a great defensive game.

In seven games Washburn made four errors and nine earned points. Wright's score in this set was peculiar but for another reason, having five outs and nothing else. There were times in the match when the teams showed brilliant work, time and again bringing the crowd to their feet.

In the first set Wright and Johnson made a runaway of it, two strings of three games each giving them the first game 6—3. Here it turned, the favorites winning four games to love at the start of the second, only to fall into a slump of errors, and allowed three games to slip also, Williams won at love. A moment later the Boston-Philadelphia team tied the score with five all and gained a lead on the odd game, when Williams flashed his first real attack of the day and pulled it out of the fire after twelve points had been finished tied on the ad basis. Wright and Johnson pulled even, but although this and the next two games all went to deuce repeatedly, the coming champions managed to capture the set at 8—6.

In the third set, although the cut-stroke stars once more tied the score by putting down a love game, their rivals swept on to victory 6—3 and simply smothered them under a tidal wave of earned points in the fourth and deciding set in which Williams and Washburn tallied 28 against 11.

The winners will play those of the South and West and Pacific Coast in the National preliminaries August 10 and 11. Last year's National challengers, G. M. Church and Dean Mathey, have again won the Western honors, and William M. Johnson and Clarence Griffin the Pacific Coast tourney.

The two matches in the upper half of the fifth round in singles were also played today, the logical favorites winning, although N. W. Niles found his opponent, Robert Le Roy, a hard proposition. Niles won the first set, but in the second his troubles started, for the New York crack, who seven or eight years ago ranked in the middle of the first ten, struck an almost unbeatable streak, not only driving well but running into the net and volleying and smashing finely. After games had gone 2-all Le Roy played miles of his feet, his deep and speedy drives keeping him on the run from corner to corner, and the gallery were treated to an amazing spectacle of the ex-Massachusetts champion, himself one of the best driving exponents in the game, losing game after game.

Niles took a decided brace in the third set, neither being able to acquire a marked advantage until 12 games had been played. Niles made a final effort and won two in rapid succession, giving him the set. The fourth set was all Niles, although a turned ankle suffered by Le Roy may have helped Niles to win.

For Plainfield Club Golf Cup.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., July 31.—Another large field of golfers turned out at the Plainfield Country Golf Club this afternoon to engage in the weekly competitions for the Golf Committee Cup and the sweepstakes event. All of the afternoon's scores were generally good, all being below 90 net. In the Golf Committee competition, in the first event, Story Rowland returned the best score, coming in with a card of 74 net. In the sweepstakes D. H. Rowland's score was the best. The scores:

Golf Committee Cup.—R. Story Rowland, 83, 9—74; W. A. Engeman, 93, 13—80; D. H. Rowland, 95, 19—76; Howard H. Craig, 92, 16—76; W. A. Glenney, 88, 10—78; H. B. Osborne, 108, 30—78; Butler, 96, 12—74; Morris J. Dumont, 83, 12—71.

Sweepstakes.—D. H. Rowland, 95, 19—76; J. E. Osborne, 90, 14—76; W. A. Glenney, 88, 10—78.

The United States Naval Academy is starting Summer football practice with a squad of sixty-five men. Lieutenant Ingraham is the new head coach. The Middies are having Summer practice because they will be on a cruise later, and must do their work now instead of in September.

Second Lieutenant George Mitchell, who was killed in battle in France on July 22, was a nephew of the late Percy Holden Illingworth, Chief Government Whip, and was once amateur heavyweight boxing champion of the North of England. Mitchell was defeated by Georges Carpentier, the French heavyweight champion, in Paris last year. The bout lasted 1 minute 35 seconds.

The Washington Star gives the "real reason" for Manager Jones's recent short-term resignation of the St. Louis team management. It says: "The real reason for Jones's resignation was not disgust with the Federal League umpiring, but that the St. Louis Club wanted to assess Jones's stock in the Federal League clubs. When Jones signed for the management of the club last season he took a big block of the St. Louis Federal League stock. This, of course, has not paid dividends; but when the club fixed an assessment on the stockholders Jones resigned, and it was only after the officials of the club promised him that the assessment would not affect his holdings that he agreed to return as head of the team."

Archie Hahn, former University of Michigan track star and Olympic champion, has been appointed coach at Brown University to succeed Eddie O'Connor, the man who found Norman Taber, world's mile champion. Hahn has been running since he entered high school in 1898. In 1899 he broke the Wisconsin interscholastic record for 100 yards, and also the American record. Next he went 100 yards in 10 seconds and 220 yards in 22 2-5 seconds. He was graduated from Michigan in 1904. In the 1904 and 1906 Olympic races he made records in the 40, 50, 60, 75, and 100 yard dashes. He has been coaching steadily since.

The University of Pennsylvania, with a new Football Committee, has decided to hold two weeks of preliminary football practice, beginning shortly after the first of September. This will be the first time in more than five years that this has been allowed. For the last three years the Quakers have been forbidden to start practice before the middle of September.

MRS. BUNDY "COMES BACK."

Former Tennis Champion Defeats Title Holder in Straight Sets.

Special to The New York Times.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 31.—Mrs. May Sutton Bundy, former world's tennis champion, today defeated Miss Mary Browne of San Francisco, for three years national champion, by the scores of 6—1, 6—2. The match was the final round of the Southern California tennis tournament.

The former champion played a remarkable game, and the match seemed surprisingly easy. Miss Browne had little chance for victory. Mrs. Bundy's driving was of a spectacular order, and scored ace upon ace for her.

Miss Browne was practically helpless before the playing of her conqueror. She was unable to return more than three-fourths of her opponent's drives. Mrs. Bundy played the lines with considerable success, which netted her many points.

The first set was easy for Mrs. Bundy, her rival only getting one game. The second set was a repetition of the first, save for two games which Miss Browne managed to secure by a narrow margin.

The victory of the former world's champion came as a big surprise, as many believed the contest would result in an overwhelming victory for Miss Browne.

The return to form of Mrs. Buny after three years of inactivity on the courts is one of the outstanding features of the tournament. The result also means that Mrs. Bunday will again go after the national title. After the match Mrs. Bundy announced that she will practice during the Winter months and will go after the national honors again in 1916.

In 1904 Mrs. Bundy won the national woman's singles championship, and in 1905 and 1907 she won the world's championship in England. Mrs. Bundy, formerly May Supton, was married in 1912 to Thomas C. Bundy, who with Maurice E. McLaughlin held the national double title. Shortly after her marriage Mrs. Bundy announced her retirement from the game. A few months ago her friends persuade dher to again wield the racquet.

At the time that Mrs. Bundy was driving her way to victory her husband on a neighboring court, battling for the men's tennis single title of Southern California, was defeated by Roland Roberts, a 17-year-old schoolboy of San Francisco. Bunday met his defeat in a grueling first-set match, 3—6, 3—6, 6—1, 6—2, 6—1.

WESTERN TENNIS TITLE.

Chicago Players Successful in Opening Rounds on Onwentsia Courts.

CHICAGO, July 31.—Most of Chicago's leading tennis players came through successfully in the opening rounds of the Western tournament today on the Onwentsia Club's courts, Lake Forest. Absence of out-of-town entrants who are playing at Longwood or Lake Minnetonka delayed completion of the rounds, and the hardest matches will come Monday, when a contest between Heath Byford, Illinois State champion, and W. M. Johnstone of San Francisco, is expected.

Among the early winners today was Nat Thornton of Atlanta, who showed excellent form in his victory over Chester Williams of Chicago, at 6—2, 6—3.

Paul Gardiner of Chicago, former "Big Nine" champion and semi-finalist in the Western championship last year, was also successful in his first match, winning from A. Mayer, Chicago, 6—2, 6—1.

Play in the men's doubles and women's championship will begin Monday.

Elmhurst Tennis Champions.

The Elmhurst Tennis Club won the championship of the Queensborough Lawn Tennis League by defeating the Bayside Tennis Club at Elmhurst yesterday in four of the five matches played. Charles C. Edwards won an easy victory in the singles contest for Elmhurst, and C. P. Card lost his match after three hard sets.

The best contest of the day developed in the doubles match, in which Edwards, with Don Richart as his partner, defeated C. C. Creighton and E. McCabe. Edwards and Richard captured the first set, 6—1, but were forced to extend themselves to the limit to win the second, 10—8. The Bayside players played brilliantly, and made gets that seemed impossible, but the superior steadiness of the Elmhurst players proved the deciding factor. The summary:

Singles.—C. C. Edwards defeated E. McCabe, 6—0, 6—4; M. Johnson defeated C. P. Card, 6—2, 3—6, 6—4.

Doubles.—C. C. Edwards and D. Richart defeated C. C. Creighton and E. McCabe, 6—1, 10—8; C. P. Card and F. George defeated M. Johnson and R. Roberts, 7—5, 7—5; G. Plitt and I. Plitt defeated W. Parmlee and G. Barmeyer, 6—3, 6—4.

Church's Tennis Championship.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 31.—George M. Church of Princeton University, won the Northwestern tennis title this afternoon by defeating J. J. Armstrong of St. Paul, three out of four sets, 6—2, 9—7, 1—6, 6—1.

Children's Tennis Tournament.

BOXING REFORMS NEEDED.

Snowy Baker Wants International Body to Control the Sport.

Snowy Baker, leading boxing promoter of Australia, is trying to bring about some sort of reciprocal or joint action in all countries where boxing is in vogue with regard to the punishment of boxers guilty of glaring and deliberate infractions of the rules. His movement was started after Jeff Smith, the American welterweight, had been disqualified from further competition in the antipodes for committing what Baker and experts asserted was a deliberate foul in a bout with a local boxer. It is known that Baker has a working understanding with the National Sporting Club of London, which sets the pace for all British boxing organizations, but he has not yet succeeded in lining up the commissions which control the sport in several States of this country.

When advices reached Australia that Referee Billy Roche had disqualified both George Chip and Jimmy Clabby for "stalling" in a bout at St. Nicholas Rink on May 12 the experts there were unanimous in their support of that referee, for they believe the arbiter should have almost unlimited powers.

It is very likely that should Tom Andrews's scheme of forming a nation-wide board for the supervision of boxing be consummated here an agreement will be reached with the Australian and English authorities on all points involving international boxing questions.

State Title for Cavanagh.

MILWAUKEE, July 31.—Dick Cavanagh of Kenosha defeated Ned Allis of the Milwaukee Country Club this afternoon, 1 up, in 36 holes, for the State golf championship at the Blue Mound Country Club. Cavanagh started the afternoon 3 down, but squared the match at the thirty-second hole. At the thirty-sixth hole Allis missed a two-foot putt.

NEW GAME TRIED AT NARRAGANSETT

"Brevet" Is Combination of Golf, Croquet, and Tennis —How It Is Played.

The latest of outdoor sports, the new game of "brevet," is rapidly coming into favor at Narragansett Pier, where it is played by members of the villa colony on the grounds of the Point Judith Country Club. The game and its equipment has been donated to the Point Judith Country Club by P. S. P. Randolph of Philadelphia, who has been identified with popular sports at Narragansett for some years. Mr. Randolph is a well-known devotee of outdoor sports, and most of the members of his family have already mastered the game.

The new game of "brevet" is described as a combination of golf, croquet and tennis, and consists of one net, four mallets, four balls, six hazards, hole ring, net supports, guy ropes and end ground stakes. The net is sixteen inches by twenty feet, and is made out of cotton mesh.

Four mallets are used in the game, and they are brass or rubber tipped.

The driver is of golf design, and with vulcanized rubber face. There are three styles of play—a contest for points, known as "brevet," "golf brevet," a contest for holes; and croquet brevet," a race for holes. The net placed on the field for play is erected at an angle, and is firmly held in place by stakes driven into the ground.

In "brevet" the ball is put into play for first hole from tee marked No. 1. After the start the ball must be played from the position where it lies until it is holed. The first player continues to play until he fails to score at least one point.

1. Each time the ball is holed.
2. When the ball strikes the net in playing No. 2 hole.
3. When ball rebounds around stake, jumps through the ring into basket, or passes through any wicket, and when player's ball strikes opponent's ball.
4. One extra point is scored when a player scores two or more points with a single stroke. In playing Nos. 4 and 7 hazard no point is scored outside of the wicket. In striking the opponent's ball the player is "dead" on it. When a ball is holed too soon it is placed anywhere within six inches of the hole, and optional with the player. Should a player hole his opponent's ball it scores for the opponent. The player who scores 25 or more points first wins.

Any level spot on the lawn or meadow will afford a space for the game of "brevet." It is a novel outdoor sport and destined to become popular.

LANGER A RECORD SWIMMER.

The performances of Ludy Langer of the Los Angeles A. C. in the championship water carnival at San Francisco prove him to be the world's best middle-distance swimmer. In a week's competition he took four title events in record time. Swimming 500 yards in a 75-foot pool, he set a new international mark of 6:13 4-5. He lowered three American times, swimming the 440 in 5:32 2-5, the 880 in 12:06, and the mile in 24:59 2-5. He created these records in races with little competition.

Albert E. Downes, the New York A. C. high-diving champion, writes of Langer's work: "His swimming is without effort. I do not believe he has begun to show his real speed. He followed the instructions of his coach, Vance Vieth, and did not exert himself after he had distanced his rivals. He wanted to win every championship. Therefore it was imperative for him to husband his strength."

Langer is only 22 years old. Since few swimmers reach their greatest power before the age of 30, Langer has several years for improvement. He should grow better rapidly, for he has substituted the crawl stroke for the trudgeon and has not had time to accustom his muscles to the new action.

In 1909 he entered his first race, a fifty-yard swim for novices, after learning to swim at Rodondo Beach in Southern California. He finished a poor third in this event. It stimulated him to study the form of the successful contestants. Then he progressed rapidly. The next year he won three of the championships of Southern California. In 1911 he took a double victory in the Pacific Coast title meet, attracting the attention of George Freeth, then coach at the Los Angeles A. C. Freeth corrected his stroke and trained him for the international 440-yard race in San Francisco. He won that event in the world's record time of 5:22 2-5.

Langer is 5 feet 9 inches tall and weighs 156 pounds.

PENN MAY ROW HARVARD.

Two Universities Are Willing, and Only Hitch Is Satisfactory Date.

Pennsylvania and Harvard will resume rowing relations next Spring if the two universities can agree upon a date for the race. The Red and Blue rowing authorities will continue to race with Yale, providing the latter wishes to continue the relations; Annapolis will be continued on the schedule and the Quakers will be glad to go to Princeton for the Childs Cup, but if the Cambridge authorities can arrange a date a dual contest will be scheduled next season. In discussing the outlook, Howard Eisenbrey, Chairman of the Rowing Committee of the University of Pennsylvania, said:

"It is true that we have been in communication with the Harvard Crew Committee. We will gladly meet the Crimson on the water annually, if possible, for there is lots of room for more than one or two races on a college regatta schedule. The date is the thing that has caused the hitch. We will try and arrange things, if possible, and I think the Crimson feels the same way about it."

The Rowing Committee is trying to straighten out the tangle in the rowing situation made by the resignation of Vivian Nickalls. There are a half-dozen men at present being considered by the Rowing Committee, but no selection has been made, and none will be made for at least several weeks. Among those at present under consideration are Bib Haines of the Union Boat Club of Boston, Joe Wright of the Argonaut Rowing Club of Canada, and Joe Dempsey, coach of the University Barge Club of Philadelphia.

NEW AUTO TRACK READY.

Cash prizes amounting to $10,000 will be distributed among the successful drivers in the automobile race meeting which will be held over the new one mile asphalt speedway at Narragansett Park, Providence, R. I., on Sept. 18, two weeks after the Minneapolis races and two weeks prior to the opening of the Sheepshead Bay speedway. The Providence track is now nearing completion and will be in first class condition by the opening date. The events scheduled include a twenty-five mile free for all, a 100 mile race for cars of 450 cubic inches and under and a one hour motor cycle race. The Providence meeting is sanctioned by the American Automobile Association and the races will be under the general supervision of Frank Lowe.

Frederick H. Perkins is President of the Narragansett Park Speedway, which was built under his direction at a cost of more than $250,000. President Perkins visited every track in Europe and America before starting work on his own project. The Narragansett Park Speedway is from 75 to 81 feet in width, exclusive of the safety apron of 14 feet, and the turns are banked similar to the banks on the Chicago speedway.

YALE FOOTBALL SOON.

Gridiron Work at New Haven Will Get Early Start.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., July 31.—Captain Aleck Wilson of the Yale eleven today announced plans for the gridiron campaign for 1915. He has ordered a squad of seventy-five players, comprising all candidates of experience, to report at Madison-on-the-Sound, about twenty miles east of here, on Tuesday, Sept. 7. The squad will take light work daily till Sept. 20 on the links of the Madison Country Club, which can be fitted up into an excellent gridiron. The squad will dine and be quartered at the Hammonasett House. The hotel is located on the Sound and the squad is assured of surf bathing. A squad of 125 players will report on Yale Field Sept. 20, and will get ten days of aggressive football before the formal season opens.

When Captain Wilson threw open his desk at the Yale athletic offices this morning he really opened the season. He will be here two or three times a week till Sept. 1. He will spend the month of August in the Yale crew headquarters at Gales Ferry. He is a member of the Faculty of the Roxbury Tutoring School, which conducts a Summer preparatory school at Gales Ferry-Marfy Shedden, the Yale track Captain of last season, will also be at Gales Ferry.

Captain Wilson has spent July at Camp Susquehannock, near Montrose, Penn., where about 105 collegians are summering. Wilson has played baseball, football, and tennis the past month and is somewhat distressed because, instead of lightening his weight, he has added five pounds, and tips the scales at 195.

Several changes in his coaching plans have been made, principal of which is that "Pudge" Heffelfinger, who had agreed to spend the season here, has found it impossible to do so and has asked to be excused from acting as Yale's defensive and principal line coach this Fall. In his place Captain Wilson has chosen "Red" Dunbar, who was one of Yale's best centre rushes several years ago, and who has had three seasons' coaching experience at Notre Dame since then.

Yale's coaching staff, as finally selected by Wilson, will be headed by Frank Hinkey. Dr. Billy Bull will direct the backfield work. Nate Wheeler and Percy Cornish, coaches last year, will again be on the resident staff, as will "Red" Brann, end last year. Ted Driscoll and Pat Osborn will be on the resident squad as lieutenants, Heffelfinger will be here for a week or two and Johnny Kilpatrick, Jack Field, Guy Hutchinson, and Ned Glass will make a couple of visits a week to the field. Nelson Talbott, Captain last year, will be with the squad all the Fall as line coach. Billy Marting, coach of the centre men last season, will be with the Varsity squad at Madison, but will take charge of the freshmen when they report at Yale Field and will be the freshman head coach this Fall. It is possible that Marting and Dunbar will be coaches at Yale more than the present season.

Captain Wilson is pleased with the outlook. The material is stronger than usual. For guards Conroy, Walden, Von Holt and Jim Sheldon, all "Y" men last year, are available. "Pie" Way, guard two years ago, will report, and Black, the former Exeter captain, and McGrath, the two freshmen guards last year, will make up an exceptionally strong squad. For center, White, regular last year, Vorys, freshman centre, and Miller and Wiley of last year's squad, will report. Carl Betts and "Chub" Sheldon will be again available as tackles, and Baldridge, freshman last year, and big Dick Kent, the former Stevens tackle, will be eligible.

Higginbotham, Wiedeman, Potter, Church and Nichols, all of last year's squad, and Moseley and Allen, freshman ends last year, will be back. Behind the line will be the veterans Harry LeGore, Billy Easton, Mal Scovil, Otis Guernsey, Waite and Captain Wilson, of the veterans. "Bunny" Burgess, and Malcolm, half backs two years ago, will be with the squad. From last year's freshman team three strong half backs will be available in Bingham, Hutchinson and Thompson.

RYE BEACH CLUB.

Leases Large Clubhouse and Will Make Extensive Alterations.

The Rye Beach Club of Rye, N. Y., organized in 1912, has grown in membership to such an extent that its Board of Governors have just leased a cottage on Rye Beach Avenue from Elliott H. Sniffen for a term of years and are now at work making extensive alterations that will include all modern improvements and make of the club an all-year-around organization.

When the club was organized it contained barely a baker's dozen, but at this time the membership exceeds 200, composed of New York and Westchester County citizens.

During the past two years there has been a Winter colony at Rye Beach. Last Winter more than 1,300 citizens remained all the year at the beach and each year there is an increasing number of all-year-round homes built at the resort.

The new clubhouse is just opposite the northern entrance to the Rye Park Reservation, and from its porch and balconies an unobstructed view of Long Island may be had for thirty miles east and west. Following are the officers of the club: President, Dr. A. Walter Hermann; Vice President, William N. Edwards; Secretary, George Gullett; Treasurer, Eric Norrington. Board of Governors—Dr. A. Walter Hermann, William N. Edwards, George Gullett, Eric Norrington, N. M. Drake, J. Albert Zimmerman, C. W. Kimball, A. E. Downes, W. C. Jordan, and Frank Goldman.

ONE YEAR OF THE GREAT WAR

Vast Changes Already Wrought by the Struggle--Nations, Not Individuals, Are Its Heroes

FOUR DOMINANT FIGURES IN THE FIELD.

Field Marshal Sir John French,
Commanding British Forces on the Continent.

General Joffre,
Commander in Chief of the Armies of France.

Field Marshal von Hindenburg,
Conducting German Operations in the East.

Grand Duke Nicholas,
Commander in Chief of the Armies of Russia.

By Charles Willis Thompson.

A YEAR ago today Germany declared war on Russia, Austria having declared war on Serbia a year ago last Wednesday. Thus there began a conflict which is called the greatest in history, because it involves so many nations and affects all others so largely; but it is evident that it will have a better title to greatness than its mere extent. Every great war permanently modifies and alters the life of the world to some extent; it is evident that this one will change it as no other has, except the barbaric invasions and perhaps the Napoleonic wars.

What the world will be like when the fire has burned itself out and burned the old world up with it it is impossible to predict; we only know that from struggles less gigantic civilizations and epochs have been dated. The turning points in history are marked, and most of them have been wars. The nineteenth century, which did not really begin until Waterloo, has come to an end, and the war marks the beginning of a new century, or, rather, a new era in history. Prophecy concerning the form of the new life is idle while the struggle is still going on, but certainly the war has made a point of departure and the Europe after it will be a different Europe from that before it; and in that change Asia, Africa, the Americas, and the island countries are included.

The rebirth of France and Russia, the revolution all over the world in the character of domestic issues, the sudden national self-consciousness of the colonies, these are only a few instances of the great modifications we are already beginning to see. Take the colonies alone, by which, of course, is meant the colonies of Great Britain. They have always been immature and somewhat inchoate; they had definite ideals and a character of their own which was not English any more than the character of a child is the duplicate of its father's, but nothing had happened to give them the right quickening.

Colonial nationalism had been the aspiration of their leaders and writers, but neither preaching, literature, nor legislation can force such a thing. Kipling's "Five Nations" visualized the idea and sought to rouse the sentiment, which was always there but always sluggish. Some years ago Richard Jebb wrote a book called "Studies in Colonial Nationalism," which was less a series of studies than an indirect attempt to prove to the British mind the existence and goal of the thing he postulated—and to prove it to the colonial mind, too—for there lurked in his pages an uncomfortable suspicion that the people he was speaking for were not very vigorous in asking him to speak for them. And the British, many of whom are in themselves eager to encourage the growth of national self-consciousness, have been catching at every feeble little song of a colonial versifier and every "best seller" by a colonial novelist to prove to themselves that it is the beginning of an individual national literature.

But these things cannot be forced, and national self-consciousness cannot lift itself up by its bootstraps. Bunker Hill has a high place in our history, not because it was an important battle or an American victory, for it was neither, but because when it had been fought Americans looked at themselves in the glass and saw themselves for the first time. The Canadians and Australians on the firing line have already roused the national spirit at home, and when they go back it will be impossible for these full-grown nations to creep into their boyish clothes again. When the Australian cruiser Sydney sank the German Emden after the British and Japanese had failed to find her, it was a minor event of the war, but a major event in the history of the new nation of Australia. The moral effect of such incidents as this, like that of Bunker Hill, is out of all relation to their actual importance. The colonies fought in the Transvaal, it is true, but this is a different thing; this is a war of the world, in which each nation faces other nations on even terms as in the prize ring, and the nations of Canada, Australia, and New Zealand are winning high place, not as fractions of the British Empire, but by name as integers; not as regiments, but as nations.

As for the Union of South Africa, its position and its self-consciousness are like those of the thirteen American colonies after the French and Indian war. They, like the Americans, have fought with a European foe for a continent and have won it; for that is the ultimate meaning of Botha's conquest of Southwest Africa. Like the Americans in the eighteenth century, they fought nominally for the hand of England, but really for their own. It is seen in every utterance not only of Botha but of every other South African patriot; it is for the future of their country that they are contending, and that country is South Africa. They almost say it; they do say it in everything but those particular words.

What the nations will be when the readjustment comes it would be audacious to forecast; but the changes that have already come about in them give some foreshadowing. One result of the war has been a great understanding. The characters which nations have worn in each other's eyes have dropped from them, and they are seen in quite different ones. There must be a recasting of national impressions.

It is convenient to personify a nation, to speak of it as if it were a man, with characteristics like those of a man, as if its youth, maturity, and old age were to be compared exactly with those of a man. But, like all figures of speech, it must not be used as if it were fact. Nations are not men, they are made up of individuals, and those individuals are not the same in one generation as in another. In one sense, a nation does have a character and a soul; but it is the character and it is the soul of the average of the people who compose it at a given time. A hundred years later, when these people are dead, the majority of their successors may have quite different characteristics, and then the national soul will vary from what it was, because the national soul is composite. So unending confusion comes to those who accept figures of speech as if they were statistics, and they are always trying to reconcile the traversing facts with their confronted dogmas.

This becomes evident when we try to square the France or Belgium of today with the character ascribed to them in consequence of the actions of generations made up of men who are now dead. Tranquil, cool, immensely methodical, highly competent France of 1915 bears no resemblance to the excitable, passionate France of 1793 or the bewildered, vainglorious, and helpless France of 1870. It is not to be accounted for if one assumes a continuing soul in a nation as in a man; easy to account for if one simply recognizes that the characteristic manhood of the average Frenchman today is different from that of the average Frenchman of those days. When Belgium amazed the world with her valor and obstinacy, there were comments to the effect that it could not be explained; the Belgians were not a brave people, as was proved by their behavior in the Waterloo campaign. As if the Belgians of 1815 had anything whatever in them to account for anything that might be done by the Belgians of 1914.

But unless some great event brings out the new character of a nation it is not known, and the country abides both in its own eyes and in those of other countries by the character given it by those generations dead and gone. Only when there is a fire in the house do we discover that the grown son is not the coward his father was twenty years ago on a similar occasion. And the war did not create but brought out the new characters of the nations, as invisible writing is brought out by heat.

So, when the call came the world saw with surprise not a light, unsubstantial, volatile, and frivolous France, but a grim, firm, sober, taciturn, and solemn France. The first few weeks of the war brought volumes of astonished comments on the new France from Americans in Paris. It was called a rebirth. The solidarity and earnestness of the French bore no resemblance to the worn-out and careless nation which had been pictured for so many years, but their solidarity was less confounding to the popular notion of them than their earnestness.

One of the phenomena recorded in these letters was the revival of religion in France, a revival on a national scale, without any Moody or Billy Sunday to stir it up. There were accounts of atheists and scoffers making their peace with the Church before they enlisted, of professions of faith by representatives of the lightest and most cynical schools of literature. Juilette Adam in her old age recanted her unfaith and professed her faith, and she was but one of many. The war was one of consecration on the part of France, by which is meant all France, and not its governors alone—a unanimous, not a representative, consecration.

Jeanne d'Arc became in a real sense the patron saint of France, and the new nation went back for inspiration to her spirit, not that of Napoleon, nor even Danton. It is the France of Jeanne d'Arc that has gone to war, not the France of glory whom Bonaparte led, nor even the France of stern patriotism and love of liberty whose armies Danton called from the earth with the stamp of his foot.

This war is great in heroes, but the heroes are nations and not individuals. Heroic acts in plenty are being performed by soldiers, but the war has as yet produced no commanding heroes from its Generals—heroes in the old sense, which does not mean the performers of gallant actions. There are no Hannibals or Turennes or Grants—as yet. But the war has its great heroes, and they are nations.

France is one, by the supremeness of her gallantry and sacrifice; but Belgium is in the world's mind the great hero of the war. It may be a question, when the historian comes to straighten out the hot impressions of these days, which are all we have, whether Belgium performed so great a part as we gave her credit for, whether she saved France or whether France would not have saved herself in any case. We know little enough even now about the retreat on Paris and the battle of the Marne. But Belgium's heroism of self-sacrifice and gallantry will never be dimmed, and her sad fate adds to the wreath of the hero the aureole of the martyr.

There was nothing of the martyr and all of the hero about Serbia. Serbia was a combatant, not the unoffending victim of an atrocious attack, even though she was unjustly and unfairly attacked for a spurious reason. But the title of hero is not withheld from a combatant, and Serbia earned it. Little enough praise or attention has been given her. In the just balance of history her deed will weigh heavier and heavier as time goes on.

All of Belgium's glorious unanimity and gallantry were Serbia's, with the added glory of success. Later on it will seem incredible that she could have done what she did. The little kingdom, assailed by the great empire, hurled back the gigantic invader not once but three times, and now stands with her sod untrodden by a foreign foot, and with no indication of another attack to be made upon her. Bleeding, ridden by disease, she is not only undaunted but indomitable; and this great thing she did after she had been weakened by two wars, the second of which came to an end little more than a year before the Austrian assault.

King Albert won the world's admiration by going to war with his men, but King Peter did the same thing, and successfully. The last time the Austrian Army was dashed back across the boundary he led his troops in person and fought with them. King Albert is a young man, King Peter an old one, and both typify lands in which every man fights.

A disposition is becoming noticeable to give credit for the German failure to some favored nation. It is a failure, of course, for at the end of a year not one of the objects which the Germans had in mind when they began the war has been accomplished. But to give credit to one nation at the expense of the others is not correct.

The disposition is particularly noticeable among those who dislike to give the British credit for anything. It is being said that the French are doing the fighting for the British, that France has accomplished much and England little on the firing line. If the war ends in an Allies' victory, it is said, the credit will be that of France, not that of England.

But if France saved England England saved France, and both were saved by Russia. At the end of a year the German Navy, which was to have swept and stormed the coast of France, lies as helpless and useless behind its protecting wall as it did the day England decided to join the Allies. The British Navy has accomplished a wonderful work and has never better proved the truth of England's confidence in it. It holds Germany prisoner, and the German Navy is in the position of a man with both arms pinioned, who can only lash out with vicious kicks at his enemy's shins. These kicks are administered by submarines, and if they hurt the foe who is doing the pinioning they do not make him relax his hold.

This has been England's great work in the war. Her army has won little glory except the glory which rewards bravery, and the great deeds on the western front have been done by France. But the grip which the British Navy fastened on the throat of Germany with the beginning of the war has enabled France to go on with her fighting.

Russia relieved the pressure on the western front more than once, and has accomplished so far her great object—not of the war, but of the first year of the war. That object was to keep Germany so occupied in the east that the unprepared west, taken by surprise when the sudden blow was aimed at Serbia, might have time to get itself together and meet the well-prepared assailant on more even terms. This year in the west has been a year of preparation so far as the Allies' side of it is concerned; and that they have had time for that preparation and were not overborne at the outset, as Germany planned, was due to Russia.

Russia has been retreating for months, because of her lack of munitions, which lack was seized upon by the Germans and made the basis of further advantages. But the German victories were barren, for, however numerous they might be, they failed of the one object for which they went—they did not accomplish the one thing which could do any good to Germany. That was to relax the Russian strength so that Germany could begin at last, after a year, the work which in 1914 she expected to be her first task and to be done in weeks, the work of demoralizing and defeating her opponents in the west.

So far as the object of the war is concerned, Russia's June and July defeats had nearly the same effect as Russian victories would have had; not quite, of course. But even Russian victories could have accomplished little more by the end of the first year than to keep Germany from putting forth her full strength in the west; and that effect has been produced in spite of the Russian defeats. At the end of a year Germany is still baffled—baffled by the work on land of France, baffled by the work at sea of England, baffled by the wall of Russian strength she is trying to push back in the east.

When the readjustment is made and the new twentieth century begins nothing will be exactly what it was before the war. The war was a sharp knife, cutting the nineteenth and twentieth centuries apart. Again, it would be foolish to try to forecast what the currents and tendencies of thought and life will be, but the changes that have already been made can be noted.

One is the submergence of radicalism and social reform, accompanied by some extraordinary extensions of that centralization which is the heart of State Socialism. In this country there was an immediate turning away from "advanced" theories and a recrudescence of conservatism, and the Progressive Party disappeared as a formidable factor. Abroad there were similar manifestations on a greater scale. At the first test the theory of international solidarity, on which the Socialists rest, fell to ruins, and Socialists in every country found, to their surprise, that patriotism was the strongest of passions even in their own breasts. Many of them have tried to keep it down, but the loss of interest and belief in socialistic theories the world over was noticed by all of them with discouragement.

At the same time, it cannot escape observation that Governments decidedly not socialistic have put into practice some of the most advanced practical socialism that can be imagined. It may mean that the new era will be socialistic, but socialistic on a sterner and more practical basis than that of the Socialists; that theoretical socialism, based on the brotherhood of man, will die out, and a hard and selfish socialism, based on the needs of each State, will begin to live. But this is guesswork; it is enough to confine our thought to what has already happened and not attempt to predict the future.

That German success would transform the world intellectually and in its aims and ideals goes without saying. German success would be Germanization; not the Germanization which would have been implied by that word sixty years ago, but the world-spread of the gospel of materialistic efficiency and "kultur," with the subordination, if not effacement, of individualism. The success of the Allies would not imply such far-reaching alterations in ideals and aims; but however the war ends, a new town will arise on the burned district.

"UNCONQUERABLE," SAYS APPONYI

By Count Albert Apponyi.

I HAVE had several opportunities for communicating with American public opinion on the subject of the present great European war and of America's attitude toward the belligerents. So I need not repeat what I have already tried to state and to prove, viz., that this war is a Russian war of conquest, in which that eastern and despotic power is supported by France's desire for revenge and England's spiteful feeling against Germany's prosperity.

It is, furthermore, hardly necessary to waste one word on the infamy of Italy's treacherous aggression against her former ally. Italy plays manifestly the part of the bandit using his opportunity to stab from behind the man he wants to rob, while this man's main strength is absorbed by conflict with other assailants.

On these subjects, on the question of right and wrong connected with the present war, I have nothing more to say. What I wish to elucidate here is the actual situation of the belligerents after nearly one year of war; the state of my own country, to begin with, and of her aged King, whom I had the honor of seeing lately at his bidding. On these subjects American public opinion has been misled by the Entente diplomacy and the Entente press, just as it has been poisoned by the same agency with respect to the moral responsibility implied in the conflict.

Hasn't it been confidently predicted that Germany and Austria-Hungary would collapse before the onset of such a combination of power as her foes represent? That their military resistance would be broken before long; that starvation would drive their people to despair; that their economic and financial resources would be exhausted; that the Austro-Hungarian monarchy would fall to pieces; that Hungary would revolt and contend for a separate peace, (Hungary, whose territory is the first and primary object of Russian covetousness!) and what not?

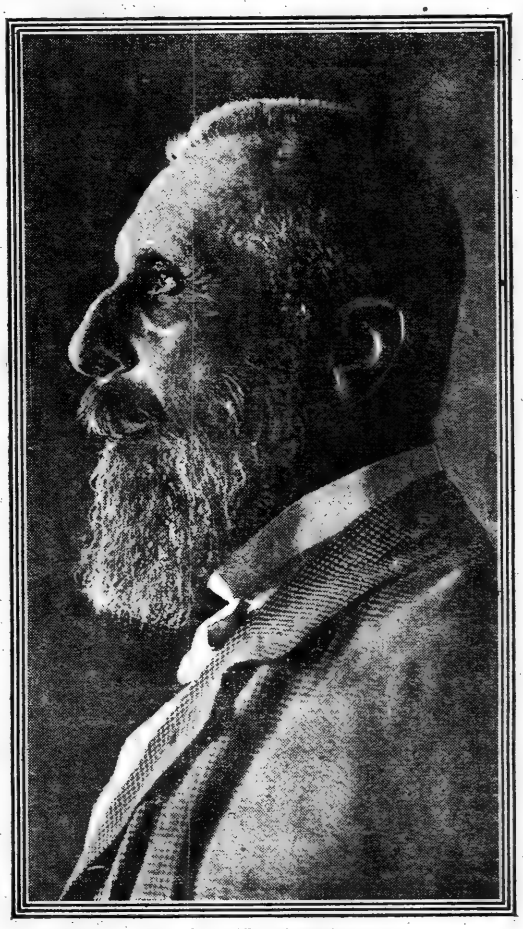
Now, in the face of all these forecasts, what are the facts? Our armies are fast driving the Russians out of Galicia; in a few weeks not a single Russian soldier will stand on Austrian soil; the small part of Hungary they had invaded was freed from them long ago.

If there is a collapse, it is the military power of Russia which will collapse; her stock of trained soldiers is nearly exhausted, her untrained recruits are unable to resist the onset of more highly trained fighters. In the meantime the joint forces of Germany and Austria-Hungary are constantly winning ground in Russian Poland and in Courland; Berlin, Vienna, Budapest are absolutely safe; nobody in our country dreads a new Russian invasion; but Petrograd is seriously menaced.

The action of the combined fleets against the Dardanelles has no other result than the destruction of numbers of French and English warships.

In France the armies of Germany, though reduced in numbers by the requirements of the great Russian campaign, are holding fast the territory they had won at the beginning of the war. Every onset of the joint Franco-English forces collapses before German firmness; a few inches of ground are won now and then, to be lost again after a day or two. The taking of a hamlet or of a "Schutzengraben" is trumpeted out to the world as a great victory, but the main fact is that the mutual positions of the belligerents remain unchanged in this part of the theatre of war, notwithstanding the bloody and gallant efforts of the Franco-English armies to win back the territory they had lost in Summer and Autumn.

Economically, we are holding out quite as strongly as we do in a military sense.



Count Albert Apponyi.

The wicked starvation scheme which England planned against our women and children has been frustrated by the foresight and thrift of our people; in a month or so the new harvest will have closed the era of such difficulty as we have had.

We do not require any financial assistance from without; the two national loans in Austria and Hungary have given more than seven milliards, not to speak of the inexhaustible resources of Germany.

The moral state of our countries is something beyond praise, something absolutely grand; it is an aspect of gallantry which almost consoles for the horrors of war. That spirit of unflinching resolve which animates our whole people and which has been kindled into a new flame (instead of being cowed, as was anticipated) by the Italian treason, that unbroken resolution to conquer or to die, generated by the consciousness of having been wantonly and treacherously assailed, to have to fight for one's own safety and for mankind's highest treasures: that unconquerable spirit lives in every private of the armies of Germany, of Austria, and of Hungary; it lives in those at home too young, too old, or too weak to fight, on whom the task of national labor devolves; it lives in the bereaved wives, in the weeping mothers; it creates an atmosphere which uplifts the lowly, fills the churches, and binds together those who formerly seemed to disagree.

And so we hold out, though representing—all four of us taken together: Germany, Austria, Hungary, and Turkey—one hundred and forty millions of souls against the three hundred millions of Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy, Belgium, Serbia, not to reckon Japan and the colonies. You may think of that war as you will, but you must confess that our exhibition of gallantry and of moral strength is a grand sight after all.

Should more foes arise, we would put into action still greater forces. The lesson taught by one year of warfare is this—we are unconquerable.

And as to the part played by Hungary in the great world drama, I can only say that I am intensely proud of it. Our soldiers are fighting partly under German commanders, precisely as German military bodies are incorporated with Hungarian and Austrian armies. The Germans have thereby learned to consider the Hungarians as equal to the very best of their own troops.

The moral unity of Hungary, bridging over racial differences on which our enemies have built their brightest hopes, is a tower of strength to the central alliance in Europe. Nations that seemed to have forgotten that such a thing as Hungary exists are forcibly reminded of the fact by the deeds of heroism performed by Hungarian soldiers and by the unbroken firmness of the Hungarian Nation.

Hungary's destinies brighten; the radiance of great prospects draws a halo around the sinking heads of our heroes. And we are marching toward that glorious future on the highroad of faith kept and of duty fulfilled, not on the byways of treachery and falsehood. To those who in childish ignorance of what we really are try to tempt us that way we have only one thing to say: We are not Italians.

And as to our aged King, the Emperor-King Francis Joseph, who has been represented as an old weakling, with no will of his own, as a plaything in the hands of evil counselors, I do declare that his intellect is as bright, his will as strong, his knowledge of facts as accurate as it was in his younger days.

For more than an hour I talked over with him all the big questions connected with war and peace, and I saw a man keenly alive to the tremendous responsibilities which his action involves, but perfectly calm in his conscience as a Christian ruler, perfectly convinced of having done his duty toward his people, whose liberty, whose happiness, whose possibilities of further progress were wantonly attacked by a conspiracy that left us no choice but to draw the sword in self-defense.

He sees with the clearest discernment the dangers which still hang over our heads, since we have to face the strongest coalition the world has ever seen; at the same time he feels confident of ultimate success, and his confidence is based on sound calculations as well as on the belief of a deeply religious mind.

Such is Francis Joseph in his eighty-fifth year, in the midst of a tremendous conflict which puts his crown in jeopardy; such is he and such are the nations which he rules, his Austrian Empire and his Hungarian Kingdom, while facing the most formidable coalition known to history—self-possessed, unshaken, confident of ultimate victory.

How different from what the Entente press and the American tools of the Entente proclaimed and published! Will American public opinion believe our statement now, after a whole year of war, which has given the lie to every single prediction of our enemies?

WAR PARAGRAPHS

TO an unprecedented extent, the purchasing power of the British Isles has passed into the hands of women because of the war. Wives of men who have enlisted are receiving all, or a great part of their husbands' pay, as well as the allowances made in many cases by their employers. The latter amounts to about one-half of their regular pay. With these funds the women are better supplied with money, to spend in such manner as they see fit, than they ever have been before. One result, landlords say, is that they are receiving their rents more regularly. Another result, no doubt, is that the money is being spent in a different way than it was when the men chiefly or wholly directed its expenditure.

A wooden statue representing a man in armor has been erected in Vienna by one of the war relief committees. Any one who subscribes as much as twenty cents is permitted to drive a nail in the statue, it being hoped that ultimately the whole statue will be covered with nail heads, so that it will look as if covered with real armor. It is then intended to preserve the statue as an emblem of Austrian patriotism.

There has been a steady rise in the cost of living in Greece the past year. Among the causes are the closing of the Dardanelles and the shutting off of the supply of Russian wheat, the large advance in ocean freights, and the presence of large numbers of refugees of Greek nationality from Turkish dominions and elsewhere. The absence of tourists from Greece during the Winter was severely felt.

Special "message books" are provided for British doctors and nurses directly at the front, for the purpose of recording the dying messages of wounded soldiers intended for relatives or friends. The books have perforated pages on which the messages are written, and the pages are then forwarded to the base hospital. There a copy of the messages is made in larger books and sent on to the person in Britain for whom they were intended. Not only are the soldier's dying words sent home, but, wherever possible, any trinkets, photographs or papers found on his body.

Reports from sixteen of the principal wine-growing centres of that part of the district of Champagne which is as yet free from the ravages of war show highly favorable prospects for this year's wine yield. The grape harvest promises to be very rich in quantity and quality.

AMERICAN EXPERT'S VIEW OF WAR

He Divides Its First Year Into Three Phases and Reviews Results Which Have Been Obtained

By a Military Expert.

First Phase—Opening the Way to France Through Belgium.

BY Aug. 4, 1914, war had been declared by all the nations now engaged except Turkey and Italy. Subsequent events have proved that of them all the Tentonic allies were the only nations actually prepared and that as between Austria and Germany the preparation of the latter was much more complete. It was the Germans, therefore, who, with the entire campaign carefully mapped out in advance, took the initiative. Germany, too, at the very outset saw the one clear path to victory.

One or the other of her Continental enemies must not only be defeated, but crushed and eliminated from the conflict before the other could mobilize against her. One of them, Russia, would probably take the longer time to effect her mobilization. Russia had started, it is true, before war was declared. But interior railroads in Russia are few. Russia, too, is proverbially slow, if for no other reasons, by virtue of her ponderous numbers. France, on the other hand, is checked and counter-checked by good strategic railroads, and, having no such vast territory over which her troops would have to be moved, would be able to mobilize in a much shorter time than her ally. England, for a few weeks at least, could be disregarded. Deceived as to the extent of Russian unpreparedness and believing that Russia's slowness would prevent an active offense for some weeks, Germany selected France as her first objective, and took immediate steps to hurl twenty-four army corps across the French border, aiming at Paris.

These twenty-four corps were divided into three armies—the Army of the Meuse, based on Cologne; the Army of the Moselle, based on Metz and Coblenz, and the Army of the Rhine, based on Strassburg. All of these three armies were naturally to converge on Paris. The route of the Army of the Meuse would pass through Liége, Namur, and Maubeuge, and would therefore have to cross a part of Belgium; the Army of the Moselle would take a route through Sedan and Soissons, passing north of the Verdun fortress, but of necessity crossing the Duchy of Luxemburg; the Army of the Rhine, after crossing the screen of the Vosges Mountains, would pass through Nancy and Toul, between the fortresses of Epinal and Belfort.

It is obvious that the march to Paris would be most quickly achieved through the flat country of Belgium, where the French frontier is practically unguarded and only the weakly manned barrier fortresses of Belgium barred the way. The remainder of the French frontier from Luxemburg to Switzerland was well fortified, and Germany had no time to spend in reducing fortified places.

The main advance was therefore to take place through Belgium, the Army of the Moselle co-operating, while to the Army of the Rhine was assigned the offensive-defensive rôle of advancing to the barrier fortresses of Epinal and Belfort to check any French advance that might be directed against the communications of the Armies of the Moselle and the Meuse to the north. The railroad communications through the Belgian plain were splendidly adapted to this plan, backed as they were by the military railroads which Germany had constructed several years before, running through the industrial districts in the north of Germany to the Belgian border.

Germany's first move was the invasion of Luxemburg, violating the neutrality of a State which, under the treaty making her independent and guaranteeing neutrality, (to which treaty Germany was a party,) was not permitted to maintain an army. Two days later Germany asked passage for her troops through Belgium, for the purpose of attacking France. Belgium promptly refused, and on Aug. 4 Germany began the forcing of this passage by an attack on Liége.

Thus, at the outset the German plan went awry. Although the contemplated line of advance was through Liége and Namur, it was not sufficient, with Belgium openly in arms to defend her country, to reduce only these two towns. The Belgian Army could, and later did, fall back to the north on Louvain, Brussels, and Antwerp, and so be directly on the German flank and in a position to strike at the line of communications. It was therefore necessary to subjugate all of Belgium either by destroying the Belgian Army or driving it before them in their advance.

Thus, the German advance was not only doomed to delay, but at least 100,000 troops were needed to garrison a hostile country and to protect the life lines running to the rear.

Three days after the attack on Liége opened the Germans penetrated between the outer forts, their infantry advancing in close formation and sustaining enormous losses. But Liége was worth the price paid. Some of the forts held out for days, but were finally reduced by the fire of the 42-centimeter guns—the first of the German surprises. The Belgian garrison, however, had done its work. The German advance was delayed for ten precious days, during which the first consignment of the British expeditionary force had reached the Continent and France and Russia had largely completed their mobilization.

As soon as it was realised that the unexpected Belgian resistance had retarded the German advance and in all probability had disarranged the German plan of campaign, the French, even before the guns of Liége had cooled, struck at Alsace, through the Belfort Gap and over the Vosges Mountains. At first this French offensive was successful. Points on the Metz-Strassburg railroad were taken and the town of Mülhausen captured. But almost before the news of success reached Paris the French had been defeated, not only in Alsace but also in Lorraine, where French troops had been sent to engage the German Army of the Moselle. The result was the retirement of the French to the line of their first defense—a line that had been prepared for just such an emergency during the years since 1871.

While the German armies of the Moselle and of the Rhine were thus occupied in repelling the French advance the Army of the Meuse was forcing its way through Belgium. Throwing out a strong cavalry screen in its front, this army advanced through Tongres, St. Frond, Laugen, Haelen, and Terlemont, and finally confronted the Belgians on the line from Louvain to Namur. Fighting on this front filled almost a week, when the destruction of the fortifications of Namur forced the Belgians to fall back, pivoting on Louvain to the line from Louvain to Wavre, the last line in front of Brussels. On Aug. 20 the Belgians were defeated at Louvain and the Germans entered Brussels, the Belgian Government having previously retired to Antwerp. The first phase of the German advance was thus completed and the way to France was open.

IMMEDIATELY following the fall of Namur, which forced the Belgians to take up the Louvain-Wavre line, the main German Army of the Meuse started for France, leaving possibly two army corps to drive the Belgians from Brussels and to protect their flank and their lines of communication. The German advance first came in contact with the French and British along a line from Mons to Charleroi, southwest of Brussels. The British were supposed to have been between two French armies, but for some reason the army which had been assigned to position on the British left did not appear. Being outflanked, a retreat followed, the French being defeated at the same time at Charleroi. The German Army of the Moselle then attacked along the Meuse, and, being also successful, was on the flank and rear of the British and French retreating from Mons and Charleroi.

Thus a great enveloping movement was disclosed which for some days gave every evidence of being successful. It was defeated, however, entirely by the British, who, though outflanked and outnumbered three to one, fought steadily night and day for six days, their small force holding in complete check all of von Kluck's army corps. Retreat was of course inevitable, but the retreat was made in good order and with the morale of the troops unshaken.

In the meantime the German General Staff, which had confidently expected to crush France before Russia could become a factor to be reckoned with, saw with alarm Russia pouring her troops into East Prussia in a drive against Königsberg, while in South Poland another Russian army was preparing a drive against Galicia, operating from the Ivangorod-Rowno railroad. Germany saw the Austrians being defeated everywhere; Lemberg, the capital of Galicia, captured; Przemysl masked, and the Russians fighting their way westward through Galicia between the Carpathians and the Vistula. But Austria's troubles at this stage were her own. Germany had all she could do to turn back the Russian invasion of East Prussia.

To face the peril on her eastern borders, Germany detached several army corps—probably five—from the western front, with them reinforced her eastern army, and in a few days after their arrival inflicted a disastrous defeat on the Russians at Tannenberg, driving them back practically to their own borders. But the damage had been done. The armies of the west had been weakened at a critical point, and General Joffre was given the opportunity he had been seeking since the beginning of the war.

The French and British, whose retreat had carried them to the Marne, now outnumbered the Germans, and, what is more important, were able to concentrate their forces by calling in those troops who had been engaged in the counter-offensive in Alsace. Taking advantage of their superiority in numbers, the Allies took the offensive. Holding the Germans fast in the centre, the Paris garrison struck hurriedly northeast toward Soissons with the idea of getting around von Kluck's flank. For several days it seemed that von Kluck and his army must be captured. But, moving north with great rapidity, abandoning much of his artillery and supplies, he escaped the net Joffre had spread for him, and anchored himself securely behind the Aisne. The great German movement was thus brought to an abrupt halt, and they were now on the defensive. Paris was saved. For ten days the Allies fought desperately to cross the Aisne and force von Kluck to continue his retreat. But finally the effort was given up, and the two armies faced each other across the Aisne deadlocked.

The Russians meanwhile had not been idle. Although their operations against the reinforced German Army had a negative result, against the Austrians in Galicia their success continued. Przemysl had not been taken, but, hemming it in securely, the Russians passed on and took the fortified town of Jaroslau, near the lower San. The menace of the Russian invasion of Galicia then became apparent. Galicia, with her wealth of oil and minerals, the fertile plains of Hungary just the other side of the Carpathians, Cracow, opening the gate to Breslau and Berlin—these were the things the Teutons stood in danger of losing, and it is not surprising that they viewed the Russian advance with alarm.

There is but one more incident to record before closing what might well be considered the second phase of the war. That is the fall of Antwerp. It was Belgium's final sacrifice on the altar of her national honor. And no matter what our ancestry may be, nor how our sympathies may lie, we cannot but reverence a people whose sense of national duty and honor is so high that they are willing to sacrifice and do sacrifice their all to maintain it.

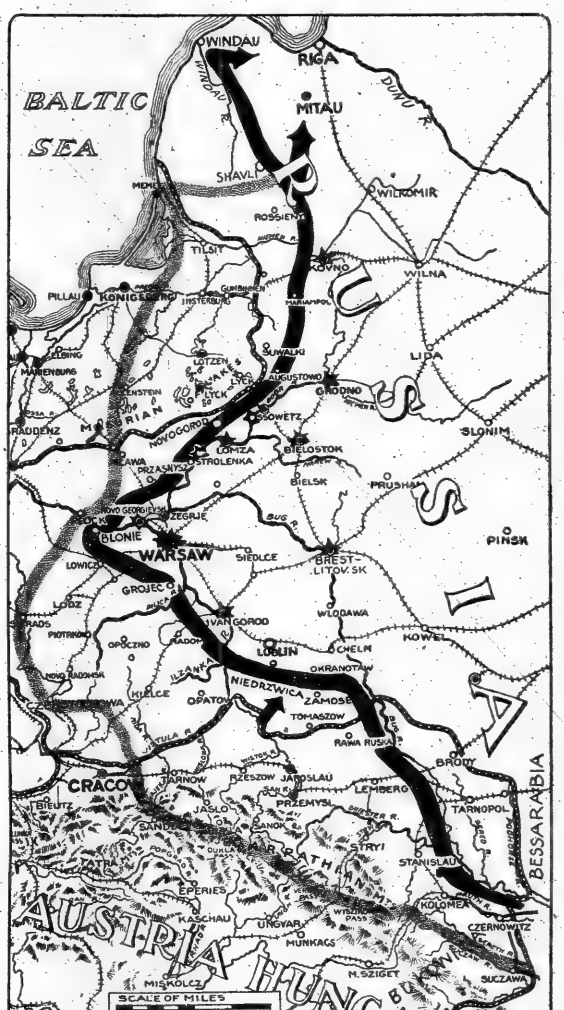
WHEN it became apparent to General French that the line of the Aisne, to which the Germans had retreated after the battle of the Marne, was too strong to be forced he withdrew his troops, about 100,000 men, from the line, his place being filled by the French reserves. The object of the withdrawal was another flanking movement against the German right. The idea seems to have been that by withdrawing and entraining at night the movement would be entirely concealed from the Germans until the British were actually in Belgium, and that an advance along the left bank of the Scheldt would turn the flank of the whole German Army in France, compelling a general retreat. The movement was discovered by German air scouts, however, and the troops that had been before Antwerp met and checked the British, who took up finally the line along the Yser Canal, through Ypres to La Bassée, opposed by three German army corps.

But one thing saved the British from another defeat and prevented a more disastrous retreat than that from Mons and Charleroi. When the Germans took Antwerp the Belgian garrison of about 50,000 men escaped and by a brilliant retreat retired to a line from Nieuport to Dixmude. They thus guarded the left flank of the British line and by a stubborn resistance prevented this flank from being turned and the British driven south toward Paris. Nothing else prevented Dunkirk, Calais, and Boulogne from falling into German hands at this time.

While the armies in the west were checking each other until the status of a "stalemate" had been reached, affairs in the eastern theatre had been moving rapidly. Persuaded by German money, a temptation the Turk has ever been powerless to resist, Turkey late in October joined hands with the Teutons and declared war on the Allies. The Japanese, who had at the outset joined hands with England, had, after a wonderful defense by the Germans, taken the German Chinese city of Kiao-Chau. But of more importance still was the activity of the opposing armies in Russia and in Galicia.



The eastern theatre of war. The shaded part shows the territory covered by the Russians in their various offensive movements into East Prussia, and through Galicia and Bukowina to the crests of the Carpathians. The black line shows, approximately, the present battle front. Columns of General von Buelow's army are reported to be advancing from the region of Mitau in a southeasterly direction, which would bring them considerably further east than the main German battle line.

After the battle of Tannenberg, in which Russia was defeated and driven back to her own borders, the Germans invaded Suwalki Province in Northern Poland. The Russians again took the offensive, defeated the Germans in the battle of Augustowo, and, pressing westward, again entered East Prussia in the region of the Mazurian Lakes. In this territory a deadlock followed, both Russians and Germans remaining with horns locked and unable to move until early Spring.

In Galicia, however, events moved with greater rapidity, and the results were vastly more important. After the fall of Lemberg and Jaroslau the Russians pressed forward across the San to Tarnow, masking Przemysl on the way, and took up a line along the Dunajec to the Carpathians and east through Galicia along the Dniester and the Pruth to the Rumanian frontier, thus threatening not only the plains of Hungary, which lay just across the Carpathian summits, but also Bukowina, the Crownland of Austria.

Austria's plight was desperate, and German assistance was necessary. Von Hindenburg's first attack on Warsaw, the battle being called the battle of the Vistula, was the answer. The Germans advanced against the Russian centre, the Austrians against the left in Galicia. At first both were successful, but heavy Russian reinforcements succeeded in turning the German left, almost at the very gates of Warsaw. The Germans were forced to retreat, and fell back to their own borders. The Austrians were at the same time compelled to retreat, due to the uncovering of their flank, and again Russia was in supreme control of Galicia as far west as Cracow. As the Germans retreated the Russians followed, and another invasion of Germany was threatened, and it was von Hindenburg again who was to throw it back.

This he did, driving forward in three columns, two of which were intended to move against the Russian flanks. The Russian centre fell back to Lodz, but the right was still threatened. Again Russia assembled her reserves, and before von Hindenburg realized the situation a Russian army was not only on his flank but in his rear. A retreat was necessary. The Germans, assisted by corps drawn from the west, cut their way out and escaped from the Russian trap through the failure of one of the Russian armies to co-operate in the movement in time. But the German offense had failed and the effort had been terribly expensive.

Another offense was immediately planned—this time to move along the Vistula and strike at Warsaw from the southwest. This also was a failure, and the two armies finally became deadlocked along the line of the Bzura and the Rawka Rivers.

No further fighting of importance occurred in this theatre until February, when the battle of the Mazurian Lakes was fought.

But this victory, like other German victories, while decisive as far as the particular Russian army involved was concerned, did nothing toward hastening peace.

In the west since the failure of the German drive on Calais there has been no movement that has affected the general situation.

The principal event of the Spring in the west has been the advent of Italy into the maelstrom. But this has not affected the situation up to the present time. Italy has a hard problem on her hands which must be solved before she can make herself felt. She has but one line of advance—the line of the Isonzo. But she dare not advance and leave the passes through the Tyrolean and the Carnic Alps open for Germany and Austria to pour troops in against her flank and rear. Her task therefore is first to stop every pass by which this can be done; and then, and then only, is she ready to move. This is being done, but the task is a difficult one, the country impossible from a military viewpoint, and progress necessarily slow.

In the east, however, the coming of Spring brought a series of the most tremendous movements of the war. The Allies began an operation against the Dardanelles, with the object of forcing the strait, taking Constantinople, and thus at once releasing the great store of grain in Southern Russia and providing a means of getting ammunition to Russia from the west. The operations at first were entirely naval. But after serious loss, with no corresponding advantage, it was realized that the naval forces alone were not sufficient, and troops were landed on the western end of the Gallipoli Peninsula. This force has been for three months hammering at the positions of the Turks along the Achi Baba line, but, except for the possible influence on the Balkan States of the presence of these expeditionary forces on Gallipoli, little headway has been made. Certain it is that there is no indication that the near future will bring the Allies into Constantinople.

In Galicia the Spring began with the capitulation of Przemysl and the surrender to the Russians of about 125,000 Austrians. This was the greatest victory in the eastern theatre thus far, and immediately opened the way wide to the passes in the Carpathians that led to the Hungarian plains and to Cracow. Russian efforts concentrated in forcing the Carpathian passes.

For weeks the battle of the Carpathians was in progress. The Austrians, reinforced by strong German contingents, fought desperately, and, although several of the passes were finally captured, Uzok Pass, the centre of the line and the key to the whole Carpathian situation, held out. While the battle for its possession was in progress the Germans were quietly concentrating along the Dunajec. Suddenly their attack was launched, the line of the Dunajec forced, and the Russian flank and their lines of communication were seriously involved. To prevent being cut off, the forces in the Carpathians were compelled to fall back to their lateral lines. Preponderance of artillery forced the retreat through Galicia, and in an incredibly short time Jaroslau, Przemysl, and Lemberg were again in the hands of the Teutons and Galicia practically cleared of the Russian invaders.

Earlier in the Spring the Germans under von Bülow had landed in Northern Russia and the Gulf of Riga, and, gradually working south, had effected a junction with von Hindenburg's army in front of Warsaw. Coming north through Galicia, Mackensen had driven the Russians back to the line of the Ivangorod-Lublin railroad and had established connections with von Hindenburg's right. Von Linsengen and the Austrian Archduke Francis Joseph completed the line facing the Russians along the upper Viprez, the Bug, the Zlota Lipa, and the Dniester. Simultaneously, with all flanks guarded, the Teutons began to close in on Warsaw in the most stupendous military movement of history. As this article is written it seems that nothing can save the Polish capital; before it goes to press, even, Warsaw may be in German hands.

EX-GERMAN OFFICER ANALYZES WAR

Lieutenant Ives, Formerly of Prussian Dragoons, Gives Expert's View of Its Various Phases

By Lieutenant Walter E. Ives,
Formerly of the Royal Prussian Thirteenth Dragoons.

I.—The Western Campaign.

THE first year of the European war has drawn to a close. A résumé covering the military events it has produced brings to view two distinct phases of the campaign. The first phase comprises the period from Aug. 3 to Oct. 27, and consists of a tenacious effort to carry through the original plan of war of the German General Staff—to strike a crushing blow at France, and, after putting her hors de combat, to turn on the enemy in the east. The second phase comprises the time from Oct. 27 to the present, and consists in the pursuance of military aims forming the direct reversal of the original ones.

The campaign against France, in consequence of the German plan of strategy the first one to come into prominence, can, in its first phase, be divided into four periods.

The first period comprises the operations in Belgium, German Lorraine and Alsace, from Aug. 3 to Aug. 23, the day before the Battle for the Invasion of France, commonly but incorrectly known as the battle of Mons.

The main blow at France was to come through Belgium. Five German armies out of eight were hurled against this gateway to Northern France. In Lorraine and Alsace the Germans were temporarily to remain on the defensive. The protection of Lorraine was intrusted to the Bavarian (Sixth) Army, that of Alsace to the remaining two armies.

The French plan of operation was to check the invasion of Belgium on the line Tongres-Liége-Longwy, where the Belgian Army, from a strictly military point of view, forming the advance guards of the French Army of the North, was holding strong positions, and with superior forces to strike at the German Army of Lorraine. The aim was, avoiding Metz, to reach the Moselle near Trier through the valley of the Saar, and to roll up the German Army of the North from its left wing. An invasion of Alsace was merely to satisfy political aspirations.

The German advance in Belgium, however, remained unchecked, and in Lorraine the battles of Dieuze and Saarbourg on Aug. 20 decided the issue in favor of the Bavarians. In Alsace the French were victorious over the Eighth Army and took Mülhausen, while further north, between Münster and Shirmeck, the Seventh Army checked the French invasion.

Meanwhile the German avalanche in Belgium had reached the second line of defense, Brussels-Namur-Longwy, before the French Army of the North. The capture of Namur prompted the French staff to recall advance guards, which had reached the fortress just as it surrendered, and to accept battle in the line Mons-Charleroi-Givet-Longwy. The battle for the invasion of France and the retirement of the French armies in all the theatres of action which it caused opens the second period of the campaign against France.

The English contingent from Havre had joined the French Army just before the German onslaught began. The battle was lost by the Allies tactically and strategically through the defeat of their right wing at Longwy and Neufchateau, and through the encircling of their left wing at Mons. The direct result of the outcome was the German invasion of France.

Sweeping on through Northern France, the German Army of the North was breaking up all resistance in its path, such as was attempted by the British at St. Quentin on Aug. 28, and was tearing with it all fortresses, such as Longwy, La Fère, Maubeuge, and others; but it was failing in its principal aim—to embrace the skillfully retreating enemy before he could reach the line Paris-Verdun, which he had selected and prepared for the next stand.

On Aug. 30 the German plan of strategy was changed, and it was resolved to break the centre of the enemy, throwing his left wing into Paris and on the Seine and his right wing into Verdun, Toul, and Epinal. The armies of the centre were pushed forward, while either wing held back. The Allies were established in the general line Paris-Verdun.

The battle ensuing on Sept. 5 and the retreat of the Germans to the Aisne are the events of the third period of this campaign, lasting from Sept. 5 to Sept. 28. On Sept. 8, while the German attacks had all but pierced the French centre, having already bent it back beyond the line Sezanne-Vitry, the German right wing found itself outflanked by a new allied army from Paris, which was rapidly moving northward and threatened to roll up the entire German battle front from the direction of Compiègne. The critical question, who would succeed first, the Allies in outflanking the German right or the Germans in piercing the French centre, was decided in favor of the Allies. Anglo-French strategy triumphed.

The retreat of the Germans, their right flank constantly in danger of being rolled up, was a fine military achievement. On Sept. 12 it halted on the Aisne. In the regions northeast of Verdun the German left wing joined hands with the Sixth German Army, which had followed up the retirement of the French Army of Lorraine to the line Verdun-St. Die.

Thus resting on Metz with its left wing the German battle front was strongly established on a line passing Verdun, to the east and northeast, extending from there in a general westerly direction to the valley of the Aisne as far as the region north of Compiègne, and from that point northward to the region west of Peronne and Cambrai.

The situation was again safe, but the plan to put the French Army hors de combat was far from having been realized. The German General Staff therefore decided on a new plan. Its purpose was to gain control of the northeast coast of France. A wedge should be driven between the two allied countries, and Pas-de-Calais made the base of further operations against both. The following out of this plan constitutes the fourth and last period of the first phase of the western campaign. It starts with the beginning of the siege of Antwerp on Sept. 28 and ends with the first battle of Ypres on Oct. 27.

The first step toward the accomplishment of the new aims was the capture of Antwerp. The next point of strategic importance for the pursuance of the German plan was Lille, which was taken on Oct. 12.

But the change in the German plan of strategy had been recognized by the Allies, and a new English army from Havre was hurried to the line Bethune-Dunkirk to extend the allied left wing to the coast and block the road to Calais. It reached West Flanders on Oct. 13, and on Oct. 16 it came in contact with the German Army that approached from Antwerp. The latter joined the German right wing north of Lille and extended it to Westende. On the 18th, after having brought up all their reserves, the Germans began their onslaught to break through in the region of Dixmude and Ypres.

While, by Oct. 27, no appreciable impression had been made on the allied battle line, the situation in the eastern seat of war had begun to assume an alarming aspect, and necessitated the complete change in the German plan of strategy, which marks the beginning of the second phase of the war.

On the western front this second phase meant for the Germans the going into the defensive along the entire battle line, which the allied armies have been relentlessly attempting to break.

II.—The Eastern Campaign.

WHILE, in the early days of August, the bulk of the German Army was moving westward, not more than ten army corps were available for the campaign against Russia. To them and to the Austrian armies fell the task of laying the basis for the offensive contemplated for a later date. The plan of campaign was to draw the Russians into the Polish bag and tie it up. It was based on the knowledge that Russia's principal strategic aim must, under all circumstances, be Cracow, the gateway to Vienna and Berlin.

The enemy was to be allowed to reach it through Poland, while the Germans should hold on to East Prussia and the Austrians to Galicia, to flank the Russian advance from the north and south in preparation for a campaign against the Russian lines of communication. This scheme of bagging the enemy has governed all strategic moves of the campaign against Russia to this day.

But the Muscovites were on their guard. They paid little attention to the few German divisions that were thrown into Poland in August, in order to attract a Russian offensive, and began hammering at the Teutonic flanking positions along the East Prussian frontier in the north and the line Lublin-Tarnopol in the south.

While the Russian offensive in East Prussia came to grief at Tannenberg, it was most successful against Galicia, and the eighth week of the war already found the Russian invasion west of the San, Przemysl besieged, and the Austrian right wing flanked by vast bodies of cavalry, which had penetrated the Carpathian passes and reached the region of Munkacs.

To relieve the pressure exerted on their allies and give them a chance once more to establish themselves in Northeastern Galicia, four German army corps invaded Poland and advanced toward Radom and Ivangorod. This countermove was successful. Menaced in their right flank, the Russians quickly took back their army beyond the San. The Austrians followed, raised the siege of Przemysl, and drove the invaders from Hungary and straightened out their line from Sandomir to Czernowitz.

Meanwhile heavy Russian reinforcements had been brought up from Ivangorod and were gradually put in action against the Germans east of Radom. On Oct. 24, as soon as the Russian superiority became alarming, the four German army corps, having, temporarily at least, accomplished their purpose of re-establishing the Austrian campaign, beat a hasty retreat toward Silesia, during which the second purpose of their invasion, to draw into the Polish bag great masses of Russian troops, was successfully achieved, the Russians having been led to believe that they were pursuing a great German army.

Simultaneously, though, with their advance in the path of the German retreat in Poland, the Russians once more concentrated vast forces against the menacing projection of the Austrian battle line in Galicia, and the early days of November witnessed the second invasion of the Austrian province. At the same time a new drive was made on East Prussia, and the Germans were forced back into the region of the Masurian Lakes.

The retirement of the entire Teutonic battle line before the Russians, who toward the end of October had reached the maximum of their strength, marks the end of the first phase of the eastern campaign. It had not accomplished all that had been expected of it. The enemy had been drawn far into South Poland, but the base of operations for the general offensive against his communications in the north had not been established just where it should have been, and the Russian frontier fortifications had been found better prepared for resistance than those of Belgium, while in the south the Austrian base of operations was entirely in the hands of the enemy.

The second phase of the eastern campaign was therefore opened from a new base—Thorn, where the main army had been gathered ever since Oct. 27, when the Russian danger had become alarming, and the offensive in the west had been abandoned. It was suddenly launched with irresistible force on Nov. 12, and rolled back numerically inferior Russian armies, whose task it had been to protect the right flank of the Russian advance on Silesia.

Recognizing the danger to their operations in South Poland and Galicia, where they had meanwhile approached the line of the Warta, Cracow, and Neu Sandec, the Russians threw troops into North Poland from all sides and succeeded in temporarily detaining the German advance there, while they were continuing their supreme efforts to break the Austro-German line south of Cracow. But the line held. At the same time the German drive in North Poland was making steady headway.

On Dec. 6 the Germans took Lodz, and further north advanced on Lowitz, and the Russian offensive in the Cracow district was given up. While all troops that could be spared were sent northeast to support the prepared lines of the Bzura and Rawka Rivers, the Russians in the south fell back behind the Nida and Dunajec, joining with their right wing their northern army in the region of Tomaschew, and extending their left through the region of Gorlitz and Torka toward the Pruth. In this line the Teutonic advance was checked. A new German drive on the road from Soldau to Warsaw could likewise make no headway beyond Mlawa, while, on the other hand, in East Prussia the Russian offensive had been brought to a standstill.

A siege warfare, like that in France, seemed imminent, except in the Bukowina, where Russian forces during January were driving Austrian troops before them. The Russian invasion of that province, however, so distant from all strategically important points, was but a political manoeuvre.

The first movement of any consequence to occur was a desperate attempt of the Austrians early in February to push forward with their right wing in the direction of Stanislau, chiefly to bring relief to the garrison of Przemysl. Simultaneously they began sweeping the Russians out of Bukowina. The latter undertaking was successful, but the advance on Stanislau was thrown back toward Nadworna.

While the Austrian offensive was under way, General von Hindenburg unexpectedly launched a vigorous attack in East Prussia, which resulted in the destruction of the Russian East Prussian Army in the region of the Masurian Lakes.

To check the onslaught of the reinforced Russian armies against the Carpathian passes early in April, troops must be drawn from General von Hindenburg's armies, and the consequence was another deadlock in the north. Meanwhile the reinforced Teutonic troops were hurriedly concentrated for the counter-attack against the Russian offensive in the Carpathians, and a great drive began against the Russian positions on the Dunajec line, east of Cracow, early in May. Breaking all resistance, it swept on toward Jaroslau and Przemysl on a sixty-mile front.

Threatened in their right and left flanks, respectively, the Russian lines on the Nida and in the Carpathians fell back rapidly, while reinforcements were sent to stem the Teutonic advance along the San. But the Russian efforts were in vain. The momentum the Teutonic offensive had gained carried it across the river, while further south the Austrian right wing cleared the entire Carpathian front of the enemy, hotly pushing his retreat.

Przemysl was recaptured, the third Russian line of defense from Rawa-Ruska to Grodeck and the Dniester was broken, and the end of June saw Lemberg once more in the hands of the Teutons.

While this great Spring offensive from the Dunajec line was well under way, small German forces invaded the Russian province of Courland. Finding at first

III.—Campaigns of Minor Importance.

WHILE the struggle in the two principal seats of war has been going on, the passing year has witnessed fighting also of secondary importance, though not less heroic, in three other fields of action—Serbia, Turkey, and the Austro-Italian frontier. Whereas Turkey joined the Teutons but three months after the beginning of hostilities, and Italy was involved only at the end of May, Serbia was one of the first nations to take the field.

Austria's campaign against the little kingdom could under no circumstances influence the events of the war, and was therefore void of any strategic importance. For this reason but three Austrian Army corps were engaged in it.

The purpose was merely to keep the Serbians busy, and prevent them from invading Austrian soil. For the sake of the moral effect on the other Balkan States the capture of Belgrade should be attempted. In view of the strength of the Danube fortifications the operations were launched from Bosnia and resulted in the forcing of the Drina line and the capture of Valjevo on Nov. 17. The Serbian positions on the Danube having thus been flanked, the abandonment of Belgrade on Dec. 2 was a natural consequence of the Battle of Valjevo.

Misled by their successes into the belief that the Serbian Army had been placed hors de combat, the Austrians advanced beyond the lines destined to constitute the object of their offensive. In the difficult mountain districts southeast of Valjevo the Serbians turned on the invaders with superior forces and defeated them. The Austrian retreat to the Drina which followed necessitated the evacuation of Belgrade on Dec. 15. Since then the situation on the Serbian frontier has been a deadlock, only desultory and insignificant fighting occurring for the rest of the year.

In contrast to the operations in Serbia, Turkey's campaign has direct bearing on the European war. Its chief feature, the closing of the Dardanelles, has been a serious blow to Russia. The frantic efforts of the Allies to open them are the plainest evidence of its importance.

The attempt in March to force the strait by naval power having resulted in failure, an army was landed on the west coast of Gallipoli, and after heavy fighting established itself on a line running from Eski-Hissarlik on the south coast of the peninsula to the region of Sari-Bair, on the north coast, constituting a front of approximately twenty miles, within five miles of the west coast. No progress further than this have the Allies been able to make up to the present, and the watch at the Dardanelles stands firm as yet.

The attacks of the Anglo-French armies, however, exerted influence on Turkey's operations in other fields of action. They caused the complete abandonment of a contemplated invasion of Egypt and compelled the Turkish troops to go on the defensive in the Caucasian seat of war.

The operations in the latest field of action, along the Austro-Italian frontier, have been going on for but eight weeks, and do not, therefore, allow any conclusions as to their importance to be made as yet. So far the Italians have been unable to make any effective impression on either Austria's Tyrolese frontier or on the front of the Isonzo. All attempts to break through the Austrian lines have thus far failed. The aim of Austria's strategy is to maintain a deadlock until the issue has been decided in Poland.

HUGE EMPIRE LOST TO GERMANY

Fighting in Asia and Africa Has Wrested From Her 500,000 Square Miles of Territory.

By Charles Johnston.

I.—Re-Mapping the World.

SPEAKING on July 14, A. Bonar Law, British Colonial Secretary, announced that the Entente Allies had already occupied 450,000 square miles of German colonial possessions. Add Turkish possessions in Asia in the hands of the Entente powers, and the total reaches 500,000 square miles.

Two outstanding facts are that this transfer, if permanent, will change the destiny of all Africa and Asia, and that, for the first time in history, the oversea dominions of Britain have initiated and carried on wars of conquest, Australia and New Zealand, in union, having already taken 100,000 square miles of German colonies in the Pacific, while the Union of South Africa has conquered German Southwest Africa.

In other parts of Africa France and Belgium are co-operating with English imperial forces, while in East Africa and on the Persian Gulf the brunt of the fighting is being borne by British Indian troops and troops provided by the Princes of India. The movement now in progress will, if completed, give the Entente powers the whole of Africa; will give Britain all Southern Asia, from the Mount Sinai peninsula to Siam; and will, in all probability, make the Entente powers heirs of the whole Eastern Hemisphere.

These immense territories are the ultimate stakes of the battles in France, in Poland, on the Dardanelles. We lose sight of them, perhaps, in the details of local fighting. In reality, nothing less is being effected than the re-mapping of the whole Eastern Hemisphere.

II.—Togoland and Kamerun.

ON Aug. 1, a year ago, German colonial possessions in Africa totaled over a million square miles, in four regions—Togo, Kamerun, Southwest Africa, and East Africa. Togo, running from the north shore of the Gulf of Guinea, is wedged between French and English colonies. In August France and England joined in attacking it, and on Aug. 26 their occupation was complete, a rich area of 33,000 square miles thus passing from Germany.

Kamerun, in the elbow of the Gulf of Guinea, is about ten times as large, one-third of this having been conceded by France to Germany in 1911, through the agency of M. Caillaux. Recent letters to The London Times describe the fighting there:

On the 7th (May) we had a trying experience. Our company commander went out with myself and another subaltern and about forty men. We crossed the Mungo River in canoes, and then did a long and very difficult march all through the night in absolute dense forest. How ever the guides managed it passes comprehension.

About 5 in the morning, when it was just getting light, our advance party were just on the point of stumbling on to the German outpost, when what should happen but an elephant suddenly walked in between and scattered our opposing parties in all directions. I was in the rear of our little column, and was left in bewilderment, all our carriers dropping their loads and every one disappearing into the bush. After a few minutes we got our men together and our scouts went forward again, and found the Germans had bolted from their outpost, but soon returned and opened fire on our scouts.

A British officer writes:

I hope you have heard ere this of our capture of Duala and Bonaberi, and our further advance along the Duala Railway to Tusa, and along the Wari River to Jabassi. The heat and climate are very trying. It's awfully hot, far hotter than the last coast place I was in; a drier heat and sun infinitely more powerful, and yet the rains are full on and we get terrific tornadoes. The nights, however, are cooler.

We are surrounded by mangrove swamps, and they breed mosquitos, and consequently malaria and black-water fever.

This is quite a pretty little place (Duala) with some jolly houses, typical German of the Schloss villa type; nice inside and out. The country is pretty, the soil good. A good deal of timber and rubber. I found some beautiful tusks the other day, worth a good bit. Elephants abound. The native villages around are totally different from other West African ones—here the houses are mostly one long mud or palm erection, with thatched roof, and are divided into compartments instead of the smaller separate huts one is accustomed to see in these parts.

The notices all over the place are strangely reminiscent of, say, the Black Forest—"Bäkerei," "Conditorei," &c., and yet it is the heart of tropical Africa. None of the natives, strange to say, talks German; all pidgin English. The Hausa boys are splendid chaps, as different from the Duala boys or Sierra Leone boys as chalk from cheese. Smile and make an idiotic but beautiful remark, they rush with a roar of laughter for the biggest load.

We get some beautiful sunset effects here. At sundown night before last, on the sea near mouth of river, it was absolutely gorgeous with the purple mountains standing clear out against the orange and emerald sky and the dark gray shapes of our ships lying sombrely in the background, talking to each other in flashing Morse. The great mountain, Fernando Po, standing up out of the water to starboard and the Peak of Cameroon (13,760 feet) wreathed in mist to port; Victoria invisible, as also Buea—both hidden behind the clouds as we passed disdainfully by and entered the estuary of the Cameroon River.

As an added detail for West Africa, it should be recorded that, on March 19, a combined French and Belgian force occupied Molunda in the German Congo territory, and Ngaundere on June 29.

III.—With Botha in Southwest Africa.

ON July 13 a resolution, moved by Premier Asquith, was passed by acclamation in the House of Commons thanking General Louis Botha, General Smuts and the forces of the Union of South Africa for their work in "the remarkable campaign which has just been brought to a remarkable and glorious conclusion." Premier Asquith concluded:

> The German dominion of Southwest Africa has ceased to exist. I ask the House to testify to the admiration of the whole empire for its gratitude to the illustrious General who has rendered such an inestimable service to the empire, which he entered by adoption and of which he has become one of the most honored and cherished sons, and to his dauntless and much enduring troops, whether of Burgher or British birth, who fought like brethren, side by side, in the cause which is equally dear to them as to us—the broadening of the bounds of human liberty.

The event which the British Premier thus read into the minutes of history marks the end of a campaign begun by General Botha on Sept. 27, when troops of the Union of South Africa first entered German territory. On Christmas Day Walfisch (Whale) Bay was occupied, and on Jan. 14 Swakopmund, a military railroad joining them being finished a month later.

The progress of General Botha's campaign from the south and west is thus summarized by The Sphere (July 3):

> The occupation of Windhoek was effected by General Botha's North Damaraland forces working along the railway from Swakopmund. At the former place General Vanderventer joined up with General Botha's forces. The force from Swakopmund met with considerable opposition, first at Tretskopje, a small township in the great Namib Desert fifty miles to the northeast of Swakopmund, and secondly at Otjimbingwe, on the Swakop River, sixty miles northwest of Windhoek.
> Apart from these two determined stands, however, little other opposition was encountered, and Karibib was occupied on May 5 and Okahandja and Windhoek on May 12. With the fall of the latter place 3,000 Europeans and 12,000 natives became prisoners.
> The wireless station—one of Germany's most valuable high-power stations, which was able to communicate with one relay only with Berlin—was captured almost intact, and much rolling stock also fell into the hands of the Union forces.
> The advance from the south along the Lüderitzbucht-Seeheim-Keetmanshoop Railway, approximately 500 miles in length, was made by two forces which joined hands at Keetmanshoop. The advance from Aus (captured on April 1) was made by General Smuts's forces. Colonel (afterward General) Vanderventer, moving up from the direction of Warmbad and Kalkfontein, around the flanks of Karas Mountain, pushed on after reaching Keetmanshoop in the direction of Gibeon. Bethany had previously been occupied during the advance to Seeheim. At Kabus, twenty miles to the north of Keetmanshoop, and at Gibeon pitched battles were fought between General Vanderventer's forces and the enemy. No other opposition of importance was encountered, and the operations were brought to a successful conclusion at Windhoek.
> A part of the German forces had retreated to the northward, intending to carry on guerrilla warfare in the hills. General Botha went in pursuit. A Reuter's telegram, dated June 26, announced that Otjivarongo, approximately 120 miles north of Karibib, on the Otavi Railway, was occupied on that day by General Botha, the enemy having retired northward during the previous night. General Botha's movements have again been characterized by rapid and extraordinary marching through dense bush country, which is almost waterless. The retirement of the enemy was more suggestive of a flight than a strategic retreat.
> A telegram from Lord Buxton, the Governor General of the Union of South Africa, to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, concludes the story:
> This morning, July 9, General Botha accepted from Governor Seitz the surrender of all the German forces in Southwest Africa. Hostilities have ceased and the campaign has thus been brought to a successful conclusion.

The newly conquered territory, which is half as large again as the German Empire, is destined to become a part of the South African Union. As a great part of it is 5,000 feet above sea level, it is well adapted for white settlers. Its chief resources are diamond mines and grazing.

General Botha's force is likely to be divided between the European seat of war, to which the South African Union has up to the present sent no troops, and German East Africa, much of which still remains in the hands of the Germans.

IV.—German East Africa.

THE early stage of the struggle for German East Africa is lucidly summarized in The Sphere for May 8:

> The fighting in British East Africa (immediately north of the German colony) may be said to have really begun toward the end of September, 1914, when the Germans made a determined attempt to capture Mombassa, the commercial capital of British East Africa and the terminus of the Uganda Railway.
> Previous to this, somewhat half-hearted attempts had been made by them to wreck the railway line at various points, destroy the telegraph, and occupy Voi and Mombassa. The Germans, who were in strong force, were, however, for various reasons, unable to cut the railway or even to destroy the bridge across the Tsava River, and they were beaten back both at Voi and the post at Taveta.
> The attack on Mombassa itself was repulsed at Gazi, some twenty-five miles to the southwest. The German plan of action was to move up the road from Vanga to Mombassa, arriving at the latter place somewhere about the time the Königsburg was expected to arrive and bombard it from the sea. The Königsburg was, of course, prevented from doing this by the proximity of British warships, and the land attack was also frustrated.
> The Germans were held at Nargerimi by a mere handful of Arabs and King's African Rifles—about 300 men all told—until the arrival of the Indian troops strengthened our position and the enemy was beaten back to his original lines.
> The next big actions were the British attack on Tanga and Jassin very early in November; this was the direct outcome of the German attack on Mombassa. Tanga is a post of considerable importance in German East Africa, and lies midway between Zanzibar and Mombassa. It is the seaport of an important railway line which connects it with Moshi, lying among the foothills of Kilimanjaro (18,700 feet) and which taps most of the intervening country.
> The force dispatched for the attack on Tanga consisted of 4,000 Indian Imperial Service troops, 1,000 Indian regulars, together with 1,000 white regulars. The force took no kit of any kind except rations. It was disembarked from the troopship near Tanga, and then moved against the position.
> The day the British attacked, however, 1,000 Germans had been rushed up from Moshi and then took up a position to the right of the town. With them were great numbers of quick-firing guns of various sorts. This unexpected reinforcement made the capture of Tanga almost impossible by the forces present. During the fight many casualties were incurred on both sides.
> As regards the advance against Tanga and Jassin, the German forces which had previously advanced on Mombassa were, up to as recently as January, maintaining themselves in the valley of the Umba River. To drive them from their positions a column of 1,800 men, composed of Indians and King's African Rifles, with artillery, was dispatched.
> After gaining Jassin and leaving a garrison of 300 men, the post was attacked and subsequently surrendered to a force of 2,000 Germans. The minor operations along the Anglo-German frontier include the attack on Shirati—a German post on the southeast shore of Lake Victoria Nyanza—on Jan 9.
> Fighting also took place near Karungu in March, and on this occasion the German force was driven back in disorder and with heavy loss into their own territory, while Kisu—which had been captured by the Germans—was reoccupied after the defeat of Karungu. On Jan. 10 the large island of Mafia, off the coast of the German colony, was taken by the British and is being administered by them.

The history of the war in this region is brought up to date by a British Press Bureau statement issued on June 30:

> Further details are now to hand of the operations which have been taking place west of Lake Victoria Nyanza. It will be remembered that the general scheme for the attack on Bukoba was to be a simultaneous advance on the part of two forces, one starting from the line of the Kagera River, south of Uganda, the other starting on steamers from Kisumu.
> The junction of the two forces was successfully accomplished, and the attack took place on June 22. During the action the enemy received reinforcements which brought his force up to 400 rifles, and he made a most determined resistance, the Arabs especially fighting most bravely. They were, however, heavily outnumbered, and eventually the whole force broke and fled, utterly demoralized. * * * Our troops distinguished themselves greatly, both in the arduous march from the Kagera and in the subsequent fighting. A telegram was sent on June 29 from Lord Kitchener to Major Gen. Tighe, commanding the troops in British East Africa, congratulating him on the success of the operations.

V.—The Persian Gulf and Mesopotamia.

TURKEY'S entry into the war has had four results: (1) The annexation of Cyprus (previously a protectorate) by Britain on Nov. 5; (2) the British expedition against Turkish territory on the Persian Gulf two weeks later; (3) the loss of Turkey's suzerainty over Egpyt, which became a British protectorate under a Sultan on Dec. 17, and (4) the attack on the Gallipoli Peninsula, still in progress.

An excellent summary of the Persian Gulf expedition is given in The Sphere, May 15:

> The Shatt-el-Arab, (the united Euphrates and Tigris,) for the greater part of its course forms the boundary between Persia and Turkey. Some twenty miles below Basra (or Bussorah) it is joined by the Karun, near whose course, about a hundred miles from its mouth, are the Anglo-Persian Company's oil fields.
> The effective protection of these is necessarily an object of vital importance. It was also of considerable importance to create a diversion which should cause the Osmanli Generals to feel uneasiness as to a possible advance up the Euphrates. Whether more than the occupation of Basra and the protection of the oil fields was or is intended cannot, of course, be at present definitely stated.
> The expeditionary force, under Lieut. Gen. Sir Arthur Barrett, consisted—apparently—of three Indo-British infantry brigades, a brigade of Indian cavalry, and artillery and auxiliary services in proportion—in all probability some 15,000 to 18,000 men. It included at least three British battalions—the Second Dorsets, the Second Norfolks, and the Oxford and Bucks Light Infantry.
> The advanced brigade reached the Shatt-el-Arab on Nov. 7, and after a brief fight occupied Fao, a few miles up the river. On the 9th a night attack was made upon it by a force from Basra, which was easily beaten off. Shortly afterward the main body of the expeditionary force began to arrive, and by the 16th it had entirely disembarked at Sanjyeh, a place above Fao.
> The weather was wretched. Rain converted the alluvial flats into a wilderness of mud. The men were drenched and caked with the riverine clay, the very rifles were often choked.
> Meanwhile the advance guard carried out a reconnoissance up the river and located the enemy in position at Sahile, about nine miles distant. They numbered about 5,000 men, with twelve guns, under General Subr Bey, the Vali (Governor) of Basra. The reconnoissance carried an advanced position with a loss of sixty killed and wounded, and withdrew unmolested to report.
> On the 17th General Barrett paraded for the attack the bulk of his force. After a trying march through a veritable quagmire, the troops sometimes up to their waists in slush, the division at about 9 A. M. came within range of the Turkish position, and the leading brigade, the Belguam, (Major Gen. Fry,) deployed for attack.
> The ground was absolutely open, and the Turks had a perfect field of fire. On our side the men had the greatest difficulty in getting forward through the clayey mud-beds and the worn-out horses could not bring up the field artillery. Nevertheless, the Belgaum brigade steadily advanced, and the attack, being presently supported by other troops and assisted by the first of the two gunboats on the river, at last closed upon the Turkish intrenchments and carried them, capturing two guns and one hundred prisoners, besides inflicting a very heavy loss in killed and wounded.
> The retreat of the enemy was assisted by a mirage which disconcerted our gunners. Subr Bey retreated on Basra, but he had no hope of being able to hold the big spreading place with his small force, and evacuated it. He retreated to Kurna, where the Tigris joins the Euphrates. There he intrenched himself. His main body was in Kurna, a large village encircled by palm groves, in the marshy angle formed by the two rivers, with a strong detachment in the straggling village of Mazera, on the left bank of the Tigris.
> On Dec. 7 General Fry advanced upon the Kurna position. The defenders of Mazera made a hard fight of it, assisted by the strength of their position among a maze of pottery works backed up by the ubiquitous palms, but in the afternoon the village was carried.
> Kurna was now isolated, but its capture presented great difficulties. All through the 8th General Fry bombarded it from Mazera, while his infantry were slowly ferried over higher up. This was prepared by some daring sappers, who swam the broad river and fixed a wire rope by which the boats were worked backward and forward, and an advance was made against Kurna from the rear.
> Subr Bey had lost very heavily at Mazera, so he accepted the inevitable and surrendered. So a brilliant little episode came to a victorious conclusion. Subr Bey was returned his sword and complimented on his stubborn defense.
> The capture of Kurna secured the possession of the Basra region. Since then operations have been directed to securing it against Turkish attempts at recovery.

A recent stage of this campaign is thus described in The Pioneer Mail (Allahabad) June 4, 1915:

> It is announced from Simla that on the morning of May 31 a further advance up the Tigris River was made by the British expeditionary force in close co-operation with the navy. Notwithstanding the excessive heat the troops advanced with great dash and determination, and successively captured four positions held by the enemy. As far as reported we suffered only a few casualties. Valuable work was performed by our aeroplanes. The operations are proceeding.

VI.—The "Unrest" in India.

THE splendid work done by Indian regulars and Indian imperial forces (the forces supplied by native Princes) in Europe, in Africa, in Egypt, in Mesopotamia is a sufficient answer to the suggestion that British influence in India has been weakened by the war. The enthusiastic formation of volunteer corps, both of Europeans and of natives, is a further proof that the peoples of India, now more than ever, realize the benefits of liberty and security which they enjoy. In India the torpedoing of the Lusitania made a profound impression, as the native press proves.

A notable trial, the Lahore conspiracy case, disclosed the curious fact that almost the only case of "unrest" in India was "made in America" by returned emigrants from Canada and California, who, on their way back, were interviewed by the German Consuls at Chinese ports and advised to stir up an insurrection. This they tried to do, using bombs made of brass inkpots, and bombarding the houses of well-to-do natives, seeking in this way to raise money to finance the rising.

The Pioneer Mail (Allahabad) gives an interesting account of the trial of these peculiar patriots, half of whom seem to have informed on the other half. It appears that they, or others like them, were instrumental in causing the recent riot at Singapore, in which some twenty European men and women were killed.

VII.—German Islands in the Pacific.

A CURIOUS result of the world war has been the expeditions initiated by the great oversea dominions of Britain and by India. The work of two of these, in Africa and Mesopotamia, has been already described. There remains the joint Australian and New Zealand expeditions against the island colonies of Germany and the great semi-continental area of New Guinea.

A lively account of the expedition against the Samoa Islands is printed in The Sydney Bulletin for Sept. 24:

> The recent expedition to Samoa furnished many surprises, chief among which was the adaptability of the Maorilanders to military discipline. When the men came on board the transports (Moeraki and Monowai) discipline simply wasn't in their dictionaries. They acknowledged orders with a "Right O, Sport," or with an argument. Companies were referred to as mobs, the commanding officer as the boss or the admiral. * * * *
> The night before we reached Samoa an English military officer on board told me it was remarkable, and highly creditable, the rapidity with which the men had adapted themselves to the changed circumstances. * * *
> The expedition called at Noumea to pick up the French warship Montcalm, also the Australia and Melbourne of ours. Noumea had been very worried since the war began, lest the German fleet from Samoa would come along and bombard the place. Had notices up to the effect that five shots would signify the arrival of the Germans, and that every inhabitant was then to grab rations and make for the berizon. The welcome the French handed to us would have stirred the blood of a jellyfish.
> Samoa proved a walk-over. Not a gun, not a ship, not a mine. A bunch of schoolboys with Shanghais and a battal of rocks could have taken it. The German fleet that was supposed to be waiting to welcome us hadn't been around for eleven months. Seemingly the German fleet has gone into the business of not being around.

VIII.—German New Guinea.

THE Australasian (Melbourne) for Sept. 19 prints the following, describing the conquest of German New Guinea, which, with the Bismarck Archipelago, off the coast, has an area of 90,000 square miles—something less than half the size of the German Empire:

> The Minister for Defense (Mr. Millen) has received the following further information by wireless regarding the operations at Herbertshohe and Rabaul, from Admiral Patey: The Australian naval reserve captured the wireless station at Herbertshohe at 1 P. M. on Sept. 12, after eighteen hours' bush fighting over about six miles. Herbertshohe and Rabaul, the seat of Government, have been garrisoned and a base has been established at Simpsonshafen.
> Naval force landed under Commander Beresford of the Australian Navy met with vigorous opposition. Advanced party at dawn established landing before enemy aware of intention. From within a few hundred yards of landing bush fight for almost four miles. Roads and fronts also mined in places, and stations intrenched. Officer commanding German forces in trench 500 yards seaward side of station has surrendered unconditionally.
> Our force have reconnoitred enemy strength holding station. Have landed 12-pounder guns, and if station does not surrender intend shelling. Regret to report following casualties: 4 killed, 3 wounded.

IX.—Fighting in the Caucasus.

THE first considerable battle in the Caucasus, after Turkey entered the war, was decided in favor of Russia, on Jan. 3. On Jan. 16 the Eleventh Corps of the Turkish Army was cut up at Kara Urgaun. On Jan. 30 the Russians occupied Tabriz. On Feb. 8 Trebizond was bombarded by Russian destroyers. On May 4 the Turks were again defeated, leaving 3,500 dead.

The most recent considerable action was the taking of the ancient and important City of Van,

IN discussing the problem of the war's effect on literature it must not be forgotten that the conflict which has just completed the first year of its terrible course has been directly responsible for some literary compositions destined to be read and memorized so long as the world shall endure. This reference is not to the variously colored papers by which the nations have tried to prove their innocence of the world's greatest calamity. It is to those speeches, generally brief and intensely passionate, in which Kings, Emperors, and Ministers of State announced to the people of their countries that war was at hand and summoned the citizenry to arms.

Perhaps the most famous of these addresses are those which have emanated from Germany. The Kaiser, especially during the first months of the war, frequently appealed in person to the loyalty and patriotism of his subjects. And the world will not soon forget his first speech of the war. It was made before Germany had actually entered the conflict, on the evening of July 31, 1914. The Kaiser spoke from the balcony of his palace in Berlin before a tremendous crowd. He said:

A fateful hour has fallen for Germany. Envious people on all sides are compelling us to our just defense. The sword is being forced into our hand. I hope that if at the last hour my efforts do not succeed in bringing our opponents to see eye to eye with us and in maintaining peace, I hope that with God's help we shall so wield the sword that when all is over we shall again sheathe it with honor.

War would demand of us enormous sacrifices in property and life, but we should show our foes what it means to provoke (reizen) Germany, and now I commend you all to God. Go to church, kneel before God, and pray to Him to help our gallant army.

Almost equally famous is the Kaiser's second speech from the balcony of his palace, delivered Aug. 2. In it he called together all Germans, regardless of political faith, in these memorable words:

I thank you for the love and loyalty shown me. When I enter upon a fight let all party strife cease. We are German brothers and nothing else. All parties have attacked me in times of peace. I forgive them with all my heart. I hope and wish that the good German sword will emerge victorious in the right.

This message he amplified on Aug. 4, when, opening the special session of the Reichstag in the White Room of the Royal Palace in Berlin, he formally declared to Germany its entrance into the war. The speech follows:

Honored Sirs: It is in an hour fraught with fate that I have assembled about me all the representatives of the German people. For almost half a century we have been able to keep to the path of peace. The attempts to attribute a warlike temperament to Germany and to circumscribe its position in the world have often put to severe tests the patience of our people. With unswerving honesty my Government, even in proving circumstances, has pursued as its highest aim the development of all moral, spiritual, and economic powers. The world has been witness how tirelessly we strove in the first rank during the pressure and confusion of the last few years to spare the nations of Europe a war between the great powers.

The very grave dangers which had arisen owing to the events in the Balkans appeared to have been overcome, but then the murder of my friend the Archduke Francis Ferdinand opened up a great abyss. My high ally, the Emperor and King Francis Joseph, was compelled to take up arms to defend the security of his empire against dangerous intrigues from a neighboring State. In the pursuit of her proper interests the Dual Monarchy has found her path obstructed by the Russian Empire. Not only our duty as an ally calls us to the side of Austria-Hungary, but on us falls also the mighty task of defending the ancient community of culture of the two kingdoms and our own position in the world against the attack of hostile powers. With a heavy heart I have been compelled to mobilize my army against a neighbor with whom it has fought side by side on so many fields of battle. With sincere sorrow I saw a friendship broken of which Germany had given faithful proofs. The Imperial Russian Government, yielding to the pressure of an insatiable nationalism, has taken sides with a State which by encouraging criminal attacks has brought on the evil of this war. That France, also, placed herself on the side of our enemies could not surprise us. Too often have our efforts to arrive at friendlier relations with the French Republic come in collision with old hopes and ancient malice.

Honored Sirs: What human insight and power could do to arm a people against the last extremities has been done with your patriotic help. The hostility which has been smouldering for a long time in the East and in the West has now burst into bright flames. The present situation did not proceed from transient conflicts of interest or diplomatic entanglements; it is the result of an ill-will which has for many years been active against the strength and the prosperity of the German Empire. We are not incited by lust for conquest, we are inspired by the unyielding determination to keep for ourselves and all future generations the place which God has given us.

From the proofs which have been given you, you will see how my Government, and especially my Chancellor, strove up to the last moment to avert the worst. We grasp the sword in compulsory self-defense, with clean hands and a clean conscience.

To the peoples and races of the German Empire my call goes forth to defend with all their strength and in brotherly co-operation with our ally that which we have created by peaceful labor. After the example of our fathers, firmly and faithfully, sincerely and with chivalry, humbly before God, and battling joyfully before the enemy, let us place our trust in the eternal Omnipotence, and may He strengthen our defense and bring it to a good end!

To you, honored sirs, the whole German people, assembled about its princes and its leaders, look this day. Make your decision unanimously and quickly. That is my heartfelt wish.

Gentlemen (addressing the Deputies directly); You have read what I said to my people the other day from the balcony of my castle. I repeat now that I no longer know any parties. I know only Germans. And in order to testify that you are firmly resolved without distinction of party to stand by my side through danger and death, I call upon the leaders of the different parties in this House to come forward and lay their hands in mine as a pledge.

It was on Aug. 1 that Theobald von Bethmann-Hollweg, German Imperial Chancellor, uttered from the balcony of his official residence in Berlin his warning and summons to the German people.

On Aug. 3 the Chancellor delivered in the Reichstag the much-quoted address in which he discussed at length the numerous reasons which, he said, had compelled Germany to go to war. He began with these words:

A mighty fate has descended upon Europe. Because we were struggling for the esteem of the German Empire in the world, we have for forty-four years lived in peace and safeguarded the peace of Europe. In peaceful industry we have become strong and mighty and in consequence envied. With patience we have borne that, under the pretext that Germany was desirous of war, hostility toward us was being nursed and chains forged for us both in the East and in the West.

We wished to continue to live in peaceful industry, and, like an unexpressed vow, there was passed on from Kaiser to the youngest soldier: "Only in defense of a righteous cause shall our sword be drawn." (Hearty applause.) The day when we must draw it has appeared, contrary to our desire, contrary to our honest efforts to avoid it. Russia has applied the firebrand to the house. We find ourselves in a forced war with Russia and France.

Gentlemen, a series of documents, composed in the rush of events, is in your hands. Allow me to place before you the facts which characterize our attitude.

Then followed a detailed accusation against Russia, having special reference to the mobilization of Russian troops on the border. The Chancellor said that when, at the request of Russia, Germany was mediating in Vienna, the Russian Army appeared on Germany's long, almost entirely open, border, and that France was making preparations for war. He declared that France attacked German territory before war was declared, and that until the present the German troops had confined their activity to the protection of the borders. But he added that the German troops were now on the defensive, and that necessity recognized no law. Then came these significant passages:

Our troops have occupied Luxemburg, and perhaps have also found it necessary to enter Belgian territory. This is contrary to international law. The French Government has declared in Brussels they will respect the neutrality of Belgium as long as she respects the opponent. We knew, however, that France was ready to invade Belgium. France could wait; we, however, could not, because a French invasion in our lower Rhine flank would have proved fatal.

So we were forced to disregard the protests of the Luxemburg and Belgian Governments. We shall try to make good the injustice we have committed as soon as our military goal has been reached. Who like we are fighting for the highest must only consider how victory can be gained.

Gentlemen, we are standing shoulder to shoulder with Austria-Hungary. With reference to England, the declaration which Sir Edward Grey made in the House of Commons yesterday plainly shows our attitude. We have assured England that as long as she remains neutral our fleet will not attack the northern coast of France and that the territorial integrity and independence of Belgium will not be violated. This declaration I repeat before the whole world, and I can add that so long as England remains neutral we are prepared in case of reciprocity to refrain from all hostile operations against French merchant vessels.

Kaiser Franz Josef issued to the people of Austria-Hungary this manifesto. It was dated July 28:

To my peoples: It was my fervent wish to consecrate the years which, by the grace of God, still remain to me to the works of peace and to protect my peoples from the heavy sacrifices and burdens of war. Providence, in its wisdom, has otherwise decreed. The intrigues of a malevolent opponent compel me, in the defense of the honor of my monarchy, for the protection of its dignity and its position as a power, for the security of its possessions, to grasp the sword after long years of peace.

With a quickly forgetful ingratitude, the Kingdom of Serbia, which, from the first beginnings of its independence as a State until quite recently, had been supported and assisted by my ancestors, has for years trodden the path of open hostility to Austria-Hungary. When, after three decades of fruitful work for peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, I extended my sovereign rights to those lands, my decree called forth in the Kingdom of Serbia, whose rights were in no wise injured, outbreaks of unrestrained passion and the bitterest hate. My Government at that time employed the handsome privileges of the stronger, and with extreme consideration and leniency only requested Serbia to reduce her army to a peace footing and to promise that, for the future, she would tread the path of peace and friendship.

Guided by that same spirit of moderation, my Government, when Serbia two years ago was embroiled in a struggle with the Turkish Empire, restricted its action to the defense of the most serious and vital interests of the monarchy. It was to this attitude that Serbia primarily owed the attainment of the objects of that war.

The hope that the Serbian Kingdom would appreciate the patience and love of peace of my Government and would keep its word has not been fulfilled. The flame of its hatred for myself and my house has blazed always higher, the design to tear from us by force inseparable portions of Austria-Hungary has been made manifest with less and less disguise. A criminal propaganda has extended over the frontier with the object of destroying the foundations of State order in the southeastern part of the monarchy; of making the people, to whom I, in my paternal affection, extended my full confidence, waver in its loyalty to the ruling house and to the Fatherland; of leading astray its growing youth and inciting it to mischievous deeds of madness and high treason. A series of murderous attacks, an organized, carefully prepared, and well carried out conspiracy, whose fruitful success wounded me and my loyal peoples to the heart, forms a visible bloody track of those secret machinations which were operated and directed in Serbia.

A halt must be called to these intolerable proceedings and an end must be put to the incessant provocations of Serbia. The honor and dignity of my monarchy must be preserved unimpaired, and its political, economic, and military development must be guarded from these continual shocks. In vain did my Government make a last attempt to accomplish this object by peaceful means and to induce Serbia, by means of a serious warning, to desist. Serbia has rejected the just and moderate demands of my Government and refused to conform to those obligations the fulfillment of which forms the natural and necessary foundation of peace in the life of peoples and States. I must therefore proceed by force of arms to secure those indispensable pledges which alone can insure tranquillity to my States within and lasting peace without.

FRANZ JOSEF.

During the last days of July the politicians of England were aware that the break in the relations of Austria and Serbia could not fail to affect England. On July 25 speeches were made in Manchester by Sir John Simon, British Attorney General, and at Steyning, Sussex, by F. D. Acland, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, in which the nearness of great trials for the British Empire was clearly indicated, and Sir Edward Grey, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, concluded his statement on the Austro-Serbian crisis, made in the House of Commons on July 27, with these significant words:

It must be obvious to any person who reflects upon the situation that the moment the dispute ceases to be one between Austria-Hungary and Serbia and becomes one in which another great power is involved it can but end in the greatest catastrophe that has ever befallen the Continent of Europe at one blow; no one can say what would be the limit of the issues that might be raised by such a conflict; the consequences of it, direct and indirect, would be incalculable.

It was on Aug. 3 that Sir Edward Grey made his momentous speech in which he proved that British neutrality was no longer possible unless Great Britain was prepared to forfeit her own self-respect and the world's confidence. He began a long speech with these words:

Last week I stated that we were working for peace not only for this country, but to preserve the peace of Europe. Today events move so rapidly that it is exceedingly difficult to state with technical accuracy the actual state of affairs, but it is clear that the peace of Europe cannot be preserved. Russia and Germany, at any rate, have declared war upon each other.

Before I proceed to state the position of his Majesty's Government I would like to clear the ground so that, before I come to state to the House what our attitude is with regard to the present crisis, the House may know exactly under what obligations the Government is, or the House can be said to be, in coming to a decision on the matter. First of all, let me say, very shortly, that we have consistently worked with a single mind, with all the earnestness in our power, to preserve peace. The House may be satisfied on that point. We have always done it. During these last years, as far as his Majesty's Government are concerned, we would have no difficulty in proving that we have done so. Throughout the Balkan crisis, by general admission, we worked for peace. The co-operation of the great powers of Europe was successful in working for peace in the Balkan crisis. It is true that some of the powers had great difficulty in adjusting their points of view. It took much time and labor and discussion before they could settle their differences, but peace was secured, because peace was their main object, and they were willing to give time and trouble rather than accentuate differences rapidly.

Sir Edward Grey then proceeded to give a detailed recital of European affairs from the first Moroccan crisis of 1906. He discussed the Agadir crisis and gave a general explanation of the diplomatic relations between France and England and France and Russia. Then he said:

I now come to what we think the situation requires of us. For many years we have had a long-standing friendship with France. I remember well the feeling in the House—and my own feeling—for I spoke on the subject, I think, when the late Government made their agreement with France—the warm and cordial feeling resulting from the fact that these two nations, who had had perpetual differences in the past, had cleared these differences away; I remember saying, I think, that it seemed to me that some benign influence had been at work to produce the cordial atmosphere that had made that possible. But how far that friendship entails obligation—it has been a friendship between the nations and ratified by the nations—how far that entails an obligation, let every man look into his own heart, and his own feelings, and construe the extent of the obligation for himself. I construe it myself as I feel it, but I do not wish to urge upon any one else more than their feelings dictate as to what they should feel about the obligation. The House, individually and collectively, may judge for itself. I speak my personal view, and I have given the House my own feeling in the matter.

The French fleet is now in the Mediterranean, and the northern and western coasts of France are absolutely undefended. The French fleet being concentrated in the Mediterranean, the situation is very different from what it used to be, because the friendship which has grown up between the two countries has given them a sense of security that there was nothing to be feared from us.

The French coasts are absolutely undefended. The French fleet is in the Mediterranean, and has for some years been concentrated there because of the feeling of confidence and friendship which has existed between the two countries. My own feeling is that if a foreign fleet, engaged in a war which France had not sought, and in which she had not been the aggressor, came down the English Channel and bombarded and battered the undefended coasts of France, we could not stand aside, and see this going on practically within sight of our eyes, with our arms folded, looking on dispassionately, doing nothing. I believe that would be the feeling of this country. There are times when one feels that if these circumstances actually did arise, it would be a feeling which would spread with irresistible force throughout the land.

But I also want to look at the matter without sentiment, and from the point of view of British interests, and it is on that that I am going to base and justify what I am presently going to say to the House. If we say nothing at this moment, what is France to do with her fleet in the Mediterranean? If she leaves it there, with no statement from us as to what we will do, she leaves her northern and western coasts absolutely undefended, at the mercy of a German fleet coming down the Channel to do as it pleases in a war which is a war of life and death between them. If we say nothing, it may be that the French fleet is withdrawn from the Mediterranean. We are in the presence of a European conflagration; can anybody set limits to the consequences that may arise out of it? Let us assume that today we stand aside in an attitude of neutrality, saying: "No, we cannot undertake and engage to help either party in this conflict." Let us suppose the French fleet is withdrawn from the Mediterranean; and let us assume that the consequences—which are already tremendous in what has happened in Europe even to countries which are at peace—in fact, equally whether countries are at peace or at war—let us assume that out of that come consequences unforeseen, which make it necessary at a sudden moment that, in defense of vital British interests, we shall go to war; and let us assume—which is quite possible—that Italy, who is now neutral—because, as I understand, she considers that this war is an aggressive war, and the Triple Alliance being a defensive alliance her obligation did not arise—let us assume that consequences which are not yet foreseen and which, perfectly legitimately consulting her own interests, make Italy depart from her attitude of neutrality at a time when we are forced in defense of vital British interests ourselves to fight—what then will be the position in the Mediterranean? It might be that at some critical moment those consequences would be forced upon us because our trade routes in the Mediterranean might be vital to this country.

He went on to speak of France's attitude toward Belgian neutrality and Germany's attitude in this matter. He read the telegram sent to King George of England by King Albert of Belgium, in which King Albert asked for the diplomatic intervention of the British Government to safeguard Belgium's integrity. Sir Edward said that diplomatic intervention had taken place during the previous week, and asked, "What can diplomatic intervention do now?"

He then dwelt at length on the importance of maintaining Belgian integrity and independence, showing that her downfall might be followed by that of Holland and Denmark. He stated that mobilization of the British Army was taking place, and that mobilization of the fleet had already taken place. He continued:

The one bright spot in the whole of this terrible situation is Ireland. The general feeling throughout Ireland—and I would like this to be clearly understood abroad—does not make the Irish question a consideration which we feel we have now to take into account. I have told the House how far we have at present gone in commitments and the conditions which influence our policy, and I have put to the House and dwelt at length upon how vital is the condition of the neutrality of Belgium.

What other policy is there before the House? There is but one way in which the Government could make certain at the present moment of keeping outside this war, and that would be that it should immediately issue a proclamation of unconditional neutrality. We cannot do that. We have made the commitment to France that I have read to the House which prevents us doing that. We have got the consideration of Belgium which prevents us also from any unconditional neutrality, and, without these conditions absolutely satisfied and satisfactory, we are bound not to shirk from proceeding to the use of all the forces in our power. If we did take that line by saying, "We will have nothing whatever to do with this matter," under no conditions—the Belgian treaty obligations, the possible position in the Mediterranean, with damage to British interests, and what may happen to France from our failure to support France—if we were to say that all those things mattered nothing, were as nothing, and to say we would stand aside, we should, I believe, sacrifice our respect and good name and reputation before the world, and should not escape the most serious and grave economic consequences.

The most awful responsibility is resting upon the Government in deciding what to advise the House of Commons to do. We have disclosed our minds to the House of Commons. We have disclosed the issue, the information which we have, and made clear to the House, I trust, that we are prepared to face that situation, and that should it develop, as probably it may develop, we will face it. We worked for peace up to the last movement, and beyond the last moment. How hard, how presistently, and how earnestly we strove for peace last week the House will see from the papers that will be before it.

But that is over, as far as the peace of Europe is concerned. We are now face to face with a situation and all the consequences which it may yet have to unfold. We believe we shall have the support of the House at large in proceeding to whatever the consequences may be and whatever measures may be forced upon us by the developments of facts or action taken by others.

On Aug. 1 President Poincaré issued to the people of France the following proclamation:

For some days the condition of Europe has become considerably more serious in spite of the efforts of diplomacy. The horizon has become darkened.

At this hour most of the nations have mobilized their forces.

Some countries, even though protected by neutrality, have thought it right to take this step as a precaution.

Some powers, whose constitutional and military laws do not resemble our own, have without issuing a decree of mobilization begun and continued preparations which are in reality equivalent to mobilization and which are nothing more or less than an anticipation of it (qui n'en sont que l'exécution anticipée).

France, who has always declared her pacific intentions, and who has at the darkest hours (dans des heures tragiques) given to Europe counsels of moderation and a living example of prudence (sagesse), who has multiplied her efforts for the maintenance of the world's peace, has herself prepared for all eventualities and has taken from this moment the first indispensable measure for the safety of her territory.

But our legislation does not allow us to complete these preparations without a decree of mobilization.

Careful of its responsibility and realizing that it would be failing in a sacred task to leave things as they were, the Government has issued the decree which the situation demands.

Mobilization is not war. In the present circumstances it appears, on the contrary, to be the best means of assuring peace with honor.

Strong in its ardent desire to arrive at a peaceful solution of the crisis, the Government, protected by such precautions as are necessary, will continue its diplomatic efforts, and it still hopes to succeed.

It relies upon the calm of this noble nation not to give rein to emotions which are not justified. It relies upon the patriotism of all Frenchmen, and it knows that there is not one who is not ready to do his duty.

At this moment parties no longer exist; there remains only France, the eternal, the pacific, the resolute. There remains only the fatherland of right and of justice, entirely united in calm vigilance and dignity.

On the fourth day of that fateful month President Poincaré thus addressed the French Parliament:

Our nation is in arms and trembling with eagerness to defend the land of our fathers.

France is faithfully supported by her ally, Russia. She is upheld by the loyal friendship of England, and, already, from all points of the civilized world, go out to her expressions of sympathy and good-will, for she represents today, once again before the universe, liberty, justice, and reason.

Lift up your hearts! Long live France!

M. Jusserand, French Ambassador to the United States, said on Nov. 1 that Premier Viviani's address to the French Senate and House of Deputies on Aug. 4 was "the chief document up to now in which the French situation with reference to the present war has been expounded." It began in this manner:

Gentlemen, the German Ambassador left Paris yesterday, after having notified us of the existence of a state of war.

The Government is in duty bound to give Parliament a truthful recital of the events which, within less than ten days, have brought about war in Europe and obliged France, peaceful and strong, to defend her frontier against an attack the premeditated suddenness of which emphasizes its odious injustice.

This attack, entirely inexcusable and begun before any declaration of war notified us of it, is the last act in a plan whose origin and aim I intend to lay bare before our republic and before civilized public opinion.

After a recital of the events following the assassination of the heir to the Austro-Hungarian throne, the Premier gave an account of the development of a situation compelling France to act, and concluded with these eloquent words:

What is being attacked, I repeat, gentlemen, is that independence, dignity, and security which the Triple Entente has restored to the balance of power in the service of peace.

What is being attacked are the liberties of Europe, whose defenders France, her allies, and her friends are proud to be.

We shall defend these liberties, for it is they which are in jeopardy; all else is merely a pretext.

France, unjustly provoked, did not desire war. She has done everything to prevent it. But since it is forced upon her, she will defend herself against Germany, and against every power which has not as yet announced its position but which should later on take sides with Germany in the war between the two.

A free and strong nation, strengthened by venerable ideals, firmly united in defense of its existence, a democracy which has known how to discipline its military acts, and which did not fear last year to impose upon itself additional military burdens to offset those of neighboring countries, an armed nation fighting for its own life and for the independence of Europe—that is the spectacle which we are proud to show the witnesses of this formidable struggle, which has been in preparation for some days amid methodical quiet.

We are without reproach. We shall be without fear.

France has often proved, under less favorable conditions, that she is the most formidable adversary when she fights, as she now does, for liberty and right.

In placing our acts before you, gentlemen, who are our judges, we have the comfort of a clear conscience and the certainty of having done our duty to help us bear the weight of our heavy responsibility.

Czar Nicholas II. made on Aug. 2 this pledge to Russia's statesmen and soldiers, in the Winter Palace at Petrograd:

War has been forced upon us. I hereby take a solemn pledge not to conclude peace so long as a single enemy remains on Russian soil.

I wish godspeed to my soldiers represented here by the St. Petersburg military district, and I am sure that they will fully justify my confidence in them.

The Czar followed this pledge on the following day with this manifesto:

By the grace of God, we, Nicholas II., Emperor and Autocrat of All the Russias, King of Poland, and Grand Duke of Finland, &c., to all our faithful subjects make known that Russia, related by faith and blood to the Slav peoples and faithful to her historical traditions, has never regarded their fates with indifference.

But the fraternal sentiments of the Russian people for the Slavs have been awakened with perfect unanimity and extraordinary force in these last few days, when Austria-Hungary knowingly addressed to Serbia claims inacceptable for an independent State.

Having paid no attention to the pacific and conciliatory reply of the Serbian Government and having rejected the benevolent intervention of Russia, Austria-Hungary made haste to proceed to an armed attack, and began to bombard Belgrade, an open place.

Forced by the situation thus created to take necessary measures of precaution, we ordered the army and the navy put on a war footing, at the same time using every endeavor to obtain a peaceful solution. Pourparlers were begun amid friendly relations with Germany and her ally, Austria, for the blood and the property of our subjects were dear to us.

Contrary to our hopes in our good neighborly relations of long date, and disregarding our assurances that the mobilization measures taken were in pursuance of no object hostile to her, Germany demanded their immediate cessation. Being rebuffed in this demand, Germany suddenly declared war on Russia.

Today it is not only the protection of a country related to us and unjustly attacked that must be accorded, but we must safeguard the honor, the dignity, and the integrity of Russia and her position among the great powers.

We believe unshakably that all our faithful subjects will rise with unanimity and devotion for the defense of Russian soil; that internal discord will be forgotten in this threatening hour; that the unity of the Emperor with his people will become still more close, and that Russia, rising like one man, will repulse the insolent attack of the enemy.

With a profound faith in the justice of our work, and with a humble hope in omnipotent Providence, in prayer we call God's blessing on holy Russia and her valiant troops.

NICHOLAS.

The next utterance of similar importance was the speech of Premier Salandra in the Italian Chamber of Deputies, on the 20th of May, when the Premier said: "Gentlemen, I have the honor to present to you a bill to meet the eventual expenditures of a national war." He was interrupted by applause.

When quiet was restored, the Premier recounted Italy's grievances against Austria-Hungary, and explained the causes which made the Italian Government present its denunciation of the Triple Alliance. He then said:

Italy must be united at this moment, when her destinies are being decided. We have confidence in our august chief, who is preparing to lead the army toward a glorious future. Let us gather around this well-beloved sovereign.

Since Italy's resurrection as a State she has asserted herself in the world of nations as a factor of moderation, concord, and peace, and she can proudly proclaim that she has accomplished this mission with a firmness which has not wavered before even the most painful sacrifices.

In the last period, extending over thirty years, she maintained her system of alliances and friendships chiefly with the object of thus assuring the European equilibrium, and, at the same time, peace. In view of the nobility of this aim Italy not only subordinated her most sacred aspiration, but has also been forced to look on, with sorrow, at the methodical attempts to suppress specifically the Italian characteristics which nature and history imprinted on those regions.

The ultimatum which the Austro-Hungarian Empire addressed last July to Serbia annulled at one blow the effects of a long-sustained effort by violating the pact which bound us to that State, violated the pact, in form, for it omitted to conclude a preliminary agreement with us or even give us notification, and violated it also in substance, for it sought to disturb, to our detriment, the delicate system of territorial possessions and spheres of influence which had been set up in the Balkan Peninsula.

But, more than any particular point, it was the whole spirit of the treaty which was wronged, and even suppressed, for by unloosing in the world a most terrible war, in direct contravention of our interests and sentiments, the balance which the Triple Alliance should have helped to assure was destroyed and the problem of Italy's national integrity was virtually and irresistibly revived.

Nevertheless, for long months, the Government has patiently striven to find a compromise, with the object of restoring to the agreement the reason for being which it had lost. These negotiations were, however, limited not only by time, but by our national dignity.

TESLA VISIONS WIRELESS WONDERS

Declares They May Simplify National Defense and Solve Some of World's Greatest Problems

By Edward Marshall.

THOMAS A. EDISON, in one of these interviews, made a suggestion which will revolutionize the naval history of the United States. Already it has resulted in the appointment of a wonderful civilian consulting board.

Now comes Nikola Tesla with another plan which may revolutionize the nation's system of communication.

I went to him, the world's greatest expert, to learn what wireless had accomplished in this war and what of peculiar benefit to this country it might accomplish in the future. I was astonished by the richness of the field of thought into which the queries led.

He believes that wireless transmission might be adapted, without great expense, so that it would decrease the outlay for our defense and, at the same time, immensely increase the efficiency of our means of protection against invasion.

He also holds that by the same network of Government-owned radio stations which would be required for this task we might so decrease the cost of the dissemination of useful information that every citizen of this country, resident no matter how remotely from the populated centres, could be kept continually in touch with the outer world occurrences, weather prospects, and all that helpful information which the Government already gathers, or might gather if it had at hand the means by which to make it public.

Indeed, he thinks that the impetus toward practical and rapid development which this war has given radio communication may result in the solution of some of the greatest problems confronting humanity, and announces as a fact that simple scientific application of the knowledge already at hand well may produce at slight cost electrical power wherever needed and for whatever purpose, from the electric operation of machines in factories to that of the farmers' plows.

"Is it not the fact that even in the present war the wireless telegraph has proved of immense value?" I asked the world-famous electrical inventor.

"This new and revolutionary method of flashing energy through space," he answered, "although, as yet, not much more than inaugurated, has profoundly modified methods of warfare, and, in both the constructive and destructive sense, has proved itself to be a factor of such potency that it must be reckoned with in all future naval and military operations.

"It has made surprises impossible, for instance, and that undoubtedly is one of the reasons why no decisive battle has been fought, so far, upon land or sea. To what degree this has been instrumental in saving human life, human effort and treasure, cannot be estimated."

"What are your ideas, in general, about government control of wireless?" I inquired.

"The mere fact that wonders can be achieved through the application of this subtle agent," Mr. Tesla answered, "makes some kind of governmental supervision of all wireless operations imperative, not only in this country, but throughout the world.

"In my opinion, however, governmental control should not be of a nature to hamper that legitimate commercial development which alone can lead to the ultimate perfection of the science.

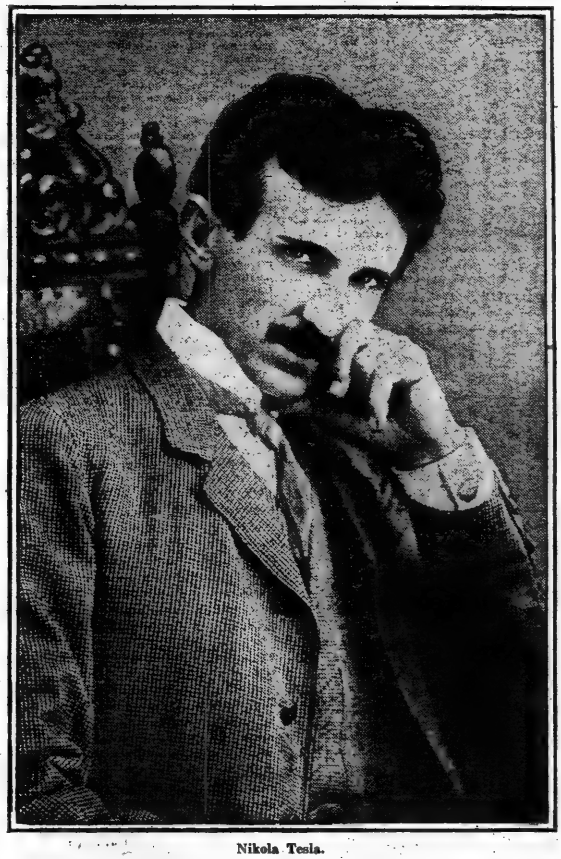
"Systematic improvement and application of this new means of communication is, without doubt, imperative to our welfare as a nation.

"I cannot think of any one influence which would do more to aid our progress than a network of wireless stations, checker-boarding, as it were, the entire country. The expense of such a system would be relatively small and inestimable benefits would be derived therefrom.

"A high-power plant would cost less than $250,000 and its range would cover all of the United States.

"I am convinced that one year's service of such an installation would more than pay its first cost and the expense involved in its operation. There is scarcely any interest in all the nation which would not feel the benefit of a rightly planned and managed wireless service.

"Every Winter storms interrupt both telephonic and telegraphic transmission in many sections of the country. The sum total of any one year's damage would more than equal the original cost of the entire network of wireless plants which I suggest, and they would be beyond the reach of such destruction if constructed with reasonable care.



Nikola Tesla.

"Every one appreciates the value of our weather report service, but it is not as generally available as it would be if such a wireless network, under Government control, existed.

"Every year forest fires destroy millions upon millions worth of valuable property, which is a permanent loss. The existence of such wireless stations as I contemplate, operating in spite of obstacles, unaffected by rain, snow, wind, flood or fire, would constitute an incalculable gain.

"In this connection one of the most important advantages of the system would be the fact that the receiving apparatus would be so small and inexpensive that it could be placed anywhere and would be within the means of almost every one.

"For if we are to get the full benefits of a system of the sort, wireless telephonic transmission must be practically achieved, and when this is an accomplished fact the only apparatus necessary for the reception of perfectly intelligible, spoken messages, would be very inexpensive telephonic receivers.

"Imagine not only the value, but the comfort, which would accrue to dwellers in the isolated spots of the United States if, at certain hours each day, they knew that they could listen through such instruments to weather reports, crop advice, important general news, and, at stated intervals and times, through the same means could find relaxation.

"Operas, speeches, sermons — anything which can be made perceptible through the ear and is desirable—could be conveyed to them from the most remote centres of civilization and culture at a trifling cost.

"The educational effect of such service, alone, could not fail to bring about within a few years what would amount to an educational and psychological revolution in the rural districts of this country. This takes no account whatever of the immense commercial value and domestic convenience which, as a matter of course, would result from the use of such a system.

"And if a plan of this kind would do much for safety upon land, imagine what it would accomplish toward safety upon the oceans and the great lakes.

"We are now in a position to erect a plant which, when required, would emit peculiar waves, by means of which any navigator, no matter where his ship might be, could determine accurately his distance from and position in relation to any given point.

"The general installation and use of such devices on shore and at sea would enable seamen to exactly steer their courses, without dependence upon compasses or observations of the sun and stars.

"Once such a system is in operation it will be possible by law to closely define such navigation routes as will be certain to reduce to a minimum the dangers of marine adventure.

"There is one momentous desideratum which must especially appeal to every thinking human being at this particular time and would be brought infinitely nearer to consummation by the perfection of such a system.

"All these forces and influences inevitably must make for peace because, by annihilating distance they will bring men into intimate contact one with another. This will mean acquaintance, acquaintance will mean friendship, friendship will preclude misunderstandings and wars.

"Now, when all the rest of the world seems to be thinking in terms of destruction we of this republic should think in terms of construction.

"The first requisite of this is the perfection of our means of national self-preservation. There, again, the wireless would be of immense value if used as it easily might be.

"I have been always opposed to the manufacture of expensive war engines and implements of destruction, but the study of the awful spectacle which unfolds in Europe has taught me much.

"It is my present belief that no effort or expense should be spared which could help toward putting this country in a position not only to resist attack, but to make all the world respect those broad humanitarian principles for which the American people ever have been willing to fight."

This statement from the famous electrician astonished me. "How could this be done without incurring the same danger which has existed in Europe during many years, and which at last has culminated in the present calamity?" I asked.

"We can maintain peace for ourselves and help to maintain it for the world only by adopting methods radically different from those which so signally have failed in Europe," he replied. "Hitherto it has been humanity's plan to preserve peace by creating forces for offense.

"But I am sure it is true that this country can do more toward promoting the world's progress and insuring its own tranquillity by making itself invulnerable than it could by making itself invintible.

"So, I believe that the United States, with every possible speed and energy, should attack the task of insuring its own safety by means more scientific and advanced than those which so lamentably have failed in Europe.

"This, I think, is rendered comparatively easy by our exceptionally favorable geographical position, and we already have means at hand, not merely theoretical but demonstrable and in a measure experimentally proved, which, if consequentially employed, would make it impossible for any hostile force to imperil our tranquillity.

"Even now, wireless control from the shore of crewless and therefore doubly offensive vessels is a possibility, though, with their automatic engines, automatic steering gear, and automatic weapons, they be well out at sea.

"It is my belief that we should install along both of our ocean coasts, upon proper strategic and elevated points, numerous wireless controlling plants under the command of competent officers, and that to each should be assigned a number of submarine, surface, and aerial craft.

"From the shore stations these vessels, of whatever character, could be perfectly controlled at any distance at which they remained visible through powerful telescopes.

"With proper refinements, all now well known to experts and fully developed, such operations could be put absolutely beyond the reach of interference, except such as might come through injury or destruction of the machinery.

"If we were properly equipped with such devices of defense, it is inconceivable that any battleship or other vessel of an enemy ever could get within the zone of action of these tel-automatic craft without incurring a risk of annihilation amounting almost to certainty.

"And such a danger never would be braved. In fact, the mere knowledge that such craft existed would determine all possible aggressors to give these peaceful shores of ours a wide berth."

HOW EASTLAND WAS INSPECTED

There Is a Division of Responsibility in Certifying the Fitness for Service of Vessels of Its Type

HOW are excursion boats inspected?

The eight investigations in action at Chicago will probably manage to discover how well they are inspected. But a somewhat bewildered public would be glad of information merely on the how of inspection. Who decides how many passengers a vessel may carry? Who determines whether or not she is stable? Who issues these "excursion permits" mentioned in the news of the Eastland disaster?

The thoughtful reader of the New York newspapers has probably noted with some puzzlement the fact that Surveyor of the Port Thomas Rush has urged his men to take extra precautions in restricting the excursion crowds here to the exact number prescribed. In the very next column, Captain Seeley, head of the Steamboat Inspection Service for this district, declares that his inspectors carefully follow all regulations, and that New Yorkers need have no fear of an Eastland disaster here. Surveyor Rush and Captain Seeley are in two different Federal departments, the one in the Department of the Treasury, the other in the Department of Commerce.

If the inquirer goes down to the Custom House to get the matter straightened out he is told by the Steamboat Inspection Service, (which is under the Department of Commerce,) that if a catastrophe like the Eastland is a matter of overcrowding then the concern is none of theirs. The trouble must be with the customs officials.

And downstairs in the Treasury Department offices the customs men will tell you that they are vested with no authority in such a case; that it is the Steamboat Inspection Service in the Department of Commerce upstairs which decides how many passengers a boat can safely carry.

As a matter of fact, this is the first thing that strikes the inquirer—the division of the duty of steamboat inspection between two Federal departments. And the division is a most curious one. The Steamboat Inspection Service decides how many passengers are to be allotted to a vessel, but the administration of that decision is left to the employes in the Treasury Department.

The checkers who stand, one on each side of the gangplank of every crowded excursion boat, and tick off the number of passengers, are responsible, not to the officials who determine the vessel's carrying capacity, but to heads who have nothing to do with the matter. The business of these checkers is not to understand excursion boats. They are not experts in that line. They are customs officials. An experienced eye running over a boatload of 2,000 or more might detect signs that 2,000 was a good deal too many. But the checker's task under present conditions is a purely mechanical one, and the department to which he reports assumes the responsibility only perfunctorily.

It is a case of a commission without any authority back of it. There has been a long-standing criticism of this division of the inspection work, both from within and from without the service, but no change has been made. It is argued that it would be impossible for the Steamboat Inspection Service to carry for the entire year a staff large enough to meet the demands of the heavy excursion season without incurring too heavy expense.

The further question of the number of passengers to be allotted to a vessel is a complicated and a none too definite one. The only answer to the query, How many passengers may a vessel carry, is, it all depends. It depends on construction on freight and ballast, on course, on weather, on distance from shore and so on.

It figures out, however, to about nine square feet of deck space per passenger for the excursion steamers. This surface measurement includes all the space that can be occupied by the passengers and a good deal more; not only deck space is reckoned, but that occupied by partitions, furniture, and all other equipment.

Regarding the decrease in the number of passengers allowed on excursion boats, General George Uhler, head of the Steamboat Inspection Service, writes in his report for the fiscal year ended June, 1914:

> The inspectors of this service are giving their attention to the passenger-carrying allotment of these passenger and excursion steamers, and the number of passengers permitted to be carried today is relatively smaller than that permitted to be carried a few years ago.

Too Late!

The number of passengers which the Eastland was allowed to carry on its regular certificate is given as 147. But in 1913 a special permit was given for the vessel to carry 2,000 passengers. On May 14 the Eastland was not allowed to carry more than 147, including crew; on May 15 her capacity was increased to 2,000.

The restrictions concerning the issuing of these excursion permits are not overexplicit. Rule VIII. of the General Rules and Regulations, (edition of July 22, 1914,) states the conditions under which such permits as those obtained by the owners of the Eastland are issued:

> If the master, agent, or owner of any passenger or ferry steamer desires a permit to engage in excursions, the inspectors, upon the written application of such master, agent, or owner, which application shall be accompanied by an affidavit that the proper equipment is on board, may issue the same, stating the number of extra passengers the boat may carry with safety, the route she may run, and the kind and extra number of life-saving appliances with which she is provided. The permit, when used, shall be framed under glass and exposed to the view of the passengers, in connection with the certificate of inspection. (Sec. 4466, R. S.)

Evidently the number of passengers to be allowed an excursion boat is left entirely to the discretion of the Inspector; the emphasis in the requirement is on the lifesaving equipment, as the next section of the rule shows:

> Passenger steamers making excursions on rivers, lakes, bays, or sounds shall have, in addition to their regular life-saving equipments a life preserver made in accordance with the rules of the board, or their equivalent in other approved lifesaving appliances, for each passenger allowed. (Sec. 4466, R. S.)

As far as rules and regulations go, any Inspector who wishes to take a chance may issue a permit for a boat which formerly was allowed a few hundred passengers, to carry a few thousand. He assumes the responsibility when he makes the guess as to her carrying capacity.

It is not strange that the inspection service should place the greatest emphasis on conditions other than overcrowding. The fact that too many people were on board has often complicated the matter of rescue, but never before has it come so near being a direct cause. The two chief causes for our long line of steamship accidents have been fire and boiler trouble.

Hence the development of the service has been in these directions. The inspection of hulls and boilers has reached a degree of great detail. Before any vessel is given a certificate to carry passengers, she is inspected by two experts. The hull Inspector is required to go over every part of the hull and examine the wood or metal of which the hull is constructed, drilling or boring wherever necessary.

The boiler Inspector tests in detail every part of the vessel's machinery; and there must in addition be inspection to see that the law is met in regard to fire hose, boats, pumps, life preservers, floats, anchors, cables, &c. Since the burning of the General Slocum, when the charge was made that fake life preservers were used, there has been a great deal of regulation of all the life-saving appliances.

It is only after the Inspectors are satisfied that the vessel meets all the requirements of the Government that a certificate is issued to its master or owner. The certificate is for a year only, and includes the number of passengers which the steamer may carry.

The only definite regulation made in respect to the number of passengers is as follows:

> The Inspectors shall state in every certificate of inspection granted to steamers carrying passengers other than ferryboats the number of passengers of each class that any such steamer has accommodations for and can carry with prudence and safety.
> It shall not be lawful to take on board of any steamer a greater number of passengers than is stated in the certificate of inspection; and for every violation of this provision the master or owner shall be liable to any person suing for the same, to forfeit the amount of passage money and $10 for each passenger beyond the number allowed.

Inspection does not stop here, however. General Uhler has instituted a series of reinspections for excursion steamers and ferryboats which brings them under the eye of the Government at least three times during the year. The Supervising Inspector for this district states that New York excursion boats are reinspected once a month. Mr. Uhler says in his 1914 report:

> This follow-up system is not perfunctory. So much in detail has this system been worked out that the central office is now in a position to know the exact lifeboats and their positions on the vessels and the particular boats that were swung out in the tests.
> It may have been true that at one time reinspections were made in a perfunctory manner, but this office is making extraordinary efforts to overcome any such disposition on the part of Inspectors in the field. * * *
> It is also believed that the reinspection of vessels is as important, if not more important, than the annual inspection, and the bureau will in no sense relax its discipline in the effort to maintain a high standard of inspection, to the end that the loss of life may be reduced to a minimum.

The Eastland catastrophe seems, however, to have raised an entirely unforeseen contingency. There was no opportunity to use the lifeboats and life preservers, concerning which Secretary Redfield and the Eastland owners were in discussion some time before the disaster. Apparently the question was one of stability, and from all that can be gathered the Government has nothing to say about this.

No provision, as far as we are able to discover, is made for the actual heeling of vessels in dry dock to determine their stability. The building of a "tender" or cranky boat is not interfered with in any way by the Government. The tendency to build boats as narrow as possible, (since this type takes less fuel to run,) is subject apparently to no restrictions.

It is here that expert opinion would seem to place the trouble in the Eastland case. Captain George Norton, a seaman of twenty years' experience, and editor of The Marine Journal for thirty years, says that the primary cause lies with the naval architect who designed the Eastland.

"No steam vessel owner would be impractical enough to contract for a steamer that would be lacking in stability, if she was an excursion boat, sufficient to warrant carrying as many as could comfortably be cared for on the upper deck with safety.

"The mistake, however, made in plans of this vessel was to a great degree overcome by supplying her with water ballast tanks, which were not filled on the fatal day, for the purpose of disposing weight, a lamentable error which could have been corrected with the simple or-

There is no regulation, as far as can be ascertained, which gives the Federal inspectors anything to say in the matter of ballast. It is generally admitted that it would be impossible to make hard and fast rules concerning the amount of ballast to be carried in each case, and that such a matter must be left to the good sense of the master of the vessel.

As to the claim that the Eastland might have been a revamped or altered vessel, the inspectors again have no further authority once they have ascertained that the vessel at the time of inspection is seaworthy. No repairs or alterations can be made on any steamboat without notifying the inspectors, who must approve the work before a new certificate is granted.

Obviously the hull which is thirty years old is nearer the breaking point than the absolutely new hull, but if the inspector can find nothing specifically wrong he is not authorized to condemn a vessel merely because its hull is old.

This point has stirred up a good deal of speculation concerning the many excursion steamers which ply the New York waters, for many of these are known to be rebuilt boats. For instance, one of the largest of the boats which touch at the Battery every day, up to date in every outward respect and hailed at the time of its launching as a brand new boat, is built on a hull which has seen almost thirty years of service.

This state of affairs has been agitated by Captain Norton himself for some time, and before the Eastland disaster occurred he wrote in The Marine Journal:

Each year of late unknown steamers have entered service at this port on some one of the established routes. Such are frequently advertised as new after receiving a new name, when the records of the Custom House will show that they are many years old and have frequently come from another port after having been rejoinered and newly decorated, thereby having the appearance to the public of a new vessel, while below the guards it is the same old boat that had run on this or that route, this or that ferry, for many years, practically worn out and condemned for use in her former occupation.

"After being purchased by an individual or a corporation who has had her slicked up, added some modern and popular features to catch the eye of the inexperienced, this revamped old craft is placed on routes with steamers whose owners at large expense in cost of up-to-date boats and terminals have built up a paying business, and in order to get a big share of it, these newcomers reduce the fare just enough to toll the uninformed patron away from the established line, who knows nothing of the difference in the degree of safety between the two boats, but is attracted by the cheaper rate in fare.

When a person can purchase a practically condemned ferryboat built nearly thirty years ago for a few thousand dollars, fit her up to carry ten or fifteen hundred excursionists in sounds, bays, and rivers and succeed in getting a full complement of human beings to take passage on the same, he is an expert in that line. Add to this feat the obtaining of a clean certificate of inspection, and the wonder grows on the imagination.

Usually on the same route that such craft navigate in competition are to be found steamers that cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, equipped with every up-to-date invention in hull and machinery that will add an iota to the safety of the patrons.

Isn't some official, either national, State, or municipal, neglecting an important duty by not acquainting the innocent but uninformed public, whose safety on steam vessels they claim to be sponsors for, of the character of such craft, even if they cannot prevent their performing public service?

George Uhler, the head of the Steamboat Inspection Service, has held his post since 1903. The Eastland is the second great catastrophe which has occurred during his administration, that of the General Slocum being the first.

Most of the improvements in the service date from the time of the Slocum affair, though there are Inspectors down at the Custom House, their feelings raw and sensitive just at present, who will tell you that the Slocum changed nothing, that the service was perfect both before and after the accident, and that it is perfect now, a concatenation of statements which is surely enough to chill the heart of any New Yorker contemplating a trip on one of New York's excursion boats.

Notwithstanding this discouraging statement, it is a fact that the service has developed enormously. The entrance of the motor boat has made the work of inspection heavier.

The accident rate has not been high. Over 318,000,000 passengers were carried during the fiscal year ending June, 1914, on steam vessels that are required to report the number of passengers carried. The total number of passengers lost was 105—one in about every 3,000,000 passengers. This, however, represents a considerable increase over the preceding year.

The service dates from 1838. Two big disasters in 1837 brought about its institution, one the burning of the Ben Sherrod in the Mississippi, with a loss of 200 lives, and the other the Lexington, sailing from Stonington to New York, on which 150 lives were lost, also from fire.

An act approved July 7, 1838, provided "for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam." Under this act the United States District Judges appointed inspectors of hulls and boilers in their respective districts, and the Treasury Department had charge of the service.

The whole service was reorganized in 1852, and the official report states that "since that date the work has been prosecuted with but few innovations on the plans then adopted."

The bureau was originally under the Treasury Department until the creation by President Roosevelt of the Department of Commerce and Labor.

MEXICO'S WEIRD MONETARY MUDDLE

Each "Government" Issues Paper Money Until Now the Land Is Swamped With Millions of It

REPUBLIC of Mexico, to fiat money act—debit, $1,822,000,000. That will be something the way in which one of Mexico's largest accounts, chargeable to years of revolution, will appear when peace comes and settling time is due. Just a few days ago General Carranza authorized the increase of the national debt by another 50,000,000 pesos to cover a new issue of banknotes.

There is probably no country on the face of the globe today that has such a hopelessly complicated and involved monetary muddle as Mexico. Without the slightest regard for the future, so-called Governments and factions and faction leaders have issued bills in a sufficient amount to bankrupt the country for a century, provided they were ever redeemed at their face value.

Even an estimate of the total is nothing better than a guess, so reckless has been the issuing of currency. The writer of this article has talked with leaders who had ordered the issuance of large sums of bills at various times, who never even kept a memorandum of the amounts, and were utterly incapable of even approximating the totals of the issues they had authorized.

Fiat money first made its appearance in Mexico at the outbreak of the "Constitutionalist" revolution against Huerta. The first issue, for 6,000,000 pesos, was authorized by Carranza, and was known as Monclova money, receiving its name from the town in the State of Coahuila where the decree was promulgated. The bills were poorly printed and, a week after they had been placed in circulation, the first of what later proved to be an endless chain of counterfeits appeared.

At the time of the first issue, however, the Constitutionalists seemed to be united; Huerta was rapidly losing ground, and the bills, which could be used for the payment of all taxes in Constitutionalist-controlled territory, soon had a ready sale.

Shortly after the issue appeared the one-peso notes were quoted as high as 35 cents gold along the border, despite the fact that they had no guarantee of any kind behind them, not even as vague a promise of redemption as that printed on the old Confederate notes, promising payment "six months after the ratification of a treaty between the Confederate States and the United States of America." This price was phenomenal, when it is borne in mind that the old Mexican

Federal currency was never quoted higher than 50 cents on the peso, at the old two-for-one rate established years ago by Diaz.

"Billembiques" was the name given the new bills by the peons, an interesting story being connected with the name.

Years ago, it appears, there was an American paymaster at the big Greene mines at Cananea, now known as the Cananea Consolidated Copper Company, named William Weeks. Weeks was in the habit of issuing a species of check to the improvident peon laborers to tide them over until payday. In order to keep the bookkeeping straight, these checks could not be cashed, but were accepted by all classes of merchants in the mining town the same as currency.

The Mexican has difficulty in pronouncing the letter "w," pronouncing it "b." The letter "k" is almost unknown in the Spanish language, "que" taking its place. The peons then fell into the habit of calling the checks "William Weeks," or, as they pronounced it, "billembiques."

This title came to be applied to any promise to pay and was, therefore, the name immediately applied to the new rebel currency. The title holds to this day, all issues other than the old Federal currency being designated by it.

The Monclova issue, though Carranza attempted to limit it, became the forerunner of the present flood of fiat money. General Francisco Villa, who about that time had a large force of men besieging Torreon, was short of money with which to pay the troops. He asked for and received permission from Carranza to issue 1,000,000 pesos of fiat money.

Villa had not the same facilities for having his money printed as those enjoyed by Carranza. Consequently a small hand press at Chihuahua was requisitioned and a printer's devil put in charge. Long before the million-peso issue had been completed the stock of paper gave out and the last quarter million of the issue was printed on any scraps of paper of any color that were handy.

The printer, however, did not stop at the million and neglected to lock up the crude die plate. Villa finally discovered that the money was more plentiful than the million issue would justify and promptly had the printer shot.

A bad precedent had been established, however, and issues that followed exceeded the specified amount in exact ratio as to the amount of courage and ingenuity possessed by the printer.

From the first the money rapidly dropped in price. To stop the decline the Constitutionalists resorted to fixing standard prices throughout the country. Merchants promptly closed their stores. Then the authorities, with a hazy idea that a metal currency would tend to standardize the paper issues, began minting coins.

Copper bullion was scarce, so Villa sent out a hundred troops to strip the huge Terrazas estates of all the copper wire that had been strung in an elaborate system of telegraphs and telephones. The coils of wire were taken to the Chihuahua smelter of the American Smelting and Refining Company and a crude die was made.

Some 10,000 five-centavo pieces were struck off. A few silver pesos were also minted, both in Chihuahua and at West Coast points. These coinages included the "Muera Huerta"—"Death to Huerta"—one-peso coins that resulted in Huerta's issuing an order that any one found with the coins in his possession should be shot. The coins are a great curiosity and now sell at far more than their face value.

The issue of coins, however, was small, and the fiat money continued to flood the market. As the smallest of the bills were of one-peso denomination a growing demand for small denomination bills arose. This was satisfied by the printing of little oblongs of cardboard of various colors, nicknamed "milk tickets," which were in denominations of 10, 20 and 50 centavos.

Prices for all fiat money continued to rapidly to decline. At the time of the landing of American troops at Vera Cruz the price was down to 22 cents.

Later came the break between Villa and Carranza, and since that time the price has depreciated rapidly, with hardly a rally. At first the Villa and Carranza issues sold at about the same price.

DREAMS INTERPRET CHARACTER

They Reveal Man's Inner Self, Show His Hidden Wishes, and Also Protect Sleep, Says Physician

DREAMS are interpreters of character; they reveal our true selves, our inner motives and desires, often hidden both from the world and ourselves; rightly interpreted, they are the real key to the riddle of life.

Every dream means something, no matter how absurd it may seem, for every dream is predetermined by our unconscious mental life. Again, when scientifically interpreted, every dream will be found to be the fulfillment of a wish, although the wish may have had its being far back in forgotten days of childhood, or be a repressed or unconscious wish.

In the field of abnormal psychology, dream analysis is as important as the theory of the origin of species in the field of biology. Dreams give physicians the most powerful of aids in treating certain nervous disorders.

Dreams are really protectors of sleep, and not, as is often thought, disturbers of it. Dreams may often give solutions to problems which perplex us when awake. Dreams are not prophetic of the future.

These are some of the conclusions reached by Dr. Isador H. Coriat, First Assistant Visiting Physician for diseases of the nervous system at the Boston City Hospital and Instructor in Neurology at the Tufts College Medical School, the author of many technical papers on nervous and mental disorders. Dr. Coriat has embodied his extensive study of dreams in "The Meaning of Dreams," ($1 net,) recently published by Little, Brown & Co. of Boston.

Dr. Coriat is a follower of Dr. Sigmund Freud of Vienna, famous as a neurologist, who in 1900 published his "Traumdeutung," ("Interpretation of Dreams,") representing years of study and observation. It is declared by Dr. Coriat that in this work the dream, for the first time, was shown to be of great importance psychologically, and that the book opened a new epoch in the interpretation of the unconscious mental life.

The value of dreams, on the Coriat and Freud theory, lies in the deciphering of them, and some of them require much skill and training to decipher, because many dreams use symbolisms to express themselves. The deciphering of a dream is one of the functions of psycho-analysis, which, says Coriat, "in its broadest sense may be defined as that method which, without the use of hypnosis, investigates human motives and the content of the unconscious." The unconscious mental life gives the key to the dream.

Just how experts decipher dreams is shown, Coriat giving numerous examples of dreams, with their explanations. He says that a dream may use popular phrases in its symbolism, and sometimes the dream may verge on punning and witticism. He goes on to cite this peculiar example of a dream in the punning or witticism classification:

A woman had the following dream. She seemed to see a fair-haired child, resembling the Cupid which appears on valentines and with a pink scarf about the body, sitting on an elephant and driving it.

The analysis of this apparently absurd dream was most interesting. Two types of instigators of the dream could be determined—a physical one, some pictures of recently acquired elephants at a zoological garden, and a mental one, a desire to buy valentines for some children.

In this woman there was a strong wish for motherhood, which for certain reasons was difficult of fulfillment. She felt that if she had a child at her period of life it might be a great burden to her. Therefore, the unconscious deliberately picked out the elephant as an instigator, because it served its purpose as a pun—namely, that a child might be "an elephant on her hands."

Dr. Coriat says that the "technique of dream interpretation is most difficult," and that a dream of an instant may require dozens of pages for its adequate interpretation, because a dream is such a condensed product of the unconscious mental life.

One of the most important phases of the theories held by Dr. Coriat, following Freud, is that dreams are the fulfillment of repressed wishes, whether the dreamer realizes that fact or not, or recognizes, in the odd, mixed-up conglomeration of visions of the night, the fulfillment of some wish—some wish which, perhaps, has been tucked away in a corner of the unconscious mind for thirty years, or which has never been admitted by the dreamer in waking hours to be a wish, but has been a thought repressed.

Coriat lays it down as axiomatic, in his chapter on "Dreams as the Fulfillment of Wishes," that "the motive power for every dream is furnished by the unconscious"; that "at the bottom of every dream there lies a repressed wish in the unconscious"; and that "the latent content of every dream is the imaginary fulfillment of an ungratified or repressed wish." This wish almost always appears disguised in the dream—"the wish in adult dreams is hidden within the dream thoughts"—and can only be interpreted by a dream analysis.

As an example of a concealed wish in a dream, Dr. Coriat cites the dream of a woman who dreamed that one of her brothers was about to be put to death by hanging, remarking that such a dream seems wholly to contradict the theory that dreams represent wish fulfillments. But, on analysis, the dream proves to be a wish fulfillment, Coriat writing:

The analysis fully disclosed the reason for such a dream. It developed that the brother who was seen in the dream was a fusion or composite picture of two of her brothers, one of whom had died eight years previously of tuberculosis and the other four years ago of cancer.

After the death of the first brother the dreamer had for some time been troubled with a cough, and, although assured that her difficulty was not tubercular, she had never been able to dispel fully the idea of tubercular infection, particularly since she possessed a certain fear that the disease was hereditary.

The dream itself occurred shortly after an operation for a small, nonmalignant tumor, which had been growing for a number of years, and which she had feared might be of a malignant character. This fear was also somewhat exaggerated and fortified owing to the fact that her other brother had died of cancer, and she had become more less obsessed by the idea that perhaps cancer, like tuberculosis, might be hereditary. In a way, this fear of a cancerous or tubercular heredity had worried her for a long period.

With these data in mind, the meaning of the dream becomes clear. Its wish as disclosed is not the desire to have her brothers hanged, but a longing that she be free from any physical disease with the slightest hereditary taint, for the purpose of calming her anxieties and her almost obsessive attitude toward heredity.

Therefore, the dream means that she wished her brothers had died of some disease other than cancer or tuberculosis (as these diseases might be hereditary, and she might also fall a victim to one of them;) in fact, even hanging would be preferable, so far as her peace of mind was concerned.

Other examples of the wish-fulfilling function in dreams are these:

DREAM.—A woman and her sister were seated in a restaurant, and at the table was also a man, not clearly recognized in the dream. The woman glanced at the clock and said: "I am glad Mr. X. is not here now; it will be ten minutes or more before he arrives."

ANALYSIS.—A few weeks previous to this Mr. X., who was a business acquaintance, had persuaded the dreamer to purchase some artistic objects which she did not care about, but bought merely for the purpose, she thinks, of pleasing him and the art dealer. She resented this action on his part, and although still pleasant to Mr. X. outwardly, yet she gets "square" with him in the dream by not having him at the dinner party. Thus in the dream the wished-for revenge is fulfilled.

DREAM.—A young woman who had started to study aesthetic dancing and had purchased a pair of new ballet slippers for that purpose had the following dream after having had one dancing lesson. She dreamed that she was walking in the street with her ballet slippers, and that these were worn almost threadbare.

ANALYSIS.—The analysis showed that she had compared her new slippers with those of the more advanced members of her class, who were making rapid progress, and who knew more than she did about aesthetic dancing. The instigator of the dream seemed to be a remark made by a woman in the class, who pointed to her worn-out slippers and said: "These are my second pair this season." Thus the dream fulfilled her wish that she might be further advanced in dancing, a wish symbolized by the threadbare slippers.

DREAM.—A young man on a short visit to a congenial household dreamed that the recently planted bulbs in this household had sprouted and bore flowers.

ANALYSIS.—The wish in this dream is perfectly clear; it expresses the desire to prolong the visit, and this is expressed by the length of time it takes bulbs to grow.

DREAM.—A young woman seemed to be walking in the street with her sister and was idly playing with a ring on her finger, moving it thoughtlessly back and forth, apparently "just to keep my hands busy." Finally she came to a pile of shavings, and the ring accidentally fell in this pile, so that she could not find it.

ANALYSIS.—This dream represented a wish of the subject. She actually possessed such a ring, which she had not really lost. This ring was a graduation gift, and engraved on the inside was the date of her graduation from college. She had often feared that if this date were known to others it would betray her age, which, for family reasons and because she contemplated marriage, she was anxious to conceal. She had often felt that she would like to lose the ring or "accidentally" misplace it, thus more effectively preventing an attempt to discover her age. For certain reasons she could neither afford to lose the ring nor carry out her wish of misplacing it. So in the dream the wish to lose the ring is actually fulfilled. Under such conditions the symptomatic action of misplacing or losing an object, which is partially beloved and partially hated, is completed, not in actuality, where for social reasons it was impossible but in a dream.

In dealing with the theory that dreams really act as protectors and not disturbers of sleep Dr. Coriat declares that "this guardianship of sleep by means of dreams is due to the persistent dynamic action of the censor." This censor, therefore, plays a highly important part in dreams, and the existence of this censor is due to psychical repression—"a defense of the mind to neutralize our unwelcome and unpleasant thoughts." Dr. Coriat continues the explantion thus:

In analyzing a dream, for instance, groups of thoughts will suddenly crop out which surprise us, thoughts which carry with themselves an unpleasant emotion and seem foreign to our personality. When we arrive at these thoughts, we attempt to push them back, because they are out of harmony with our conscious feelings, but once they have fully obtruded into consciousness they tend to remain there.

These are the repressed thoughts which in the past we have pushed into the unconscious, and are wishes and desires whose nature is such that they act as intruders to the normal course of thinking or are unacceptable to our moral or ethical standards; hence the constant attempt to conceal them and to push them out of the conscious into the unconscious.

This process of repression is not always voluntary, but may be an involuntary act as well, in order to protect the mind from ideas and feelings which are unpleasant and painful.

When thoughts have been made unconscious through repression, a certain force or resistance must be overcome before such unconscious thoughts can again become conscious. This resistance is a defensive action of the mind and the distortion, disguise, fusion, or symbolic expression which take place in a dream is due to the force exerted by this resistance, which is termed the censor.

The feeling that perhaps we have dreamed a great deal more than we remember is probably based upon a vague memory of the latent thoughts of the dream, which have been prevented from fully reaching consciousness through the force exerted by this censor.

Such being the nature of the censor, this censor acts as a guard when sleep comes. During sleep the censor, says Dr. Coriat, is exceedingly active, and "its function is to protect sleep from the mass of repressed emotions which threaten to overwhelm the sleeper in the shape of a dream." The author continues:

This is done by means of dream mechanisms, in which the dream thoughts are fused and displaced, thus undergoing such disguise and symbolization as to be unrecognizable to the sleeper and consequently not disturbing to him.

When the censor nods or is evaded, when the literal dream thoughts bombard and invade consciousness in an undisguised form, sleep is disturbed and insomnia results.

This is the origin of many types of so-called functional insomnia, sleep being troubled by a series of anxiety dreams. Only when the dreams are completely analyzed, and the unconscious mental processes thereby become stilled, when the censor is once more allowed to stand guard over the portal leading from the unconscious to the conscious, will refreshing sleep again result. Such a cure can be brought about only through psycho-analysis.

The disguised dream, declares Dr. Coriat, increases the ability to sleep peacefully, it quiets the energy which would tend to wakefulness, and "leads to those two great essentials for refreshing sleep, viz., relaxation and disinterest." He goes on:

When the unconscious thoughts continually escape the censor, either through their emotional strength or due to a weakness of the censor, insomnia results. The treatment of these types of functional insomnia, therefore, must be by psycho-analysis, whose purpose is to still or quiet the disturbing, unconscious thoughts. This is accomplished by the analysis of the dreams, since the dreams best reveal the unconscious and disturbing emotions. In fact, dream-analysis in these cases of insomnia acts like oil upon the troubled waters of the unconscious.

Sometimes the sleeplessness is due to fear or anxiety on account of the distressing dreams which disturb sleep or which awaken the subject with a start as soon as he falls asleep. In these cases the sleeplessness becomes an act of defense, the subject forces himself to remain awake to prevent the occurrence of the distressing dreams.

It is such types of sleeplessness, with the resulting emotional tension, which cause also severe states of fatigue. In one striking case of anxiety hysteria with insomnia, such a process as described above took place. As the dream-analysis proceeded the anxiety dreams gradually disappeared, the unconscious emotions were stilled, and sleep resulted.

This answers the question as to why we dream or what is the necessity of dreaming. Obviously to protect sleep, to make sleep undisturbed, and thus give us the needed rest for the repair of our broken-down physical and psychical energies.

This is contrary to the popular idea that dreams disturb sleep, for the dream is in reality the guardian of sleep. Thus a dream is not a trifle, neither does it deal with trifles. It fulfills a wish of great personal importance to the dreamer and acts as a kind of safety valve for the successful escape of our repressed emotions.

Dr. Coriat records a case of the cure of hysterical blindness through the analysis of dreams, a case which occurred in his own practice. The blind person was a girl of 11. By having the child's mother keep a record of the child's dreams and by analyzing these dreams in the light of the conditions of the child's life, Dr. Coriat was able to effect a cure.

The little girl lost her eyesight within a period of a few weeks, becoming almost completely blind. Examination of the eyes and nervous system showed no evidence of any organic disease. The condition was diagnosed as purely functional, a form of hysterical blindness, particularly since the child showed other evidences of hysteria.

Dr. Coriat decided to undertake a study of the child's dreams "as offering the readiest means of access to her unconscious mental conflicts and wishes." Eight dreams were recorded by the mother. Analysis showed that each represented the fulfilling of important repressed childish wishes, relating principally to family conflicts and jealousies, particularly toward her younger brothers and sisters.

By changing the habits of the child's life and holding out certain promises to her when she recovered her eyesight, the little girl gradually overcame the trouble, and finally her vision became normal. What was done was based on what the dreams showed.

BOONE'S TRAIL NOW WELL MARKED

THE name of Daniel Boone awakens a thrill in the heart of every American familiar with the early history of this country. Not only does the South honor his memory and glory in his achievements, but the entire country recognizes this backwoodsman as one of the most picturesque figures in early Colonial history.

So it is that the completion of the marking of the Boone Trail through North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia is a historic event of more than passing interest. The marking of this trail has been the patriotic work undertaken by the daughters of the American Revolution in the four States mentioned.

It was in 1911 that the work was undertaken at the suggestion of Mrs. Lindsay Patterson of North Carolina, who had heard at her Tennessee grandmother's knee stories of the old wilderness road and of the great-great-grandfather who was murdered while traveling over it with Boone. He lies buried at Cumberland Gap not far from the spot where the Boone monument has been erected, at the junction of the three States of Tennessee, Virginia, and Kentucky.

A few days ago at Cumberland Gap a monument was unveiled, which was erected by the Daughters of the American Revolution to commemorate the completion of the marking of the Boone Trail from Boone's home on the Yadkin River in North Carolina to Boonesboro, Ky. The monument has four faces, one for each state.

The Regents of the State D. A. R. had charge of the unveiling exercises, which were attended not only by prominent State officials and officers and members of the Daughters of the American Revolution but by the mountain people residing in the vicinity of Cumberland Gap. They came a thousand strong. They came in wagons, in hacks, in buggies, in automobiles, on horseback and on foot. They came singly, in pairs, and in whole families. They came bringing their luncheon in baskets, and after the thrilling and patriotic exercises attending the unveiling, mountain folk and townspeople sat down together for a basket-dinner.

They sat on historic ground with portions of three States stretched out before them. They lunched off fried chicken and deviled eggs and other good things too numerous to mention and the townsfolk were the guests of the people of Cumberland Gap and Middlesboro and the hospitality was truly Southern in flavor and in quantity.

Descendants of Boone, of Finley, and of other pioneers were present and their reminiscences would have thrilled a historian. The most interesting feature of the unveiling exercises was the history of the trail given by the Chairmen who had charge of the marking of the trail in the four States.

In North Carolina record of the trail had been lost for almost a century, and the task of finding it again was by no means easy. Finally a connection of the Boone family was discovered, W. L. Bryan of Boone, who came to the rescue with a mass of family tradition. Topographical maps were secured from the Government, and Dr. Archibald Henderson sent copies of his ancestor's papers, while John P. Arthur, historian of Western North Carolina, went over the legendary trail interviewing all the old people along the route and writing down their recollections. These sources were compared by the Chairman, Mrs. Lindsay Patterson. In this way the entire 150 miles through North Carolina was located, then marked by tablets placed on boulders.

There are ten markers in North Carolina, beginning at Boone's home on the Yadkin River, near Salisbury, N. C., and extending to Zionville on the Tennessee border. The markers read as follows:

Daniel Boone's Trail,
North Carolina to Kentucky.
1769.
Marked by North Carolina Daughters of American Revolution.

The date 1769 was a middle date chosen from among the many dates between the year 1760, when Boone went on his first hunting trip to Kentucky, and 1775, when, after a treaty with the Indians and the purchase of Kentucky land by Colonel Henderson, Boone led his band of settlers into that promised region, making five trips in all, besides many subsequent ones.

The markers in North Carolina are at the following places: The first at Boone's home on the Yadkin River, the second at Shallow Ford, made famous by the crossing of Cornwallis on his way to the battle of Guilford Court House and by Winston Churchill in his book "The Crossing." The third marker is at Huntsville, the fourth at Wilkesboro, the fifth at Holman's Ford, where once lived Rebecca Bryan, the wife of Boone. The sixth marker is at Elksville, the seventh at Boone, where his hunting cabin stood and where a monument now stands; the eighth is at Hodges Gap, the ninth at Graveyard Gap, and the tenth and last at Zionville, on the Tennessee border.

The Tennessee part of the trail traverses the four eastern counties of the State—Johnson, Carter, Washington, and Sullivan. Over the first part of this trail there rested much uncertainty, but through the efforts of the Tennessee State Chairman, Miss Mary Temple, the trail was established. From Sycamore Shoals, where the great treaty with the Indians was signed, to Cumberland Gap lies the historically best known portion of the trail.

The first marker on Tennessee soil is at Trade, one mile from Zionville. The second is at Shoun's, nine miles due north through a wild and picturesque gorge along Roan Creek. The third is at Butler, southwest fourteen miles from Shoun's and at the junction of Roan Creek and the Watauga River. At Butler there is now living a lineal descendant of Daniel Boone, one Finley Curtis, whose great-great-great-grandmother was Daniel Boone's daughter Anne.

The fourth marker is about nineteen miles due north, at Elizabethton; the fifth, at Watauga, Carter County, eleven miles northwest; the sixth is placed at Austin Springs, Washington County, six miles distant; the seventh marker is at Boone's Tree, Washington County, four miles away; the eighth is at Old Fort, south end of Long Island, Sullivan County. The ninth is eighteen miles away, at beautiful Kingsport, opposite the centre of Long Island, where Boone gathered his men to start for Kentucky while the treaty with the Indians was being consummated. From this point it is two miles distant to the Virginia line.

Boone entered Virginia through Moccasin Gap, so the first marker on Virginia soil was at Gate City, the county seat of Scott County, just a mile from the Gap. From there the trail leads across Moccasin Ridge to the waters of Copper Creek, and down this creek to Clinch River, where, at Clinchport, the second tablet is erected. From Clinchport the trail leads along the water course now known as Stock Creek, around the Natural Tunnel, where the third tablet is placed, and down Purchase Ridge to the little town of Duffield, where is placed the fourth tablet.

From Duffield the trail crosses a spur of Powel's Mountain, through Kane's Gap, and down into the Cove, where was nestled Fort Scott, an old fort of the earliest settlers and where Boone is known to have rested for a night, if not longer. Here at Fort Scott, on the boundary of Lee County, is the fifth tablet. The sixth is at Jonesville, the Lee County seat, and the seventh at Boone Path Post Office, above Rose Hill, at a point where the trail crosses the Bristol to Lexington Highway.

There was much discussion as to the spot where James Boone was killed, but local tradition and history pointed to a place between Ewing and Wheeler's Station in Lee County, and here were found two rudely marked graves, so here was erected a tablet to the memory of James, the eldest son of Daniel Boone. An eighth tablet was erected to mark the site of Fort Blackmore, an old Colonial fort in Scott County, where the Boone party rested from October, 1773, until March, 1775, while Boone himself was detailed to command a company to protect the border settlements while the border men were at Point Pleasant driving out the Mingoes. Mrs. Robert Gray was in charge of marking the trail in Virginia.

The first marker in Kentucky is on Indian Rock, a few miles from Cumberland Gap. This rock was used by the pioneers as a place of defense against the Indians and wild beasts, and also as a signal tower. Boone mentions it in some of his crude literature.

The second marker is on the ford of the Cumberland River at Pineville. The third is at Flat Lick, in Knox County; the fourth on the farm of C. V. Wilson, near Jarvis's store, where the old trail crosses the new road. The fifth is on the Knox and Laurel County line, on the farm of Arthur Hunfleet, near Tuttle. In Laurel County there is a marker at Fariston, near which there is an old pioneer burying ground called the "Place of Defeated Camps." About three and a half miles from East Bernstadt there are still some remains of an old fort, and here has been found a large boulder on which Boone had cut his name. This was placed in a churchyard, and the marker put on that.

In Rockcastle County the first marker is on the farm of Philip Allen, near Livingston, the next at Boone's Hollow, near Brush Creek, then Roundstone Station, and lastly Boone's Gap.

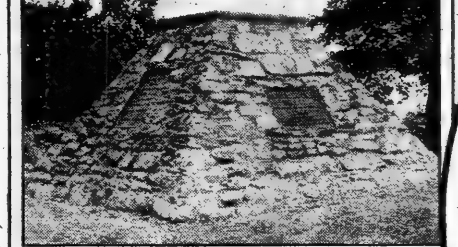
In Madison County, Berea is the first marker, then Estell Station, the site of Fort Estell, and the place where Boone's party was attacked by Indians and Captain Twelty killed.

The last marker is at Boonesboro, and is placed on the fence around the monument already erected by Boonesboro Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution to mark the site of the fort. In all there are fourteen markers in Kentucky, the work of marking the Kentucky trail being in charge of the State Chairman, Miss Erna Watson.

The trail covers a distance of several hundred miles. It lies through some of the most picturesque sections of North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and Kentucky. High mountains are traversed, beautiful streams forded until rich and fertile plains are reached. Along portions of the trail splendid highways have been built. The proposed Dixie highway will cover a portion of the trail, but the pioneer woodsman followed footpaths that the modern engineer finds impracticable for a national highway.

The American traveler in search of new adventure could hardly do better than to follow the Old Boone Trail to its source. At Cumberland Gap, where three States meet, he will find a modern university, the Lincoln Memorial University, where the descendants of Boone can receive the best education.

This university is to Tennessee what Berea is to Kentucky, and the Martha Berry School is to Georgia. It is a school for mountain girls and boys of the South, a school where those rich in ancestry yet poor in this world's goods can work their way through school.



The sketch to the left and that of the man in the boat, showing modes of travel in Daniel Boone's day, were made by Joshua Shaw, a contemporary of Boone. They are reproduced from "A History of Travel in America," by Seymour Dunbar, published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company. The other pictures show the Boone Monument just unveiled at Cumberland Gap, and (extreme right) Daniel Boone himself.

SERIAL SYSTEM HURTS OUR NOVELS

And Too Many American Writers Want to Own Automobiles, Says George Barr McCutcheon

By Joyce Kilmer.

WHY is the modern American novel inferior to the modern English novel? Of course, there are some patriotic critics who believe that it is not inferior. But most readers of fiction speak of H. G. Wells and Compton Mackenzie, for example, with a respect and admiration which they do not extend to living American novelists.

Why is this? Is it because of snobbishness or literary colonialism on the part of the American public? George Barr McCutcheon does not think so. The author of "Beverly of Graustark" and many another popular romance believes that there is in America a force definitely harmful to the novel. And that force is the magazine.

"The development of the magazine," he said to me the other day, "has affected fiction in two ways. It has made it cheap and yet expensive, if you know what I mean.

"Novels written solely with the view to sensationalism are more than likely to bring discredit, not upon the magazine, but upon the writer. He gets his price, however, and the public gets its fiction.

"In my humble opinion, a writer should develop and complete his novel without a thought of its value or suitability to serial purposes. He should complete it to his own satisfaction—if that is possible—before submitting it to either editor or publisher. They should not be permitted to see it until it is in its completed form."

"But you yourself write serial stories, do you not?" I asked.

"I have never written a serial," answered Mr. McCutcheon. "Some of my stories have been published serially, but they were not written as serials.

"I am quite convinced in my own mind that if we undertake to analyze the distinction between the first-class English writers of today and many of our Americans, we will find that their superiority resolves itself quite simply into the fact that they do not write their novels as serials. In other words, they write a novel and not a series of chapters, parts, and installments."

"Do you think that the American novel will always be inferior to the English novel?" I asked. "Is it not probable that the American novel will so develop as to escape the effects of serialization?"

"There is no reason," Mr. McCutcheon replied, "why Americans should not produce novels equal to those of the English, provided the same care is exercised in the handling of their material, and that they make haste as slowly as possible. Just so long, however, as we are menaced by the perils of the serial our general output will remain inferior to that of England.

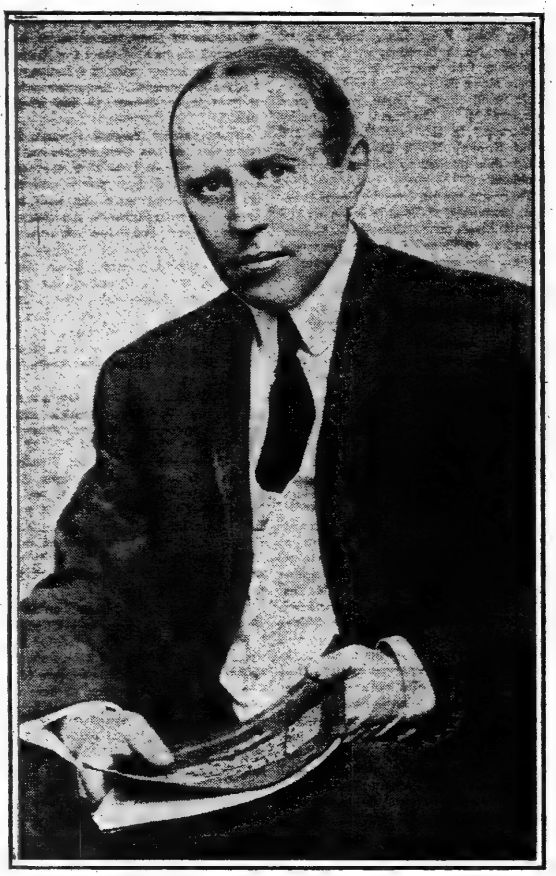
"I do not mean to say that we have no writers in this country who are the equals in every respect of the best of the English novelists. We have some great men and women here, sincere, earnest workers who will not be spoiled."

Mr. McCutcheon has no respect for the type of novel, increasingly popular of late, in which the author devotes page after page to glowing accounts of immorality with the avowed intention of teaching a high moral lesson. He has little faith in the honesty of purpose of the authors of works of this sort.

"The so-called sex novel," he said, "is one of our gravest fatalities. I may be wrong, but I am inclined to think that most novels of that character are written, not from an aesthetic point of view, but for the somewhat laudable purpose of keeping the wolf from the door, and at the same time allowing the head of the family to ride in an automobile of his own.

"The typical serial writer is animated by the desire, or perhaps it is an obligation, to make the 'suspended interest' paramount to all else. This interest must not be allowed to flag between installments.

"The keen desire for thrills must be gratified at all costs. It is commanded by the editor—and I do not say that the editor errs. His public expects it in a serial. It must not be disappointed."



George Barr McCutcheon.

I asked Mr. McCutcheon if he believed that a writer could produce sensational and poorly constructed fiction in order to make a living and yet keep his talent unimpaired; if a writer was justified in writing trash in order to gain leisure for serious work. He replied:

"There are writers today who persist in turning out what they vaingloriously describe as 'stuff to meet the popular demand.' They invariably or inevitably declare that some day they will 'be in a position to write the sort of stuff they want to write.'

"These writers say, in defense of their position, that they are not even trying to do their best work, that they are merely biding their time, and that—some day! I very much doubt their sincerity, or, at any rate, their capacity for self-analysis. I believe that when an author sets himself down to write a book, (I refer to any author of recognized ability,) he puts into that book the best that is in him at the time.

"It is impossible for a good, conscientious writer to work on a plane lower than his best. Only hack writers can do such things.

"There is not one of us who does not do his best when he undertakes to write his book. We only confess that we have not done our best when a critic accuses us of pot-boiling, and so forth. Then we rise in our pride and say: 'Oh, well, I can do better work than this, and they know it.'

"It is true that we may not be doing the thing that we really want to do, but I am convinced that we are unconsciously doing our best, just the same. It all resolves itself into this statement—a good workman cannot deliberately do a poor piece of work.

"I am free to confess that I have done my very best in everything I have undertaken. It may fall far short of excellence as viewed from even my own viewpoint, but it is the best I know how to do.

"So you may take it from me that the writer who declares that he is going to do something really worth while, just as soon as he gets through doing the thing that the public expects him to do, is deceiving himself and no one else. An author cannot stand still in his work. He either progresses or retrogrades, and no man progresses except by means of steady improvement. He cannot say: 'I will write a poor book this year and a great book next year.'"

Mr. McCutcheon is so unashamedly a romanticist that I expected to find him an enthusiastic partisan of the first and greatest master of the romantic novel in English. But, to my surprise, he said:

"I suppose the world has outgrown Sir Walter Scott's novels. It is quite natural that it should. The world is older and conditions have changed. The fairest simile I can offer in explanation is that as man himself grows older he loses, except in a too frequently elastic memory, his interest in the things that moved him when he was a boy."

But while Mr. McCutcheon believes (in defiance of the opinion of the publishers who continue to bring out, year by year, their countless new editions of the Waverley Novels in all the languages of the civilized world) that the spell of the Wizard of the North has waned, he nevertheless believes that the romantic novel has lost none of its ancient appeal.

"I do not believe," he said, "that the vogue of the romantic novel, or tale, (which is a better word for describing the sort of fiction covered by this generic term,) will ever die. The present war undoubtedly will alter the trend of the modern romantic fiction, but it will not in effect destroy it."

"How will it alter it?" I asked.

"Years most certainly will go by," he replied, "before the novelist may even hope to contend with the realities of this great and most unromantic conflict. Kings and courtiers are very ordinary, and, in some cases, ignoble creatures in these days, and none of them appears to be romantic.

"We find a good many villains among our erstwhile heroes, and a good many heroes among our principal villains. People will not care to read war novels for a good many years to come, but it is inevitable that future generations will read even the lightest kind of fiction dealing with this war, horrible though it is. Just so long as the world exists there will be people who read nothing else but the red-blood, stirring romantic stories.

"There exists, of course, a class of readers who will not be tempted by the romantic, who will not even tolerate it, because they cannot understand it. That class may increase, but so will its antithesis.

"I know a man who has read the Bible through five or six times, not because he is of a religious turn of mind or even mildly devout, but because there is a lot of good, sound, exciting romance in it! A man who is without romance in his soul has no right to beget children, for he cannot love them as they ought to be loved. They represent romance at its best. He is, therefore, purely selfish in his possession of them."

Mr. McCutcheon had spoken of the probable effect of the war on the popular taste for romantic fiction. I reminded him of William Dean Howells's much-quoted statement: "War stops literature."

"War stops everything else," said Mr. McCutcheon, "so why not literature? It stops everything, I amend, except bloodshed, horror, and heartache.

"And when the war itself is stopped, you will find that literature will be revived with farming and other innocent and productive industries. I venture to say that some of the greatest literature the world has ever known is being written today. Out of the history of this titanic struggle will come the most profound literary expressions of all time, and from men who today are unknown and unconsidered."

I asked Mr. McCutcheon if he did not believe that the youthful energy of the United States was likely to make its citizens impatient of romance, that quality being generally considered the exclusive property of nations ancient in civilization. He did not think so.

"America," he said, "is essentially a romantic country, our great and profound commercialism to the contrary notwithstanding. America was born of adventure; its infancy was cradled in romance; it has grown up in thrills. And while today it may not reflect romance as we are prone to consider it, there still rests in America a wonderful treasure in the shape of undeveloped possibilities.

"We are, first of all, an eager, zestful, imaginative people. We are creatures of romance. We do two things exceedingly well—we dream and we perform.

"Our dreams are of adventure, of risk, of chance, of impossibilities, and of deeds that only the bold may conceive. And we find on waking from these dreams that we have performed the deeds we dreamed of.

"The Old World looks upon us as braggarts. Perhaps we are, but we are kindly, genial, smiling braggarts—and the braggart is, after all, our truest romanticist.

"I like to hear a grown man admit that he still believes in fairies. That sort of man thinks of the things that are beautiful, even though they are invisible. And—if you stop to think about it—the most beautiful things in the world are invisible."

TWO DANGERS IN JAPANESE PROBLEM

They Are Anti-Japanese Hysteria and "Open Door" to Immigrants, Declares Investigator

FROM an investigation of conditions, both of immigration and residence, among the Japanese of the Western States, undertaken recently for the Commission of Relations with Japan, appointed by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Professor H. A. Millis, head of the Department of Economics of the University of Kansas and the author of the just-published "Japanese Problem in the United States," (Macmillan,) has brought suggestions for the solution of what is a problem less of alien residents than of international relations, and perhaps less of actual conditions than of their psychological effect.

Generally speaking, Professor Millis finds that the so-called "problem of Japanese immigration" is, except in a few minor details, not really an "immigration" problem at all, so long as present conditions obtain. It is far more a problem of what the American public, and especially the public in California, thinks of immigration—the people's conceptions, misconceptions, and opinions.

Immigration conditions at present force but the slightest of "problems" upon our consideration; action brought about by public prejudice or misinformation might give rise to a "problem" that could be very serious indeed. Our present agreement is not ideal. It cannot hold indefinitely. But an effort to substitute more drastic legislation would be, Professor Millis is convinced, a grave national error.

On the other hand, the investigator points out, the "Japanese problem" can be solved only by a careful holding to a sane middle ground. If domestic legislation against the Japanese would be unwise, the removal of present restrictions would prove an equal folly.

It is because Japanese immigration is restricted that our "immigration problem" is so largely psychological. It is because we have so few Japanese residents, after all, that the disadvantageous economic conditions of the early immigrating years have so largely disappeared. It is only in the presence here of but a few thousand Japanese that assimilation is in any degree possible. It is in denying admittance to the less promising Japanese subjects that the United States is able to avoid the disagreeable and dangerous problems that the first "anti-Jap movements" feared. If we must avoid hysteria in our attitude toward the Japanese and injustice in our treatment of them we must none the less steer clear of the wide-open door to Asiatic labor immigration—a danger which, Professor Millis adds, is not likely to come to pass.

Talking of the Japanese problem with a reporter for THE TIMES, Professor Millis was asked if he considered a break with Japan likely over the immigration and land questions.

"No," he replied, emphatically. "Certainly there is no such danger at present. The Chinese situation changes all that.

"There is no doubt," he added, "that the Japanese people were growing more dissatisfied with the present agreement by which the Japanese Government refuses to issue passports to Japanese laborers to emigrate to this country. That agreement, since it was made in 1907, has been faithfully kept by Japan. But there are some people in Japan who are strongly opposed to it, and who believe that it was forced from the nation and that its discrimination is unjust.

"On the other hand, there is undoubtedly in Japan a strong need for expansion. Japan is a country which is progressing, whose Government is growing more democratic, whose people must have room for expansion and the development of their national ideals. Joined with what feeling of dissatisfaction there is over the anti-immigration agreement and the California Alien Land bill, it is quite possible that this need for expansion might have worked out into some trouble between the United States and Japan.

"But now that Japan may expand in China the state of affairs is changed. I have no doubt that Japan will open up and develop China much as she has Korea. It is more than a Monroe Doctrine, you see. Progress in China will satisfy national aspirations and keep the nation busy, for some time at least. What will happen in two or three generations, of course no one can tell. Much depends on what her expansion in China does to Japan. With her intense patriotism and ambition, Japan may develop another German Empire—or more—in Asia. What that may mean, in fifty or a hundred years, there is no forecasting. But I think we are safe, in the normal order of things, from trouble with Japan or any danger of it for a good many years to come.

"I feel reasonably sure, however," Professor Millis went on, seriously, "that there would be trouble with Japan if the United States should pass an exclusion bill. But in spite of the feeling in favor of it—and my investigations show that the great majority in the West strongly favor the exclusion of Asiatic laborers—I do not think that there is any danger of such a law being passed. Unless some emergency should arise, or public opinion should be aroused to anti-Japanese enthusiasm by some definite 'educational movement,' I do not think we will pass such a bill. Such action would be illogical and impolitic.

"Our present agreement works better than any exclusion law could, unless the exclusion law had the co-operation of the Japanese Government—and no exclusion law would! It is on this subject that I have found such grave misconception.

"People think that the agreement is not working. They believe in all sincerity that great quantities of Japanese are coming to this country, many of them laborers and generally undesirable persons, and that the number of aliens from Japan is constantly increasing. This is not the case. The agreement is working extraordinarily well, and the Japanese Government is acting in entire good faith and with the greatest care and strictness. Not many Japanese immigrants are coming to America. The population is nearly stationary. In the last six years, from 1908 to 1914, the departures have exceeded the arrivals."

Professor Millis was the agent in charge of the investigations made in 1909 by the Immigration Commission in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast States, and at that time made a close survey of all conditions relating to Asiatic immigration. In his investigation of the Japanese situation during the past year he finds conditions among the Japanese generally improved. But at no time has he found failure in the working out of the present agreement, or any practical justification for the substitution of discriminatory legislation.

"Members of Congress, trade unionists, business and professional men, and others from all classes who believe in replacing the agreement with Japan by a discriminatory law like the Chinese Exclusion act, do not recognize the fact that there is no problem of Japanese immigration to be solved in this way," he said. "They should recognize this. The agreement has been more effective than the Chinese Exclusion act. Of course, every one must admit that prohibitive laws do not absolutely prohibit; there are isolated cases of disobedience of the law; some Chinese do get into this country in spite of the Exclusion act, just as some liquor is sold in Kansas in spite of the prohibition laws, and some Japanese laborers do get in. But the agreement is working better than anything else could. And it would be most illogical to enact an exclusion law so long as the agreement is effective. It is always illogical to enact any law unless there is an actual problem to be solved by doing so. In this case there isn't.

"And such a law would be too serious an affront to offer a people jealous of its honor and determined to command the treatment due to a first-class nation. So long as Japan is abiding by the agreement, it would be a national insult to pass an exclusion law.

"It would be an affront, too, for the State of California to pass a law, as there seemed at one time to be danger of its doing, depriving the Japanese of the right to lease land. I considered the alien land law unjust, unnecessary, and impolitic, but it is on the statute books and will probably remain there. At the time when I was making my investigations several months ago, however, there were strong movements on foot to pass a more drastic law still to prohibit agricultural leases. Governor Johnson has since put his foot down on any such legislation, and that danger has evidently passed."

The United States census of 1910 recorded the Japanese population of the continental United States as 72,157, which was probably incomplete, Professor Millis points out. The estimates of the Japanese American Year Book for the same year, which in spite of a fair amount of accuracy has been found to exaggerate such estimates, gave the figures as 91,958. Professor Millis believes, according to trustworthy estimates, that the Japanese population of the United States in 1913 was about 95,000, nearly 60,000 of whom were in California.

The Japanese population of California in December, 1913, was about 2.29 per cent. of the total population of the State, of Washington about 1.06 per cent., and of Wyoming about 1 per cent. These are the only States in which the Japanese number as much as 1 per cent. of the population.

Turning from the side of the "Japanese problem" that has to do with the admission of immigrants to the consideration of our attitude toward those who are here, Professor Millis makes a rather surprising statement.

"I think," he said, "that the evil of 'mixed marriages' is pretty much of a bogy."

"Do you mean," the questioner asked, "that they are not likely to take place, or that they are not undesirable?"

"Both," he replied "and neither. I think that under what I may call normal conditions such marriages would not prove an evil. Under other than normal conditions I do not think that they would be likely to take place in such numbers as to be really worth considering. I consider the question of little importance. There are now slightly upward of fifty instances in the West where Japanese men have married American women, and with few exceptions the couples have lived happily.

"The Japanese say that the children are 'perfect little Americans.' The Americans say that they 'look just like Japs.' Naturally each race notices what is different from its racial characteristics.

"But aside from their appearance these children are just like Americans; they are being brought up as Americans. Their mothers teach them American ways, American customs, American standards, sing them English songs, speak, of course, only English with them—as do their fathers. They do not even learn the Japanese language unless they mix with the Japanese when they are older. So few unmarried Japanese women come here that the mother is practically always American.

"If these children are given a normal place in the community, I see no reason why such marriages should be considered an evil. If the feeling is strong enough to react against the children it is strong enough to prevent all but a very few such marriages taking place.

"I believe that with restricted immigration, so that only a few Japanese are residents of this country, assimilation between the two races in ideals, customs, and interests is possible, but I believe also that even with limited numbers it is unlikely to take place in the desired degree. Certainly it would not take place with large numbers, and whether the Japanese could be completely assimilated under favorable conditions only time can tell. They are undeniably clannish, but they have, on the other hand, many personal qualities which make for rapid assimilation, and in their assimilation much progress has already been made. There is great dissimilarity to be overcome, but they are sensitive to their environment and have already taken much from other nations."

Professor Millis points out that the economic inequalities involved in Japanese "undercutting" in wages, in the case with which they could be employed through contractors, and in their willingness to accept a low standard of living, have almost disappeared with the lessening of immigration and the decrease in the supply of Japanese laborers.

"It is undeniable that in their ambition to lease and control farm lands they have been willing to pay exceedingly high wages, and that their agricultural activity has thus resulted in several places in an increase in the price of rent," he said. "But, on the other hand, no one can fail to see that in that same zest and desire for agricultural work and advancement they have reclaimed and improved many hitherto valueless lands.

"The Japanese are intelligent, studious, cleanly in their habits, temperate, industrious, law-abiding, generous, and ambitious. Their standard of housing, which was low, is improving. They are well educated. I believe in restriction in numbers and in keeping the laborers from immigrating to this country. But once here, the Japanese should not be discriminated against."

Theoretically, Professor Millis believes in the naturalization of the Japanese and the enactment of a general restrictive immigration law for all nations on the percentage basis advocated, although with some differences, by Dr. Sidney L. Gulick.

"This would offer only a fair and logical discrimination against Asiatics," he explained, "while keeping the numbers down. But this, like naturalization, (and the two should go hand in hand,) is an idealistic theory. It is a good ideal to keep in mind. But it is not at present practicable. An effort to pass such laws would do more harm than good. It would stir up disagreeable feeling, and might even turn the people of other nations against the Japanese.

"We should go very slowly and carefully in attempting any changes at all in present laws. And in a Government such as this, which is not highly centralized, too much care cannot be taken to avoid drifting into policies which create international problems."

A WOMAN EXILE IN AMERICA

IN an exchange of soldiers between James II. and Louis XIV. the regiment Dillon, an Irish regiment equipped in the Stuart cause by the Dillon family, passed into the service of the French. This was part of that battalion known as the Irish Brigade in the French Army. Arthur Dillon, who was its last Colonel, perished on the scaffold in 1794. This officer was the father of the Marquise de la Tour du Pin, whose memoirs have appeared in Paris, these memoirs being published in the United States by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

With her husband, attached to the Court of Versailles, they were pursued as suspects, and after months of hiding reached Bordeaux. Here, through the influence of Mme. de Fontenaye, who became Mme. Tallien, they secured from M. Tallien passports to the United States under the name of Latour. The party consisted of the husband and wife, two children, M. de Chambeau, (a friend,) and a negro servant, Zamore.

Mme. de la Tour du Pin states that the little party sailed on the Diane, a bark of fifty tons—Pease, Captain, and three sailors. They had got but a little way when the ship was brought to by a French man-of-war. A furious storm served as an excuse for not accepting a tow, and they were ordered to follow to Brest. This Captain Pease pretended to do, but, taking advantage of a fog that night, resumed his course. The Diane was sixty days in crossing. The journey was full of hardships, not the least being scarcity of food. With the cheerful acceptance of the situation that distinguished the French women of that period Mme. de la Tour de Pin took her place in the galley with Boyd, a Nantucket youth, and the cook. On the 12th of May, 1794, Boston was reached. She writes:

Dawn found me awake. I dressed the children and myself, and by that time the boat was nearly ready, and we took leave of our kind sailors with a shake hands and a full heart. They had left nothing undone for our comfort.

One must have come through all the privations we had suffered for two months, and all the anguish, insecurity, and fear of death we had before endured, to realize the joy with which we set foot on land. Our good Captain rejoiced with us and took us to one of the best inns, where we had an excellent breakfast, and many things of which we had been so long deprived. Although this may seem trivial to those who have never lacked for anything, I will admit that the sight of a table well set gave me a feeling of pleasure such as I have rarely enjoyed. We then went to the lodgings the Captain had secured for us.

The town had still the appearance of an English colony, even though to it was due the initial movement against the mother country. We were shown with pride the column raised on a hill where the first protest was made against the unjust taxes, that part of the port where the tea was thrown overboard, and the slope on which the first fight took place called Bunker's Hill.

Meanwhile the richest and most distinguished of the citizens, although they had submitted to the new Government, regretted without disapproving the separation from the old country. They hold still by ties of affection and relation to England. They preserve the customs, and many among them, after having been refugees, returned after the peace. These people are known as loyalists. Of this number are Mr. Jeffreys, brother of the celebrated editor of the Edinburgh Review, and a Russell family, who claim kinship with the Duke of Bedford. All these people received us with unequaled kindness, and showed the liveliest interest.

As M. de la Tour du Pin spoke no English, they had intended to go to Montreal and settle. At this moment, through Mrs. Church, the daughter of General Schuyler and then living in England, where she knew their emigré relatives, they received letters from General Schuyler urging them to come to Albany, where he offered to find them a home. They determined to accept this offer, and, turning into money the clothes, jewels, laces, piano, music, and books, for which as peasant farmers they would have no use, they reduced their baggage one-half and sent it by water to Albany. Their own journey they decided to make overland, not only in order to see the country but because they could do it at less cost.

We started with the children early in June, and fifteen days later we arrived in Albany. We crossed the State of Connecticut, whose fertility and aspect of prosperity we admired. But fatal news made me sorrowful. I could enjoy nothing. M. de la Tour du Pin had heard in Boston of the death of my father. He waited for our journey to tell me of it, in hopes that the distractions of travel would soften the blow. It was at Northampton, the capital of Connecticut, (sic) where we slept, that he determined to tell me, fearing I would read the sorrowful event in the newspapers. All the news from France was published in the American journals in every part of the Union as soon as it was received.

The death of my father affected me greatly. In spite of everything, as it always happens when one sees new scenes, I was distracted from my grief by the beauty of the forests through which we passed on our way to Lebanon, where we slept on our way to Albany. For fifty miles dense woods separated the State of Connecticut from New York. This doubtless exists no longer. This offered me a sight before unknown of a forest presenting every degree of vegetation, from the young shoot to the fallen giant.

The road through this fine wood was only wide enough for two carriages. It was simply a foot path which had been widened to allow free passage. God knows what jolts we endured when the trunks had not been cut close enough. The wonderful fertility of this virgin forest had brought forth numbers of parasitic plants, wild vines, and branches hanging from tree to tree. In the less shaded places were groves of rhododendron covered with flowers, nests of violets, again pale lilacs and roses of every kind forming masses of color in a turf enameled with moss and flowering herbs. The lower parts were traversed by little streams called creeks, where every sort of aquatic plants was seen in full bloom. This youth of nature enchanted me so that the journey passed in continual ecstasy.

Mme. de la Tour du Pin relates their hospitable reception at Albany by General Schuyler and his family. "Now I have a sixth daughter," was the General's greeting. Immediately he set about finding them a farm. Meanwhile they went to live with the Van Burens to learn the "customs American." Mme. de la Tour du Pin assisted Mrs. Van Buren in the household and saved that lady much by skillful dressmaking after French fashions, while M. Chambeau apprenticed himself to a cabinetmaker in Troy, returning to pass week-ends with the Van Burens. While waiting for money which was to come to them by way of Holland, M. de la Tour du Pin accompanied General Schuyler in the search for a suitable farm.

By the advice of General Schuyler and M. Renslaer we divided our funds into three parts—one for the purchase, one for stocking the farm, negroes, and for farm implements, and the third for emergencies, such as loss of slaves, cattle, and for our livelihood during the first year. This became our rule for the future.

Personally I resolved to know how to direct my share in the farm work. I began by never remaining in bed after sunrise. In the Summer at 3 o'clock in the morning I was up and dressed. My room opened on a little slope extending to the river, and when I say opened I mean the door, which was even with the grass. Also from my bed I could see the vessels passing.

The farmhouse of the Van Burens was an old Dutch house beautifully situated on the river. Entirely isolated on this side, there was easy communication on the other side of the river.

At the end of October came a blinding snow, accompanied by such cold that the Hudson was frozen over in twenty-four hours. A road along the bank was traced with branches of fir and beaten down. The family adopted moccasins bought from the Mohawks and invested in a great sledge for the farm and a red and yellow sleigh, which the writer calls a "pleasure sledge." But of their most important purchase she writes:

During this time we purchased a negro, and this acquisition, which appeared the simplest thing in the world, was to me so novel that I shall remember all my life the least thing relating to it. The Legislature had decided that the negroes born in 1794 should be free at the age of twenty. When a negro was discontented with his master he could go to a Judge of the Peace and ask to be sold. He was also permitted to seek a master who would give him something for his services. The owner could insist on a delay of from three to six months, but rarely did, not wishing to retain a slave who it was known wished to leave him.

On his part the negro could seek for some one to buy him. This he usually did before warning his master that he wished to leave him.

That is what happened to us. Betsey, who was to leave us, had given us a good character. Some old ribbons and gowns I presented her gave me a fine reputation for generosity, even among the farmers of the old Dutch colony. A young negro wanted to leave the master in whose house he was born because of the severity of his own father and mother. He came to us with the written authorization to seek another place. Having learned the truth of his story and that his own father wanted to buy him, we consented.

We got in our new red and yellow sleigh with two fine black horses and drove four miles to a tract of land where there were eight or ten farms, of which all the owners were named Lansing. This came about from the fact that the first colonist would buy land covered with forests for four or five cents an acre. The clearing begun by him would be continued by his children. Each built a house on the land cleared by him, and each house resembled the parent house. Thus it would happen that one might wander about all day to find the owner of a farm among men of the same name without discovering the man you were after.

But we knew the name of our negro, and arrived at the pretty house of Mr. Henry Lansing, a house built of bricks, a great honor we did not possess. We asked Mrs. Lansing for the negro Mink, the name he had given us. In very bad English she was anxious to know if we had brought the money. My husband counted on the table the thousand francs I had brought in my cloak, and Mr. Lansing appeared. He was a tall man, dressed in an excellent suit of gray homespun woven at home.

He called Mink, and, taking his hand, placed it in that of my husband, saying, "Here is your master." That done, we told Mink we were ready to leave. But Mrs. Lansing having prepared a glass of Madeira and a biscuit, it was necessary to eat and drink, lest we be considered ungracious.

In our conversation Mr. Lansing learned that my husband had represented France in Holland, his mother country, as he called it. That greatly increased his regard for us. We then took leave, and found Mink already in the sleigh. He had put on his best clothes. These belonged to him, for he could not take away anything of his master's, not even his moccasins.

All the rest of his effects, and you could have put them in a hat, he had placed in the sleigh; then, touching his hat, as would have an English coachman, he said to me, pointing to the horses, "Are these my horses?" On being told that they were, he took up the reins and he started gayly for his new home, much less concerned than I; for, never having before bought a man, I was greatly interested in the way in which it was done.

The family's relations with the Indians, who began to visit the farm after the snow had gone, were happy. For the squaws Mme. de la Tour du Pin saved artificial flowers, feathers, bits of ribbons, and glass beads, acquiring thereby a reputation for generosity. Nothing more astonished the French travelers who visited them from time to time than to see this friendship with the "savages."

Early in the year 1796 word came from France that the confiscated estates of suspects were to be restored, except where the proprietors were still absent, when they would be sold for the treasury of the nation. To save these it would then be necessary to return to France.

In April the family went back to France and recovered their estates, but not their peaceful lives. A second time they were obliged to flee, going to England, where they endured many privations. Returning to France under Napoleon, M. de la Tour du Pin became Préfet of Brussels.

RAILROADS AND BANKS HAMPERED

Government Regulation Has Failed in Practice, Says Student of Business Situation in U. S.

By J. Herbert Anderson.

THROUGHOUT the length and breadth of the United States there is just now one ruling, all-absorbing question in the minds of thinking business men. While this query may be asked with a thousand variations, it may also be briefly and understandingly summed up in "What is the matter with the country; why this apathy and depression in the face of such wonderful material prosperity?"

To all leaders of our great financial, industrial, and commercial organizations it is a well-recognized fact that there is something wrong, but all, if asked what is wrong, would probably voice answers dictated by the narrower troubles besetting the special interests with which they are identified. The general effect of these opinions, therefore, while they would undoubtedly give all the main contributory reasons leading up to the present unsatisfactory conditions, would be more or less enigmatic and confusing to the ordinary mind, which merely grasps the matter in its larger form.

If asked to define the broader opinion of the thinking masses, inexperienced in any one particular branch of industry, the writer would diagnose the case thus: "Two main arteries of this country's 'prosperity circulation' are seriously affected—the railroad artery and the banking artery. If the ills of these could be cured, it would naturally follow that the lesser circulatory branches would free themselves from obstruction, thus permitting a resumption of normal functions throughout the entire system."

The writer is neither a railroad man nor a banker, but he has had a more or less varied experience with both branches of industry, and it is with the purpose of presenting a layman's idea to the general public, as distinct from the theoretical ideas of the professional or scientist, that this article is written.

It is my belief that if the great general public could be educated to the point where it could grasp these vital issues with just an ordinary layman's understanding, it would take a quick and efficient hand in administering the necessary correctives. As matters stand today, however, the solution appears to have been left in the hands of the Government on one side and the railroad and banking interests on the other, with each doing the utmost to draw blood on his adversary, each made vindictive and unjust by suspicion, dread, and lack of confidence, and the Government spurred to special unfairness toward its own most successful citizens by the unreasoning demands of the public for victims among "malefactors of great wealth" and the "predatory interests."

The thumbs of the people are turned down as those whom their own laws have benefited in large financial ways are chivied and pricked by Government matadors in the bull ring of political expediences and legal incompetence. The great American public is not unfair; in fact, it is eminently fair where reasonably well informed, but in the present instance it has been misled, confused, and only half informed at the best.

Both parties to the controversy are at fault—the Government for too much publicity of the wrong kind, and the railroads and bankers for too little publicity of the right kind. Elementary education on these great, live, national subjects, education that can be grasped by the busy man, is the one great need in the present juncture. Without it the questions cannot be settled right; and no question is ever settled right until it is settled with justice to all concerned.

I think it will be generally conceded that when railroads are making money they spend it freely, and this creates, in the words of a layman, good times. It will also be conceded that when bankers have confidence in the stability of the country, loans on good security are easy and good times are created for the small merchant, the small manufacturer, and the agriculturist.

Again, it will also be conceded that conditions at the present time are not normal; the railroads are not making money, and they, therefore, are not spending it. While banks show large reserves, there is not that confidence which inspires free loaning, and, therefore, the small merchant, the small manufacturer, and the agriculturist find their credit impaired.

Today the railroads face serious problems. In order to keep up the pace set by themselves ten years ago, and thus march in unison with the growth and progress of the country, they require a very large amount of new money. They are also facing large maturing portions of their present loans. If their earnings are not satisfactory the investing public will not only refuse to purchase new securities for extensions, but will also insist on the payment of the present obligations. It will be realized, therefore, in what a precarious position the railroads find themselves.

It is held by many well-thinking and public-spirited men that the railroads themselves are to blame for their present condition because stocks are heavily "watered," and that they are endeavoring to earn and pay dividends on values far above fair worth. This cry was originally raised by the farmer when abuses were rampant and was vociferously taken up without being analyzed scientifically by the public.

In considering this question we should, if we wish to be fair, consider all relative questions, and if we do we may find, for instance, that the farmer who originally paid $5, or perhaps $10, per acre for his land before the railroad reached it, now values his holdings at from $75 to $100 per acre. This notwithstanding the fact that the land will produce no greater crops.

The real truth of the matter is that the land will pay a good return on the higher valuation, and once that higher valuation is placed it must not be attacked or depreciated by freight rates or any other extraneous influence. The difference between the original price of $5 or $10 an acre (plus a reasonable cost for improvement) and the later price of $75 or $100 per acre is water—nothing else—if we are ready to accept the general definition of railroad "water" as the difference between original cost and present earning value.

Prior to the financial disturbance of 1907 it was a common practice to organize corporations on their earning capacity. If a concern could show earnings of $100,000 per year, a corporation might be organized with a capital of $1,000,000, whether it had assets of $100,000 or $500,000, and yet this stock was considered a good investment, and generally brought a price over par; in other words, beginning with the farmer, following on into the smaller corporations, and then into the large corporations, there are few, if any, that consider their original investment the basis of present worth. The farmer and these corporations are dealers in water—every one.

Thus it may be seen that if the water is to be squeezed out of the railroad stocks in order to arrive at a proper valuation upon which freight rates may be based, then it naturally follows that water must be squeezed from the smaller corporation or business nurtured into prosperity by the railroad and from the land of the farmer who sends his products to more distant and better markets over its tracks instead of hauling them over almost impassable roads to limited and less profitable markets.

This will be recognized as a logical argument by every man who is not blinded by antipathy to all large corporations, and by all who wish to be fair to large and small alike.

But it goes without saying that this is so chimerical as to be an impossibility, and it is logical to protest that if it be an impossibility for all, large and small alike, then it certainly would be unjust and unfair to practice it upon one, even if that one be large and financially powerful.

A valuation of all interstate railroad systems is being made at the instance of the Government and at a cost of many million dollars. Just what this valuation is going to accomplish is hard to say. Where parallel lines exist and where one railroad has cost more than another it does not necessarily follow that the rates of one can be reduced as against the other, as in such event one might have to go out of business.

It is presumed that the prime purpose of a comprehensive valuation is to ascertain the amount of so-called water upon which railroads are endeavoring to pay dividends. It should be borne in mind, however, that all railroads were organized under then existing laws. It must therefore be presumed that they were organized legally, and if there is fault it lies in the laws which allowed such organization.

Further, it should be taken into consideration that the investing public, not only of this country but of Europe generally, is a very large holder of these so-called watered stocks, and it will be a dangerous procedure to attempt to readjust securities legally issued and in the hands of innocent purchasers. It seems to the writer that the past must be accepted and that the future should be protected by experience rather than by unjust experimental force.

It is a known fact that after the Standard Oil Company was attacked and dissolved, the subsidiary companies that sprang therefrom proceeded to do the same business, the price of all commodities was generally raised and the public suffered by the dissolution. It is also a fact that dissolution of the so-called meat packers' combine was followed by higher prices for meats and packing house products. The same might be said of tobacco, sugar, and probably will be said of farm implements.

From this it must not be inferred that the writer is in favor of illegal practices of these large corporations, but it is maintained that these curative measures should not be forced, as to the past, without upbuilding plans for the future clearly in mind. It will be a mistake for those in authority to endeavor to change the financial basis of the railroads or to effect their organization without knowing for a certainty that such changes will be for the best interests of the country and the people.

It is a violation of ordinary common sense to permit the Interstate Commerce Commission to suggest remedies for the amelioration of present unsatisfactory conditions and then allow State commissions to overrule these suggestions, thus leaving the railroads absolutely without legal recourse in their efforts to better their own condition.

To sum the whole situation up, regulation of the railroads, while excellent in theory, has failed in practice. There is too much governing and an altogether unnecessary amount of restriction in the proper working out of great railroad problems. The Interstate Commerce Commission controls the possible income, while the State commissions dictate the outlay.

The 5 per cent. increase in rates, just allowed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, is closely balanced by the "full crew" laws passed in different States. The Interstate Commerce Commission has ruled that within a certain period all railroads must equip passenger trains with steel coaches; but it is "up to" the railroads to provide ways and means. No suggestion was made by the commission along those lines.

Solution of the problems will only come when the railroads receive more latitude; when they are allowed a greater earning capacity, and when restrictions are removed, short of unfairness and illegality. If the railroads could borrow $500,000,000 today for improvements and maintenance, the whole sum would be expended in this country, and the people would reap the benefit of it. If railroad rates from coast to coast were advanced another 10 per cent. the increased earnings would circulate to the furthest corners of the country and the people would profit as a whole. The thrifty would increase their savings and the extravagant would be no worse off than they usually are.

Turning to the banking situation, one or two points must be conceded. In the first place, the national banks of the United States in the aggregate have a greater capital, greater surplus, and larger deposits than any other national aggregation in the world. In the second place, these banks have heretofore handled the majority of the loaning business and a large proportion of the issuing of currency. In the third place, it is not the fault of these bankers or the banks generally that a stringency of money occurs, but the fault of the system under which they have been obliged to work.

The fact that these banks have been unable to expand, increase their credits along with the increase of the wealth of the country, and the fact that, as a result, money panics, undue tightening of credit, forced liquidation, and costly retrenchment have resulted, has worked a great hardship on the people as well as upon the industrial and commercial systems of the country.

It was to cure this evil and to rectify this system under which these banks have been working that the present Administration brought in and enacted the Federal Reserve act. As evidenced by present conditions, this act will fail in its intended mission unless it be amended in such a way that the bankers will not merely tolerate it but will give it their most hearty support.

The preceding Administration spent a large sum in investigating the banking systems and methods of foreign countries, principally England, France, and Germany, and the report of this investigation was very thorough and complete. The original bill, when submitted by the present Administration to the bankers, met with their instant disapproval. The amended bill as passed is superior in every way to the original draft, but even it does not meet the necessities of the situation.

It is conceded by every student of finance, by every intelligent banker and financial man, that our banking system up to now has been faulty, insecure for the people, and as insecure for the bankers. In spite of this the bankers have been able to handle business through a time when the country has made its greatest strides, when our greatest constructive enterprises have been carried out, and when we have carried through our greatest financial operations.

It must be conceded, therefore, that the bankers, hampered as they were by a poor system, have been the friends of legitimate industry, and that they have interests and affiliations which should not be overridden or interfered with, and that their knowledge, their influence, and their worth must continue to be used to the fullest advantage.

The writer maintains that real currency reform has not been effected by the Federal Reserve act, and that, without the hearty support and co-operation of the bankers, the needed relief will not be experieneed. He maintains also that, as our bankers have been forced to become the owners of the capital stock of the Federal Reserve Bank, they should be allowed a voice in its management, they should be allowed to assist in deciding its policy, and they should be considered part and parcel of its executive organization.

Under the present system this is denied them, although it might be argued that, through their representatives in the different regional banks, they have some voice. It is true that member banks of regional districts are allowed to appoint Directors, but it is also true that these Directors are obliged to carry out the orders and comply with the rules and regulations, not of their electors, but of the head office, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Bank.

On account of the very large territory covered it is necessary that the country be divided into districts, as it is, and it is necessary that each district have a special banking organization to deal with the district banks and in turn with a main, or central, bank. The writer maintains, however, that these district banks should not be branches or offshoots of a main bank, but should be individual organizations owned and operated absolutely by the member banks of that district.

There is a great objection, especially from the Democratic Party, against a central bank, and such an institution along the lines of the so-called Aldrich plan might not be a good solution, but if the Government would organize a bank the stock of which would be underwritten by the Government, to be ultimately secured by the people as an investment, the governors of which would be appointed by the President of the United States, and if this bank, whether called a central bank, a reserve bank, or a people's bank, would have for its customers the different district regional banks and the Government of the United States, all the past objections to a central bank would be met, and we would find the following result—national banks would be able to do business as they have been doing it in the past, with the disadvantages removed.

When they need further accommodation they would turn to their central organization, which would be made up of all the banks of their district. This organization would be able to discount the paper of member banks. The member banks would know just what they could do, as the district bank would be owned and operated by them, and they would be in close touch with its affairs. Again, each district bank, when necessary, would be able to take this paper and rediscount it with the greater bank controlled by the Government.

The people's bank, for it would be such, would be the sole bank of issue and the final bank of rediscount. It would charge a fair rate of interest to all the district banks on rediscount, and it would remain then with the district banks to settle their discount rates commensurately with the district and its requirements.

In a district like New York, where the volume of business is very large and where the turnover is frequent, the discount rate is naturally less than in a sparsely settled district where the volume is not large; but adjustment of discount rates would be, as it should be, in the hands of the bankers, while the rediscount rates would be, as they should be, in the hands of the Government institution. The latter would be able to use the district banks as its agents for the different districts, and could carry deposits with such agents, so that the desired relief would be within reach of all at any time.

In a word, if this plan were carried out it would mean that the banks of this country would continue to do the banking business, the new reserve institution would attend to the issuing of new money, arrange for increase or decrease of currency, and thereby secure harmony. This would not be difficult to effect, as the present organization of regional banks could be very easily taken over by the member banks, and it would only require the organization of a Government institution.

In conclusion, I suggest that the railroads be given the right to operate along business lines, without annoying restrictions, without petty interference, but under laws clearly defined, properly understood, equitable to the people, to the country, and to the railroads alike.

Let our national banks have necessary increased facilities so that the banking business of the country can be adequately handled by them. Allow them to strengthen their position by the acquisition of the present regional banks, and support these regional banks by the organization of a real reserve bank under control of the Government and owned by the people.

CHANCES DENIED WOMEN DOCTORS

Noted Suffragist Says That Men Thwart Their Efforts

By Rose Young.

THE prime reason for the limitation of women's achievements in the science of medicine is a reason so arbitrarily imposed that the lay public always shrinks from the evidence of it with a sense of profound shock at the injustice involved in it. That reason is the systematic denial of post-graduate opportunity to medical women. It is the rigid exclusion of women from the rich possibilities of clinical experience and reputation afforded by positions on hospital staffs and medical college Faculties.

Ask the average man surgeon or physician who has attained fame to name the professional and educational experience from which his career really dates, and he names his early interneship at some great metropolitan hospital, his later experience as clinical professor at some medical and surgical college, or as consulting surgeon or physician at some great hospital again. What you learn about medicine and surgery in the lecture room must be applied, tested, modified, amplified at the bedside and the operating table.

Facilities for this application through student and post-graduate experience are quite the best luck that can come to the aspirant for the opportunities for service and honor that go with the medical profession. In the hospital the medical man finds not only a supply of clinical material, but an amphitheatre for the development and display of professional skill under the most promising conditions in regard to trained help and equipment. In both hospital and college he makes associations with student-doctors, who form a valued contingent to his reputation through sending their special cases to him.

Until very recently all such experience was wholly denied even to the woman student of medicine and surgery. To this day they are almost wholly denied, so far as post-graduate opportunity on hospital staffs and college Faculties are concerned. Doors that stand wide open to men are still shut in woman's face. The medical woman's post-graduate opportunity is suggested by the fact that when, just one year ago, Bellevue Hospital decided to admit women as internes the good word rang all the way around the world for its thrilling "news value."

If the reader would like to put this matter to the test for himself, let him call up the Roosevelt, the Presbyterian, the Woman's Hospital, the Metropolitan, Mount Sinai—any of the big New York hospitals except the two or three run by women for women—and ask if he can have a woman staff surgeon or doctor for his case should he come to the hospital.

"No, oh, no!" comes the stereotyped reply. "Our staff people are all men."

"Yes, but I prefer a woman," the reader may insist.

"You can't have a woman here"—just the same.

I challenge any male critic of women physicians to point to a medical college of the first rank in the country today where women have recognition in the superior Faculty places; where, in effect, they are not arbitrarily excluded from all such places, not because they are less able than men; because they are women. The matter, that is to say, is prejudged. The question of relative ability is never allowed to come to issue in the concrete instance. The policy is formulated in advance. The custom is iron-bound. Any man may hope to reach such a position. No woman may.

I challenge such critic to name one of the leading hospitals of New York City where women are given recognition in the superior staff work. I challenge him to name one where the very mention of such a contingency is not fought tooth and nail by men physicians who lose no opportunity to point out "how little headway women have made in medicine."

I challenge such critic, in particular, to find some adequate explanation for the régime of exclusion of women physicians and surgeons from the Woman's Hospital of this city—that great monument to woman's initiative, the story of which cuts to the quick in woman's sense of injustice in this whole scheme of her fixed and arbitrary exclusion from professional opportunity, just because she happens to be a woman, and before individual capacity can be put to the test. I challenge any one with any sense of justice to read that story and not have that sense of justice cut to the quick. Here it is, briefly summarized:

When Dr. Marion Sims came to New York from Alabama sixty-odd years ago he could make no headway at all against professional jealousy until certain large-minded women of the city took up his cause and established him in a hospital where he could demonstrate his great surgical abilities. One of the provisions the women founders of that hospital made before they turned the hospital over to Dr. Sims was that his assistant surgeon should be a woman. Let Dr. Sims himself tell how he fulfilled the women's trust in him:

> One clause of the by-laws provided that the assistant surgeon should be a woman. I appointed Mrs. Browne, the widowed sister of Henri L. Stuart, who had been so efficient in organizing the hospital. She was Matron and General Superintendent.
> Six months later he named a man as his assistant.

Meantime, shall men doctors make hospital and college regulations that favor men to the exclusion of women, and then shift the responsibility for women's lack of achievements in medicine to their "biological limitations"? Shall they put fetters on women's feet and then cavil because they run no faster? Shall they bar doors in women's faces and jeer because women go no further?

Shall they even say that men-run institutions cannot afford to be cluttered up by woman's inefficiency through an experimental period while the matter of woman's medical qualifications is being put to full test? Shall they say it when to say it is to prejudge the case again and deny anew the truism that every step of progress is an experiment with the new? Shall they say it in view of England's unabashed reliance today on the women war doctors and army surgeons who yesterday were refused so much as an interneship in any of England's great medical institutions?

Women won medical educational facilities at the sharpest cost ever demanded of women for any educational facilities. They were hissed from operating rooms, where the patient was a woman demanding that physicians of her own sex be present. They starved, they froze, they ate of the crumbs that fell from the tables of the men's medical colleges.

For forty years the American Medical Association wrangled to keep the woman physician and surgeon out of the advantages of the organized medical group. Many eminent men of many minds and varying degrees of courage and fairness have ornamented the American Medical Association during the last half century. The point is that the way has been made hard for the medical woman during that whole period. In every conceivable way she has been opposed and held back.

Women everywhere are coming to realize that their prime demand of civilization is to be allowed to bring their woman as well as their human contribution into any sphere, no matter what, into which they may elect to bring it. They will not, I think, be found in the mass ashamed of or afraid of or disinclined to abide by their so-called biological limitations in medicine or elsewhere.

NEW LIGHT ON MUSEUM BRONZES

Art at Home and Abroad

Collection in Metropolitan, Among the Best in the World, Described in Scholarly Style by Miss Richter

THE collection of Greek, Etruscan, and Roman bronzes in the Metropolitan Museum now ranks among the best of its kind in the world and merits the scholarly and systematic catalogue dedicated to it by Gisela M. A. Richter, which appears this month among the already imposing array of Museum literature. So much study and constructive work has gone into this book that one properly may hope for an edition not only less expensive, the present price quite prohibiting its use by the majority of visitors and students, but lighter in weight and smaller in size, so that it might be freely consulted in a tour of the collection. The highly calendered paper gives opportunity, to be sure, for clear illustrations, but these would not be so important in a handbook intended for reference in the actual presence of the objects described, and the ripe, intelligent comment and description are of inestimable importance to the rapidly increasing public eager for a more than superficial impression of the museum's departments. For this public the best is appropriate, and they will thrive on a scholarship so enticing as that of Miss Richter, whose view seldom is limited by her archaeological precision.

Nothing is much less interesting to the wholly uninitiated observer than such a department as her catalogue covers. The great antiquity of the objects, the impossibility of fitting them in to any familiar scheme of civilized existence, the extent of the knowledge necessary to imagine a scheme similar to that in which they formerly played their part, militate against easy recognition of their character and quality.

With Miss Richter's aid, however, this distant lethargic past shakes off its slumber and shows something of the spirit animating it at the moment of its greatest glory. Things that lie meaningless, bits of corroded metal in their cases, become real things formed beautifully by human hands for intensely human uses. The ideal of the artist, the labor of the craftsman, the joy of the people, become definitely realized, and the horizons that close in compactly about too many of us expands and lures the mind to the home of that inheritance of art which we flagrantly have wasted, have wantoned with, denied and cheapened, and just now are striving to recover and reinvest with a foresight more astute and a sounder judgment.

The chronology of acquisitions in the new catalogue indicates, however, the fact not always sufficiently dwelt upon that in our dark ages of American expertise we did some astonishingly clever things. We find on the list not only the fifth century bronzes of the Cesnola collection, now fully emerged from the cloud of debate so long surrounding it, but also the splendid bronzes of the gift of Henry G. Marquand in 1897, still holding their own among the most important pieces of the collection. One of the most agreeable duties of the modern expert is to acknowledge the valuable finds and true judgment of its forerunners.

The material in the catalogue is divided into two principal classes, one comprising statues, statuettes, and reliefs, the other implements and utensils. The collection thus affords opportunity for the study of what is called "fine art," in the bronze medium, and also of that decorative art which covered so wide a field in Greek and Roman life.

In her introduction Miss Richter rehearses the rôle played by bronze in antiquity. Its history is peculiar, its use characterizing a period of nearly two thousand years (the Bronze Age), during which tools no longer were made of stone and men had not yet become familiar with iron, but surrounded themselves with all kinds of household and votive objects and with implements made wholly or chiefly of bronze, or else of its principal ingredient, copper. In the earliest bronzes the proportion of copper is larger than in the later. For many centuries after the termination of the Bronze Age that metal was used wherever its special qualities served; and the multitude of objects made from it give a vivid impression of Greek and Roman life. The great importance of Greek influence in design throughout the Renaissance period and in modern art as well has caused much copying, forgery and adaptation of Greek originals, giving rise to many difficulties in distinguishing among the works of different periods and classes. Miss Richter defines the principal difference between the Greek work and that of the Renaissance and of modern times as one of conception and style. The variety developed in Greek sculptural art was governed by certain accepted laws developed along definite channels, and the work of the Greek artist, "even in its most realistic periods, remains impersonal" in contrast with the intimacy and individuality of the later work. She calls attention, however, to certain technical differences between ancient bronzes and the Renaissance or modern products, which will aid the inexpert in determining the source of doubtful pieces. The ancient patina, for one thing, is natural and not artificial, as in later specimens. In the case of some modern forgeries the ancient patina has been imitated by paint. In that case it can easily be removed by alcohol; if, however, it has been produced chemically, it will, like the ancient patina, remain unaffected by alcohol.

The Most Beautiful Greek Mirror Known. (In the Metropolitan Museum.)

"The copies of antique torsos prevalent among Renaissance bronzes as well as in our own times were of course cast as fragments, and consequently have smooth breaks; a Greek work was never conceived in a mutilated condition, and the breaks are always genuine fractures with raw edges. A modern forgery can often be detected easily by the fact that it is made of brass, which is considerably yellower in tone than bronze. It must be remembered, however, that brass was used in Roman times, and therefore for that period this is not a final test." The great difference between a genuine Greek bronze and a forgery is, however, stylistic, she concludes. "The modern forger, even if consistent from the archaeological point of view, hardly ever succeeds in keeping out of his creations a certain feeling of self-consciousness, which is totally foreign to the Greek spirit and immediately betrays its origin." The fortune of this test lies in sensitiveness of the observer to clear distinctions. A man who is a good judge of character can depend upon his impressions of physiognomy, but the man who only thinks he is a good judge of character frequently is led astray, which accounts for many astonishing attributions in art.

To the technical processes of bronze working in ancient times a number of extremely interesting pages are given, the author explaining her attention to this side of her subject by the fact that a great deal of research work has been done, and important results have been arrived at since the publication of H. B. Walters's catalogue of the bronzes of the British Museum, the latest work in English giving any comprehensive account of the matter. In bare outline, the processes used by the ancients are these: Two general methods of fashioning the bronze into form were employed—casting and hammering. The casting was of two kinds—solid and hollow. The solid casting was a simple process; the wax model of the object, when completed, was surrounded by a "mantle" of mixed clay and sand. After this was thoroughly dry, an opening was made and the whole heated until the wax was completely melted away. The cavity was then filled with molten bronze, and after cooling the mantle was broken away, and the bronze given the finishing touches. This method was used for the smaller objects, in which the weight was unimportant.

The hollow casting, which was used for larger pieces, necessitated a core of clay or plaster, which was surrounded by a layer of wax as thick as it was desired that the bronze should be. This wax was modeled into the required shape and surrounded with its mantle of clay and sand as in the solid casting. This outer mantle was joined to the core by metal rods. When the whole was heated the wax interlining melted away and the space left was filled with the molten bronze. When cooled, the core and mantle were removed, and also the metal joining rods, and the little gates or vents which had been introduced, and all the defects were patched. These repairs are often still visible in ancient bronzes. After this process came the more practical casting from molds, which permitted infinite repetition. In the earlier Greek work each piece was an original, and the artistic genius of the race prolonged the use of the more difficult older process after the simpler casting from molds was well known, the Greek mind abhorring mechanical repetition.

Hammering bronze into form is a process known in Greek lands as far back as the second City of Troy, and the earliest Greek statues were made in this way with the parts joined by rivets. After the casting process came into favor bronze vessels were still hammered into shape. The repoussé reliefs used for the decoration of furniture and other objects were made by tracing the design with a needle on the back of a bronze plate, which then was heated or hammered out over lead or pitch. Parts of the relief could be hammered back by reversing the plate, and this operation could be repeated indefinitely until the required effect was obtained.

The Exhibit Gives Chance for Study of "Fine Art" in the Bronze Medium, and Also of Decorative Art

After fashioning bronze into shape by these methods it remained to decorate it, and the most important ancient work in this direction was done with the tools of the engraver. After the 7th century B. C., the time of the invention of iron tools of great hardness, the art of engraving was developed to a high degree, and designs were incised on the details of statues and on various utensils and household objects with wonderful delicacy and skill. Inlay also was used as a means of decoration; gold, silver, copper, niello, glasspaste, precious stones, ivory, alabaster, amber, and pearls, all were used in combination with the bronze, giving a somewhat polychrome effect. Eyes and lids, teeth and nails and lips are given a color different from that of the rest of the body in statues of human beings. One figure in the Museum collection has holes in its ears, obviously for earrings. A little statuette of a mimus has silver eyes and teeth and niello on the hair and beard, also on the little buttons of the sleeves. Not infrequently bronzes were gilded or silvered. Everywhere there seems to have been felt a keen delight in color and play of light and shade on polished surfaces.

In her discussion of the patina that appears on the surface of ancient bronzes Miss Richter reminds us that the Greeks were "above all a joyous, imaginative people, living in a land with southern skies and rich color effects," and that their natural instinct led them toward splendor and brilliancy instead of the chill quiet which we associate with their white marbles and dark metals. The sombre coating which time and chemical changes have spread over the old bronzes was due, she is certain, to these natural causes alone, and not to any artificial means employed by the artists of the period. Her logic is simple. The same patina that is found on statuettes and other objects intended entirely for ornament is found as well on mirrors and tools which are useless unless polished, on jewelry which was made in imitation of gold and silver models and would naturally have been bright, on bronzes decorated with inlays of other metals where the contrast in color is entirely obscured by the heavy patina and the purpose of the artist thwarted. Other arguments are drawn from the literature of the ancients. An inscription of the fourth century gives instructions for the restoration of a bronze statue of a tyrannicide, and in it the clerks of the market are bidden to keep the statue bright; certain papyri of A. D. 215 make special provision for the treatment of bronze statues with an ointment, obviously to prevent the formation of the crust which we call the patina.

This unintended crust applied by nature is nevertheless often so beautiful that no one with an effective color sense can regret the slow work of the ages on the buried objects disinterred for us.

A very different matter is the change that takes place in certain bronzes after they have been taken from the earth and exposed to the air, the formation of a powdery light green efflorescence on the surface in spots that gradually spread and unite until the whole bronze may be totally destroyed, crumbling into powder. This is known as "the bronze disease," and the pages devoted to it are probably the most important in the catalogue. After referring to certain remedies appropriate to the treatment of the disease in advanced stages, Miss Richter passes to an account of a treatment suitable to the early stages, one that has been successfully used in the museum for several years in accordance with instructions given by M. Alfred André of Paris. "It is owing to the rare generosity of M. André," Miss Richter writes,

" that I am able to publish the recipe of this treatment, which he prefers to make known, 'so that he may help in the conservation of the masterpieces of ancient art,' rather than to keep it as a trade secret." The process is a simple one, and is not less interesting to private than to museum collectors; therefore it is worth while to give it still wider publicity by quoting the full account of it:

"The green powder is first removed with the greatest delicacy by means of the point of a needle and a little brush. Then the bronze is placed in a very dry place, or preferably in a drying oven of mild temperature, about 86° Fahrenheit, so as to remove every trace of moisture.

"It is advisable to put the bronze in a box containing sifted sawdust, turning it over from time to time. A few days must be given to this drying process. The Palestine bitumen, liquefied in spirits of turpentine, is applied to the diseased spots, allowed to penetrate, and then (after about half an hour) rubbed off the surface. The operation is performed by means of a small brush, preferably of sable, very fine and rather hard, so as to take only a little of the liquid at a time. The preparation is obtained by crushing the bitumen into small pieces, placing these in a small pot, and then pouring over them spirits of turpentine; the pieces will be entirely dissolved at the end of two or three days. The solution should then form a sort of black varnish and be of the consistency of thin syrup; if it is too thick it will not penetrate, and must be thinned with a little of the spirits. A second dose, this time a little thicker, can be applied at least twenty-four hours after the first, and, if necessary, even a third dose can be given after a few days."

The great advantage of this method, Miss Richter says, over other more radical methods is that only the diseased spots are touched, and the rest of the surface not affected, leaving the patina and general appearance of the bronze unimpaired. She further advises placing bronzes in air-tight cases or in cases containing sticks of caustic potash or other dehydrating agent, as the varying amount of moisture in our climate favors the spread of the disease.

The recent acquisition by the Metropolitan Museum of two pictures by American painters is of rather more than usual interest. "Cornelia," by Henry Golden Dearth, is a painting in the artist's latest manner, which has been changed to a radical degree from his earlier manner. When Mr. Dearth painted "Boulogne Harbor," formerly in the Hearn collection, he was content to reproduce a quiet aspect of nature by the use of a conservative color scheme and closely related values with an effect that made it easy to pigeonhole him with the so-called "tonal school." Within a few years this style has yielded to one in which a brilliant palette and a strongly marked decorative plan play the leading parts. The figure in his new picture is that of a young girl wearing a pink coat and a straw hat trimmed with flowers. She is placed in the right-hand division of the composition by the side of a stand of books in leather bindings. In the left-hand division are a Japanese print hanging against a white wall, and another stand on which is an Italian drug pot. All the accessories, rich in color and mellow in tone, are carefully discriminated in surface and texture, while the artist's manner of handling his pigment emphasizes the effect of precious things made more beautiful by the tone of time. The beauty of the still life is more in evidence than any special research into human character, and the painting as a whole strikes an interesting decorative note at once personal to the artist and characteristic of a general tendency in modern painting.

Under the terms of the Hearn gift it is possible to exchange any picture in the collection for a more desirable example by the same artist, hence "Boulogne Harbor" was withdrawn to make place for "Cornelia." Were it not for considerations of space one might well regret the withdrawal, as the two pictures seen together would form an extraordinary commentary on the completeness and rapidity of stylistic change possible to an impressionable painter at the present moment in art.

Miss Beaux's picture, "Ernesta," on the other hand, represents a logical development of the artist's early method. A girl in white is seated on a white sofa before a table. Her attitude is momentary and vivacious. It is apparent that she will not remain long in this position, erect and alert, with her small feet crossed girlishly. The brush has defined her young figure under its draperies with facile precision, and has played fluently over the costume and accessories. The delicate relation of white to white in the color pattern is managed with the utmost skill. The work speaks of technical adequacy and a sensitive, discerning vision. It is an appropriate museum possession and a distinguished addition to the group of figure subjects by American painters. One notes in it especially the use made of a reflecting surface in the mirror of the background, a device frequently vulgarized by imitative treatment and characterized in the present instance by a most learned command of a painter's resource.

Awards at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

The International Jury of the Panama-Pacific Exposition in the Department of Fine Arts have been so liberal in their awards that it would be easier to count the unrewarded artists on the list of exhibitors who have been honored. A writer in this month's Art and Progress says that the greatness of the San Francisco show is "simply that it does show, more comprehensively and adequately than ever before, the whole of American art." Certainly a very large number of names are in the catalogue, and the list of awards is proportionately long. These are the Americans who have received medals: The grand prizes have been given to Henry Wolf and F. C. Frieseke. Medals of honor have been given to John W. Alexander, Cecilia Beaux, Emil Carlsen, Willard Metcalf, Violet Oakley, Richard E. Miller, W. Elmer Schofield, Walter Griffin, and Lawton Parker, for their paintings in oil. Medals of honor for paintings in water color, miniatures, and drawings went to Lilian Prescott Hale, Laura Coombs Hills, Charles H. Woodbury, F. Walter Taylor, Frank Mura, and Henry Muhrmann, and medals of honor for sculpture to Herbert Adams, Karl Bitter, Daniel Chester French, and for etching and engraving to D. A. Wehrschmidt and C. Harry White.

Gold medals were given to Myron Barlow, Gifford Beal, George Bellows, Max Bohm, H. H. Breckenridge, H. J. Breuer, C. C. Cooper, H. G. Cushing, Charles H. Davis, Ruger Donoho, Paul Dougherty, J. J. Enneking, Daniel Garber, Lillian W. Hale, W. D. Hamilton, Harry L. Hoffman, James R. Hopkins, John C. Johansen, Sargeant Kendall, William L. Lathrop, Ernest Lawson, Hayley Lever, F. L. New York University Art.

The art department of the Summer School of New York University showed recently in the studios at University Heights a large and interesting collection of applied design which had been completed during the three weeks of the Summer session. The art class this year was the largest in the history of the university. Nearly 150 students registered for this course, coming from every State in the Union. Most of these students represented teachers in the larger high schools of the great cities throughout the Union.

The instruction in the university Summer class is entirely given by Dr. James P. Haney, Director of Art in the city high schools. He has introduced into university teaching many of the suggestions which he derived in an extended visit paid to the schools of Austria, Hungary, and Germany shortly before the beginning of the war. A most striking innovation in his work is the use of large quantities of nature material as suggestive of patterns in design. This material is not conventionalized in the usual manner of school design, but is employed as the basis from which to derive fine combinations of light and color.

A SOURCE OF INNOCENT MERRIMENT

What is worth doing at all is worth doing well, unless you are going to make a fool of yourself.

A scientific sharp has discovered that a cubic foot of air can contain 63,000,000,000,000 microbes. And yet some people complain of being lonely.

Life is one continuous hurdle race to the people who make a habit of jumping at conclusions.

Many a shallow mind has been concealed behind a deep voice.

About the only man who can afford to believe everything he hears is the man who is stone deaf.

"Say, Missus, do ye mind gittin' on de weighin' machine a minute? Me an' Sammy has a bet about ye."

The consequences are seldom pleasant when you sit on either fresh paint or fresh children.

Time is money, yet lots of people with plenty of time on their hands will strike you for a loan.

All things come to him who waits, but he is generally dead by the time they reach him.

Spiritualists will tell you we come back from the dead. At any rate, many a family skeleton has come to life.

A well-trained memory is merely one that admits of discreet forgetfulness.

The trouble about looking up to other people is that it encourages them to look down on us.

The earth was created for man, and the average fellow labors under the delusion that he is the man.

PROVING A GREAT TRUTH.

"You wouldn't believe that when I was a young man I had a great shock of hair, would you?" said the Bald-Headed Man.

"Oh, yes I would," said the Philosopher. "I have always maintained that Time is a great Shock Absorber."

A STRANGE OVERSIGHT.

"Seems to me them city folks is a mighty careless, unbusinesslike lot,'" said Uncle Hiram. "I bought a planny for my wife down to Bosting last week, and when the derned thing come the fellers I bought it of forgot to send any rules along tellin' us how to play it."

DAPHNE'S GARDEN.

O H! Daphne's Garden, it is fair,
And fills the circumjacent air,
And ladens every passing breeze,
With scent of Turnip, Beet, and Pease.
The caroling Cabbage rears her head
Beside the blooming Spinach bed,
The while the merry Leek hard by
Flirts with the modest Plant-de-Pie.

The Bean, ambitious he of soul,
Climbs higher daily on his pole,
While tender little Carrots flout
The glances of the Brussels Sprout,
The soft Tomato, ripe and lush,
The Red Rose rivals with her blush,
While in the depths of every hill
The amorous Potatoes trill.

The Winging Birds with hearts of song
Come wooing here the whole day long.
The Crickets chirp their roundelay
Unto the Garden night and day.
The Hopper hops from out the grass
Amid sweets his hours to pass,
And chiefest lover of its fruits
The Cut-worm serenades its roots.
O Garden blest! O Garden rare!
O Garden ever sweet and fair—
I love thee for that Daphne's hands
Have lured thee from the arid sands;
I love thee for that Daphne's toil
Hath wrested from the earth thy spoil,
E'en though six hundred cold I drop
For fourteen dollars' worth of crop!

UNDER THE NEW LAW.

"Well, Binsky, back from vacation I see," said Dubbleigh.

"Yep," said Binks.

"Did you go to the mountains or the sea?"

"Neither. I only had two weeks, and I spent that getting my family's trunks checked under the new declaration system," said Binks.

OVERHEARD EVERYWHERE.

"Dot Cherman note," said the professor, "iss worthy of its source."

"Yes; I think it is, Professor," said Wixley.

"Ach!" hissed the Professor. "You are always reviling us!"

Preparing

IN one of the Southern States the negroes are great patrons of a matrimonial agency. One darky, anxious to find a wife for his son, went to this agent, who handed him his list of lady clients. Running through this the man came upon his own wife's name, entered as desirous of obtaining a husband between the ages of twenty-eight and thirty.

Forgetting about his son, the darky hurried home to announce his discovery to his wife. She was not at all disturbed.

"Yes," she said, "I done give him my name. I puts it down when you was so sick in de Winter and de doctor says we must prepare for de worst."

Reason Enough.

AT a dance given by a social club there was a man who met with a mishap on the floor, due to his lack of skill in dancing.

A little later the man sought out one of the guests and said:

"Sir, you are the only gentleman in the room."

"Thanks," replied the other, dryly. "May I inquire what motive has led you to seek me out for this complimentary outburst?"

"Why," explained the man, "when I tripped in the tango just now and fell sprawling to the floor, incidentally ripping off a large section of my charming partner's gown, you were the only one in the place that did not laugh."

The other smiled grimly.

"The explanation lies in the fact that the lady is my wife and that I have paid for the gown."

Dangers of Intellect.

THE dangers of the higher education are not often exposed so nakedly as in the case of an east side mother, who wrote the following letter to the teacher of her boy:

"Please do not push Tommy too hard, for so much of his branes is intelleck that he ought to be held back a good deal, or he will run to intelleck entirely, and I do not desire it. So please hold him back so as to keep his intelleck from getting bigger than his body, and injuring him for life."

A SETTLEMENT WORKER.

"What is your business?" asked Briggles of the stranger in the Smoking-Car.

"Oh, I'm a Settlement Worker," said the stranger.

"Ah—a sort of Hull House arrangement?"

"No," said the stranger. "A sort of House to House arrangement. I'm a bill-collector."

DISCOURAGING.

The Pacifists of Boston sustained a terrible blow the other day when the Fishermen supplying the Hub's markets, who might just as easily have caught jellyfish, actually descended upon the town with 2,000,000 pounds of sword fish.

A POLISH LIMERICK.

(To be read aloud to the children after supper.)

There was an old man of Prmxyzl,
Who dwelt on the banks of the Dzikxl.
When asked for his name,
With cheeks all aflame,
He answered "It's Wjnkg Kmxtzl."

A CONCLUSION.

"I tell you, my friend," said the Idealist, "there's something bigger in this world than money."

"Yes sirree," said the Pragmatist. "And I know what it is, too."

"What is it?" asked the Idealist.

"Bills," said the Pragmatist.

THE PANAMA CANAL IN TIME OF WAR

Military Experts Shatter Certain Popular Theories Regarding the Great Ditch and Indicate Its True Value as an Asset of the Navy

HISTORY OF THE PANAMA CANAL: ITS CONSTRUCTION AND BUILDERS. By Ira E. Bennett. Associate editors: John Hays Hammond, Professor Patrick J. Lennox, William Joseph Showalter, Captain Philip Andrews, Dr. Rupert Blue, and J. Hampton Moore. Builders' edition. Illustrated. Washington, D. C.: Historical Publishing Company.

SOME expert at figures has estimated that the 200,000,000 cubic yards of material handled in building the Panama Canal would make a solid wall nine feet high and six feet thick around the whole earth at the equator. Will the canal itself be a wall of protection to us in the naval sense? To what extent does it help in our present problem of naval unpreparedness? Are its coast defenses strong enough to hold an enemy at bay if any of our ships have to use the canal under fire? These are some of the live questions answered by Mr. Bennett and his associates in the present volume.

Ex-President Taft, General Goethals, and other high officials have aided and abetted Mr. Bennett in his task of telling the whole story of Panama in one big volume. The undertaking, he says, was almost as complicated as that of describing a ten years' war. His well-rounded narrative is supplemented with chapters by Colonel Roosevelt, Messrs. Wallace, Shonts, Stevens, and a dozen other men who speak with authority on certain phases of the work. As the main facts are familiar, however, the present review shall be devoted to the military chapters.

Admiral Dewey had consented to write on the naval values of the canal for this book, but he finally sent, instead, an article by Captain Harry S. Knapp, U. S. N., on "The Navy and the Panama Canal," with the comment that it fully expressed his views.

One of the first things that Captain Knapp does is to shatter the popular notion that the canal will double or triple the effectiveness of our navy. This is a dangerous fallacy, he says. While the canal makes the naval distance from New York to San Francisco only 5,000 miles instead of 13,000, this advantage does not alter the necessity of maintaining both an Atlantic and a Pacific fleet, each capable of doing business with its most probable adversary. Guantanamo, the nearest naval base, can be reached in fifty-eight hours from the Panama Canal; but Manila is thirty-three days distant from Panama, and those days would be ample for an enemy to do things in the Philippines. Says Captain Knapp:

> The canal will be a great military asset in war, and an equally great one in anticipation of war; but it is quite beside the mark to say it will double the effectiveness of the navy, or do anything approaching that. * * * Our policy should be to have eventually, and as soon as possible, a total strength not less than that of the Standard Atlantic Fleet plus three-quarters that of the Standard Pacific Fleet.

These so-called standard fleets, in plain words, are fleets like those of Germany or France in the Atlantic, and of Japan in the Pacific. Admiral Mahan long ago laid down the principle, which has been adopted by our navy, that we need not try to compete with the British in sea power, but that it is our duty to be prepared to meet the next largest navy of Europe. According to Captain Knapp and Admiral Dewey, this means that, canal or no canal, our Atlantic fleet alone should be a match for the German fleet. The canal, however, enables us safely to get along with a Pacific fleet only three-fourths as large as that of Japan. Here comes the point:

> Our total naval strength at this minute is not equal to that of what is called above the Standard Atlantic Fleet. For a considerable time to come, whatever building program may be adopted, it will be necessary to concentrate our entire fighting fleet in time of war, trusting to Providence that the part sent to the threatened ocean will not be needed in the ocean from which it is withdrawn. In effecting this concentration the canal will be a very great military advantage to us.

Suppose that we had a full-sized Atlantic fleet and that it had to cope with the German Navy; and suppose we were attacked at the same time by Japan. Captain Knapp says it would be hopeless to try to make even a defensive war in the Pacific under such circumstances without a fleet three-fourths as strong as the enemy's. We should lose the Philippines, Guam, Hawaii, and the enemy would begin knocking at the coast defenses of California and Panama.

This brings us to the other angle of the subject—the defenses of the Panama Canal. Major Gen. Leonard Wood contributes to Mr. Bennett's book a scant page on this theme, but does not go into details beyond saying that steps have been taken > to provide a garrison adequate to hold it against any force, excepting such force as might be landed as a result of our losing sea power—that is to say, the garrison will be sufficient merely to hold the canal against raiding forces from fleets. If we should lose sea control so as to permit the free transport of troops by the enemy, then the force required to hold the canal securely would be a very large one.

> Just as soon as our naval strength falls below that of any European nation that needs land for her surplus population, we invite, and may get, a defiance of the Monroe Doctrine. Indeed, the opening of the canal itself, by gradually increasing commerce and opportunity in Central and South America, will invite such aggression.
> We have guaranteed the neutrality of the Panama Canal; we must maintain it by force if need be against any and all. We have bound ourselves to do this. What this may mean no one yet knows; the need for force on this score would probably arise at the same time as other difficulties.

Chief Engineers of the Panama Canal

What has been done to safeguard the canal against seizure by a hostile power? To this question Mr. Bennett's chapter on "The Canal Fortifications" offers a satisfactory answer.

There is a 16-inch gun at each end of the canal. These are the largest weapons in the possession of the United States, and among the largest in the world. It must be remembered that a gun increases in power as the cube of its calibre. Thus a 16-inch gun is not twice, but eight times, as powerful as an 8-inch gun. At an elevation of forty-five degrees these Panama monsters could shoot twenty-four miles, but as they are mounted their range is something over eleven miles. They fire a six-foot projectile weighing more than a ton and containing 140 pounds of high explosive. One-third of a ton of smokeless powder sends this shell out of the fifty-foot gun with a muzzle velocity of 1,500 miles an hour. This shell will penetrate any armor plate in existence at eleven miles' range.

The secondary defenses on each side of the Isthmus consist of six 14-inch guns, six 6-inch guns, sixteen 12-inch mortars, and eight smaller howitzers. The mortar shells have a range of eleven miles, and they would have to go eight miles up into the sky before coming down on the deck of a warship at that distance. All the guns are mounted on disappearing carriages of the latest model. Preparations have also been made for mining the waters at both entrances in case of war.

These powerful batteries, commanding the narrow entrance to the canal at either end, make it impossible for any vessel to get in alive. Even in case of attack by a large fleet, so many battleships would be disabled that no enemy could afford to take such a risk unless it had first met and defeated the United States Navy.

The garrison consists of eight companies of coast defense troops quartered on Naos Island on the Pacific side and four companies quartered at Toro Point and Margarita Island on the Atlantic side. There are also three regiments of infantry, one squadron of cavalry, and one battalion of artillery on the Isthmus. Besides, there are quarters for 20,000 extra troops in case of war.

As for the chances of a hostile vessel's entering Limon Bay under cover of night, the author says:

> Surprise attacks are guarded against by a complete searchlight equipment at the fortifications. There are fourteen searchlights, each with a 60-inch reflector, capable of sweeping the entire horizon. Each of these searchlights was built at a cost of more than $20,000, the mirror alone requiring a year for its construction. The lights are operated by electric plants independent of the main plants at Gatun and Miraflores. The guns also are operated by electricity generated at these independent stations.
> A supply of more than $2,000,000 worth of ammunition will be kept on the Isthmus at all times. Each 16-inch gun has a supply of seventy rounds of ammunition. The fire control stations by which the guns find the range of the enemy are as complete as those of any other fortress in the world.

An inland battery of eight howitzers will be stationed permanently at the Gatun locks. At both ends of the canal the 12-inch mortars are so placed that they can sweep the country inland as far as Gatun on the Atlantic side and Miraflores on the Pacific Slope. If called to take part in land defense they will be loaded with shrapnel. The smaller howitzers also can be moved from place to place to repel land attacks.

The military authorities at Washington believe the Panama Canal fortifications have been made impregnable, provided the navy is strong enough to do its part. In case our Atlantic or Pacific fleet has to be moved through the canal in the face of a hostile armada, those big shore guns will be a comfort to us and a sedative to the enemy. Another interesting point is touched upon by Mr. Bennett thus:

> Many persons have expressed fears concerning the danger of the destruction of the locks by high explosives, secretly placed by one or two men. Colonel Goethals is not one of those who entertain such fears. In order to accomplish the destruction of the locks it would be necessary to place the charge very carefully, and even in times of peace the canal operators and watchmen are always on guard.
> An airships, they could do no serious harm unless they were able to drop a huge explosive directly behind a lock gate. Aerial navigation has not yet reached the degree of skill required for such accuracy of aim.

While all this has been done for Panama, the authors note that Congress has thus far failed to appreciate the equal necessity of a well-equipped naval base at Guantanamo, the outer guard for the canal and for our coast. Much more must be done for its defense and equipment before it can furnish adequate protection. Another point in Captain Knapp's article is that Mare Island Navy Yard, in San Francisco Bay, is doomed. The water is too shallow for the big battleships of today. A new location in deep water near the city must ultimately be provided.

Our Pacific squadron uses 160,000 tons of Allegheny coal a year, on which there may now be an annual saving of $360,000. A coaling plant has been established at the Atlantic terminus of the canal for storing 200,000 tons, half of it under water. Another coaling plant at Balboa, on the Pacific side, is almost equally large, and both are capable of increase to 300,000 tons.

The main body of this book, of course, is devoted to the story of the building of the Panama Canal, prefaced by a history of the Isthmus since the days of Columbus. It is written in clear and readable English, is fair in spirit, and its facts evidently are authoritative. Full justice is done once more to the achievements of General Goethals, General Gorgas, and Colonel Gaillard, while the earlier engineers get a chance to tell their own stories.

Colonel Roosevelt's chapter consists of The Outlook article in which he told how the United States acquired the right to dig the canal in spite of Colombian obstructionists. As for the bill, still pending, to give Colombia a solatium of $25,000,000, the Colonel's view is expressed in these terms:

> There is no more reason for giving Colombia money to soothe her feelings for the loss of what she forfeited by her misconduct in Panama in 1903 than for giving Great Britain money for what she lost in 1776. * * * We did harm to no one save as harm is done to a bandit by a policeman who deprives him of his chance for blackmail.

The last chapter is devoted to the American industries that took part in building the canal. The volume is illustrated with portraits and photographs, and has a striking frontispiece in colors by Reuterdahl.

SOLVING PROBLEMS OF MODERN SOCIETY

Two Books That Adopt Contrasting Methods and Remedies in Their Analysis of Recent Economic Developments

DRIFT AND MASTERY. By Walter Lippmann. New York: Mitchell Kennerley.

THESE two books supplement one another and may be regarded as in the relation of toxin and antitoxin; which, however, is poison and which is antidote, it is not for the present writer to say. They both deal with the confusion of ideals which has been brought about by the later enonomic developments of modern society. But while Mr. Lippmann lays stress upon the social unrest thus produced, Professor Carver attempts to lay down the principles of social justice on which society can overcome these difficulties; he thus seems to rush in where Mr. Lippmann, if he does not fear to tread, at least declares there is no road. This contrast in method and results is symbolized by the contrasting styles in which the two books are written. Mr. Lippmann is crisp, incisive, and is always on the lookout for the trenchant word; Professor Carver is more content to be complete than persuasive, to be clear than inspiring. Yet both books are products of Harvard, the one of young Harvard that looks forward for the solution of the world's ills, the other of a more elderly Harvard that is, in the main, content with the solutions of the past.

Mr. Lippmann's book is indeed a brilliant production, both in style and contents. Though perhaps not offering very much that is new in essentials and general principles, he has evidently read and thought much on most of the problems presented by the further development of the Industrial Revolution which, going beyond the individual factory, now has to contemplate the economic results of combinations of factories. By bringing foward combination instead of competition as the motive force in business affairs, John D. Rockefeller and his associates made a fresh transformation in the economic foundations of society almost equal in importance to the transition from domestic to factory manufacture. The full effect of this transformation has only been noticeable for the last thirty years, and it is not surprising that society has not yet adjusted itself to these new conditions.

Mr. Lippmann's thesis is the drifting attitude of contemporary business men and statesmen toward this colossal change; they literally do not know where they are. Muckraking drew attention to some of the changes in the business world, due to the affiance of big business with politics. Again, Big Business requires different capacity in its managers than can be found among the old type of business man. Accordingly, business henceforth will be a profession and will need as careful a business training as medicine or the law. (Alfred Marshall saw this a quarter of a century ago.) The shareholders of companies and the consumers of their products are both ignorant of what is going on and have to take dividends and goods on trust. Workmen themselves are divided into unionists practically content with things as they are,—if they can get enough of the things, and the I. W. W., who deliberately want to spread discontent and to get all the things that are going. The present generation is seeing America change from a nation of villagers to one of urban dwellers, and one of the consequences of this is the uprooting or, one might say, the dynamiting of the Rock of Ages, by which Mr. Lippmann means the older principles of Authority in religion and society, which kept men fairly content.

Such, in few words, is Mr. Lippman's analysis of contemporary "Drift," and it corresponds in large measure with what most students of society have been recognizing for some time. When he comes to the "Mastery," which is to stop the drift or direct it into fixed channels, Mr. Lippmann is far from definite; indeed, it is one of his chief merits that he recognizes the difficulty of definite prophecy as to the immediate economic future of humanity. He seems to be only certain of one thing—that the principle of authority can never be restored and that the Rock of Ages has been removed from man's path. It is, however, by no means so certain as Mr. Lippmann thinks, that the principle of authority is so moribund. He himself looks forward to a world which will be ruled by Science and Efficiency; what are these but Authority writ large? It may be true that the Church can no longer command obedience or even intellectual respect, but Science is already claiming the same obedience and respect for its dicta and dogmas, which are as little comprehensible by the vulgar as the theologisms of the older churches. Mr. Lippmann is himself an example of this new dogmatism; he speaks with the utmost confidence on the most complicated social problems, and one cannot help recalling what Thompson, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, is reported to have said to Professor Jebb: "We are none of us infallible, Mr. Jebb, not even the youngest of us."

Though he is no cocksure in his opinions, it is fair to add that Mr. Lippmann recognizes the intricate complexity of modern social relations, and, indeed, that is one of the main objects of his book to emphasize. The bewilderment produced by the quick changes in modern industry and business finds a reflex in the inadequate solutions of the socialistic schools. One is reminded of the curious fantasy of the late Samuel Butler, who prophesied that scientific invention would go on increasing in geometrical ratio and make such thorough and quick changes in the relations of man and nature that all mankind will go mad. Mr. Lippmann seems to have some such vague fear before him. Though he has no very definite panacea for the troubles of our time—indeed, he does not believe in panaceas—he makes some shrewd suggestions as to the direction from which remedial effort will come. In this connection he has a Note on the Woman's Movement, which says many sensible things on this intricate problem which, if not entirely new, are newly thought out and newly arranged. Mr. Lippmann sees clearly that the New Home must be conducted in an entirely new spirit of cooperation with others, of absence of hurtful Consumers' competition, and with the Mother a specialist, economically independent.

Where Mr. Lippmann is most vague is with regard to that blessed word "democracy," which covers so large an amount of confused thinking. He does not see that democracy and the new god Efficiency are incompatible, and this goes on all fours with his failure to observe the rise of a new Authority in the Expert. Already the Expert is beginning to rule, not the People, and the process will go intensifying itself till we will have a government by benevolent bureaucrats corresponding to the benevolent despots of the eighteenth century. In this connection I should recommend Mr. Lippmann to study the facts and figures of Francis Galton's "Hereditary Genius," showing what a small proportion of the people, one-twentieth in fact, have any real capacity for government or anything else except what they are bidden to do.

There is, perhaps, Mr. Lippmann's chief weakness, his aversion from appealing to quantitative criteria; he takes Professor Marshall to task for declaring that economics is superior to the other social sciences, inasmuch as it has a pecuniary measure of motive. Mr. Lippmann denies this, declaring that a hundred dollars does not measure a man's work; what he does not see, or at any rate leaves out of account, is the fact that the hundred dollars is a comparative measure by which one can compare the attractiveness of a commodity or a career as compared with others and to other men. Here again Mr. Lippmann might be commended to study the geometric methods of illustrating economic truth, started by Cournot and developed by Walras and Marshall. If this method does not lead to new economic truths it at least makes the older ones clearer and more definite.

This is brought out very distinctly by Professor Carver in his treatment of social justice, in which he uses graphic curves to make clear his points about competition, interest, and taxation. Professor Carver is not of the opinion that competition of a sort can be removed either by combination or co-operation. While there are a limited number of "goods" in the world there must be a conflict of wants among those who desire these goods. Hence the perpetual need of social justice which shall recognize these conflicting claims according to some definite, established rule. He has an interesting chapter on the forms of human conflict, ranging from militant and gambling through persuasive and economic to recreational. After all, there will always be courting, and probably always sport and drama, even in a socialistic Utopia; and these are all forms of conflict. Professor Carver does not believe in socialism, though he accounts for its growth as a natural result of urban factory life. He recognizes that the conflicts which socialism attempts to reconcile need assuaging, but doubts the possibility of entirely removing them in this country while there is immigration from Europe and immigration from Heaven, as he quaintly terms childbirth.

Professor Carver is thus largely of the older economic individualistic school, which regards the motives of enlightened self-interest, if properly guided, as sufficient to produce the just social equilibrium. As Professor Hollander recently published a little book to prove, from the older individualistic standpoint, that poverty can be abolished owing to the large social surplus which modern science confers upon man, so Professor Carver considers that poverty can be cured and that the rich should be made responsible for its alleviation and ultimate disappearance. This he would effect by changes in the law of inheritance and taxation, which would redistribute wealth on more equitable lines. Though, in a measure, Professor Carver is somewhat deserting the older economics by thus introducing ethical standards, it must be remembered that John Stuart Mill, in the later edition of his "Principles," also disregarded the Economic Man of whom Mr. Lippmann speaks so contemptuously.

Both writers are to be congratulated on producing stimulating works on some of the fundamental problems of the day. Mr. Lippmann stimulates by his style and wide vision, Professor Carver by his clear analysis and extended knowledge.

MR. SWINNERTON'S STUDY OF STEVENSON

A Critical Essay with a Brief Sketch of an Engaging Personality

R. L. STEVENSON. By Frank Swinnerton. New York: Mitchell Kennerley.

MR. FRANK SWINNERTON'S "R. L. Stevenson" is a critical essay in which the biographical part is very brief. Stevenson at the age of 6 dictated to his mother an account of Moses, and three years later dictated a narrative of his travels in Perth. The first published matter for which he received pay was written when he was 22. Concerning a journey to Italy and back by way of Germany and the Rhine, accomplished when he was a boy and under the guardianship of his mother, we find it observed as "remarkable that he does not seem to have retained much memory of so interesting an experience." The suggestion that he had not yet at that period "awakened to any very lively or precise observation of the external world" seems reasonable, and yet if he had been stimulated he might have written something; for the work upon Moses his mother rewarded him with the prize of a Bible picture book.

When he had attained to manhood Stevenson was tall and dark and very thin; his hair was dark and worn long; his large dark eyes were set wide apart; his face was long and bony; his hands, "skeleton thin," were "constantly flickering with every change of face;" he wore a velvet jacket, and was taken for a poet even when he was studying to be a civil engineer. His movements were very graceful, though nervous; he moved about a great deal, "from hearth rug to chair, from chair again to table, walking quickly and brushing his mustache." Mr. Sargent's portrait, in which we see him striding across the room, and indeed "brushing his mustache" as he goes, makes a frontispiece for this book. Perhaps his animation as he talked made him as charming as that figure dear to Thackeray—"young Mr. Harry Fielding, who pours out everything he has in his heart, and is in effect as brilliant, as engaging and as arresting a talker as Colonel Esmond has ever known." But that is only one portrait, the essayist notes; "perhaps it does not represent the real Stevenson at all;" "surely not everybody would see him, we are inclted to suppose, quite with that sympathy and in that clearly engaging fashion.

This is not a book of flattery to its subject. It has very subtle considerations of Stevenson and his work. The essayist thinks that Stevenson "generally inspired more affection than he was accustomed to give in return." Men meeting him, even men "of greater real ability," were fascinated by his vivacity; he saw that they were, and liked them for it. He went his way happy with the excitement of his own triumphs. He had an "abnormal consciousness of his own appearance in the eyes of other people." But is it the case, as this critic says it is, that picturesqueness is "the hallmark of a second-rate writer"? Shakespeare was picturesque; think of his cloud-capped towers and gorgeous palaces, his russet mantles for morning wear—superior to anything ever turned out in eminent Paris. And was Hazlitt so great for matter and style? Stevenson is complimented here for saying: "Though we are mighty fine fellows nowadays, we cannot write like Hazlitt." We recall that Byron had similar praise for Dryden and Pope: "Depend upon it, it is all Horace then and Claudian now among us." Nevertheless Byron neglected to write poems in the classical style; he was quite definitely one of the romantic fellows. If we look for Hazlitt in Bartlett's book of quotations we shall not find him. Certainly he is not chargeable with the offense of having been picturesque; if he had been so, John Bartlett would have snapped him up.

Stevenson's "Virginibus Puerisque" is a book of essays thoroughly well known and apparently well liked. It is said of it here that it has been a favorite for many years, that it is sanguine, gentle, musical, but, alas! "in the deepest sense unoriginal." It is said of it further that its thought is threadbare and ill-nourished. Take that favorite essay on death, "Aes Triplex"; it is a thing of phases, of tropes dressing commonplaces; a select budget for easy quotation, for use in calendars. So we learn as we read here. Whereas the ordinary person would say, "It's well to have something to look forward to," Stevenson comes along with, "It is better to travel hopefully than to arrive, and the true success is to labor." Much superior, in this critic's opinion, is Browning's asseveration that "a man's reach should exceed his grasp." Perhaps the reader will be moved to a further comparison of proverbs, and will ask himself which is the better, the English "Cut your coat according to your cloth," or the German "Stretch yourself according to your bed cover." Slightly to alter a famous notice attached by the Grimm brothers to one of their delectable stories, anybody who fails to answer this question will be required to say a half crown. But Stevenson, we are instructed here, merely makes phrases for the boudoir; his essays contain "high spirits" sometimes, indeed, an occasional "cheerful saying," but no "philosophical optimism." As we read we cannot help regarding Mr. Swinnerton as the "pale Pretorian," carrying off the inventor of that somewhat famous trope.

It is plain that this critic will not have picturesqueness. Sometimes he is deeply shocked by it. Stevenson says that "people nowhere demand the picturesque so much as in their virtues," to which Mr. Swinnerton replies that, although this may be true, yet "for a self-respecting author to give them the picturesque for that reason" is, as he sees it, "a most immoral and, in the end, a most ill-judged proceeding." The particular case causes the critic to shudder, but in general, in his opinion, to cultivate the picturesque is inevitably to produce falseness. "A trope is a "literary gesture;" it is like "the habit of any vain person who flickers his hands or persistently turns the 'better side' of his face or character to the beholder." The vanity of tropes leads to pose, and pose is merely amusing. Stevenson was unconsciously misled by the glamourous but pernicious power of phrase; at first this knack of his "held us breathless with a sort of wonder," but now we see through it. The style has grown tedious; it is "like the grimaces of a spoilt child"; what we took for a "thrill of nature" is only "a spurious galvanism"; we have tested it, and we disapprove of it, and we decline its further administration.

Some things in commendation of Stevenson are said here, but they come to be tapered off so that what is left cannot be held really to be flattering. We read that some of the essays in "Familiar Studies of Men and Books" show him to have been "a good enough journeyman critic to stand beside those who write essays on literary subjects for the reviews," poor fellows; that they are "useful and plain," and that "some of them, but not all, are interesting." Regarding the stories: "One would like to know what Stevenson aimed at in his romances. One does not receive from any one of the romances the thrill given by a perfect work of art." "Not one of them, not even 'Treasure Island,' not even 'The Master of Ballantrae,' which falls in two, has any powerful inevitability. These romances are in fact the romances of a sick man of tremendous nervous force, but of neither physical nor intellectual nor even imaginative energy." "They have exciting, impressive, and splendidly vivid scenes. But the quality they have not is the fine, careless, rich quality of being vital." "We have been excited and pleased and happily warmed by the day's doings in the open air, but we have never seen the naked soul of man, or heard the haunting music of the sirens, or looked upon the open face of God." All of which, and a good deal more of the same conscientious and thoroughly probing quality, the reader may reject, if he is so inclined, or most potently and powerfully believe, if he is so minded. Perhaps he will estimate the value that is imparted to a tale by the presence in it of a powerful inevitability.

Prison Reform—How? When? Why?

THE STORY OF "CANADA BLACKIE"

By ANNE P. L. FIELD

With an Introduction by

Thomas Mott Osborne

A MODERN LIBRARY FOR ALL WAYFARERS

Forty Volumes That Bring Together, in Convenient Pocket Size, Much That Is Worth Preserving in Contemporary English Literature

THE WAYFARER'S LIBRARY. Forty volumes of contemporary English literature in uniform pocket size. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Each volume 40 cents.

CHARLES LAMB once asked, since it is fitting to say grace before meat, why not also before a good book? Why not, indeed, a grateful bowing of the head before beginning a volume of Dickens or partaking of Elia's delectable "Dissertation on Roast Pig"? On this theory one must needs approach "The Wayfarer's Library" with manifold graces and gratitudes; for here are forty volumes, and more to follow—a feast with all the courses from appetisers to sweets—selected from the worth-while books of the last two or three decades.

This new low-priced series of reprints evidently is meant to supplement "Everyman's Library," doing for the best of recent books what "Everyman's" has done with signal success for the older classics. It has the merest flavoring of anything as old as Dickens or Lamb, while Austin Dobson's "Eighteenth Century Studies" marks the limit of its seriousness. In other words, its scope is confined to the lighter side of recent literature—fiction, essay, romance, humor, travel, and such-like books—representing the best in the popular thought and literary entertainment of our own time.

Here, for instance, are three of Bernard Shaw's novels, with one of his typical prefaces mocking at all three, an accommodating Shavian device for saving trouble for the reviewer. "People who will read 'An Unsocial Socialist' will read anything," he says. Just so. Here it is, in handy pocket form, with "Love Among the Artists" and "Cashel Byron's Profession," of which Mr. Shaw says:

> I never think of "Cashel Byron's Profession" without a shudder at the narrowness of my escape from becoming a successful novelist at the age of 26. At that moment an adventurous publisher might have ruined me. Fortunately for me, there were no adventurous publishers at that time; and I was forced to fight my way, instead of being ingloriously bought off at the first brush.

George Gissing also is represented with his book of short stories, "The House of Cobweb," and that gentle masterpiece of softened autobiography, "The Private Papers of Henry Ryecroft," whose wistful air of wide human compassion will keep it long alive. Written in the calm evening of his short life, (Gissing died at 46,) after the terrible years of starving in London slums were past, "Ryecroft" is a calm revelry in peace and plenty, with inevitable regrets for the years the locust hath eaten.

It is George Gissing himself who speaks in the words of Henry Ryecroft:

> You tell me that money cannot buy the things most precious. Your commonplace proves that you have never known the lack of it. When I think of all the sorrow and the barrenness that has been wrought in my life by want of a few more pounds per annum than I was able to earn, I stand aghast at money's significance. What kindly joys I have lost, those simple forms of happiness, to which every heart has claim, because of poverty. * * * I think it would scarce be an exaggeration to say that there is no moral good which has not to be paid for in coin of the realm.
> When it is remembered that this book was published twelve years ago there is something prophetic in Ryecroft's denunciation of the constant predictions of war in the newspapers. "Persistent prophecy is a familiar way of assuring the event," he remarks; then adds in sudden passion:
> > But what is it to me if nations shall fall a-slaughtering each other? Let the fools go to it! Why should they not please themselves? Let them rend and be rent; let them paddle in blood and viscera till—if that would ever happen—their stomachs turn. Let them blast the cornfield and the orchard, fire the home. For all that, there will yet be found some silent few, who go their way amid the still meadows to bend to the flower and watch the sunset; and these alone are worth a thought.

"Quo Vadis" is packed neatly and legibly into one of these pocket-sized volumes. Poor Sienkiewicz! At the age of 69 he contemplates a ruined Poland, and has turned from fiction to the practical art of raising money for the war sufferers. Alphonse Daudet's "Kings in Exile" is here to recall Paris as it was after that other German visit, and Belgium is represented by L. Cope Cornford's fine historical romance, "The Master Beggars of Belgium."

Can "Hardy the Gloomy" be admitted to the Wayfarer's Library of good cheer? Yes, decidedly, to the extent of his one merry-hearted novel, "Under the Greenwood Tree." If you haven't read it, here it is in inviting form. Let us browse a moment in its pages, where the village gossips are discussing the new parson's way of calling on his parishioners when they are busy.

> "'Tis only for want of knowing better, poor gentleman," said the framter. "His meaning's good enough. Ay, you pa'son comes by fate; 'tis heads or tails, like pitch-halfpenny, and no choosing; so we must take en as he is, my sonnies, and thank God he's no worse, I suppose.
> "Ah, Mr. Grinham was the man!" said Bowman. "Why, he never troubled us wi' a visit from year's end to year's end. You might go anywhere, do anything; you'd be sure never to see him."
> "Yes; he was a right sensible pa'son," said Michael. "He never entered our door but once in his life, and that was to tell my poor wife—ay, poor soul, dead and gone now, as we all shall!—that as she was such a' old aged person, and lived so far from the church, he didn't at all expect her to come any more to the service."
> "And 'a was a very jinerous gentleman about choosing the psalms and hymns o' Sundays. 'Confound ye,' says he, 'blare, and scrape what ye will, but don't bother me.'"

In the way of pure humor we have Barry Pain's "De Omnibus: By the Conductor," as joyous a piece of Cockney dialect as one could reasonably ask for; and F. Anstey's "Baboo Jabberjee," which depends for its laughter upon the verbal bulls of an educated native of India.

It is always a pleasure to dip into the mild little anecdotal essays of the Right Hon. G. W. E. Russell, who is represented in this collection by a volume of "Selected Essays on Literary Subjects." Never deep, never brilliant, always good humored and companionable, Mr. Russell's charm is sufficiently indicated in the anecdote which he uses to typify the shallowness of modern culture. It is about a lady much in bondage to convention, who had been enthusing over the Wagnerian Cycle, and who, when a friend asked her to tell him quite honestly, as between old friends, if she really enjoyed it, replied, "Oh, yes! I think one likes Wagner—doesn't one?"

But for brilliant essays we must turn to A. G. Gardiner's "Prophets, Priests, and Kings," with its swift characterizations of forty leading men of our day. Take the essay on Shaw. It scintillates more than Shaw himself. It calls him "a hurricane of wrath, flashing through our jerry-built society—the lash laid across the back of his generation."

> He whips us with the scorpions of his bitter pen, and we are grateful. He flings his withering gibes in our faces, and we laugh. He lampoons us in plays, and we fight at the pay box. We love him as Bill Sikes's dog loved that hero—because he beats us.
> Riches have poured into Mr. Shaw's lap, but he is still the same quarrelsome gentleman of fortune, living upon his wits, his sword ever in his hand.
> He comes into your midst with the tail of his coat trailing on the floor. What, Sir, you will not tread on the tail of my coat? You will not fight? You have no quarrel, Sir? A fig for a quarrel! I will tweak your nose, Sir! And what a duelist the fellow is! What irony, what jest, what diabolical self-composure! His wit is as swift as the lightning, as happy as the song of birds. "Boo!" roared a voice from the gallery when he came forward, amid thunders of applause, at the close of one of his plays—"Boo!" "I agree with you, Sir," he said, "but what are we two against so many?"

Mr. Gardiner says that Lord Northcliffe is summed up in the desolating word "smart"; that Winston Churchill is in politics merely for adventure, and that Sir Edward Grey is the weightiest speaker of his time in the British Parliament. His essay on David Lloyd George, written six or seven years ago, ends with a prophecy that seems on the way to fulfillment:

> And so I turn to the figure at the end of the table, with the smile so quick and sunny, yet so obscure. If the key of the future is anywhere it is there. If the social fabric is to be reorganized, there is the man than can do it.

One wonders whether Mr. Gardiner would give the German Kaiser as clean a bill of health as he does if he were writing today. In the Kaiser's love of drums and pomp he saw "an undercurrent of purpose, making, it is true, for the aggrandizement of Germany, but making also for the peace of the world." One wonders, too, whether he would today say of the Russian Czar that "superstition is the essential atmosphere of his mind," and that to baleful Russian Church influences is due "the phenomenon of merciless oppression emerging from a personally shy and timid source." Fashions change in the things we say, just as they do in the things we wear.

The only American admitted to Mr. Gardiner's gallery is William Jennings Bryan, whom he interviewed in London. "A Niagara of a man," he calls him, "a resistless torrent of inexhaustible force, thundering along in a sort of ebullient joy, mind and body in perfect equipoise." That was in the days of American revolt against a high tariff, and the author opined that Mr. Bryan was masterful enough to play a large part in that campaign of liberation. He added, however:

> We may doubt whether he will carry it through, for his mental processes are too elementary for the practical engineering work of politics. There will need to be other more instructed, more acute, more scientific minds to plan the new social structure. But he will supply the moral fervor and the large purpose. He will not manipulate the storm, but he will give it impetus and direction. His task, in a word, is not that of statesmanship, but of revivalism, and it is as the field preacher of politics that he will do his best service to his country.

One of the newest books in this collection is "Under the Ban in Alsace and Lorraine," written by Miss Betham-Edwards, an Englishwoman, who has long been an officer of public instruction in France. She visited friends in Alsace and the lost portion of Lorraine shortly after the Germans annexed them, and has repeated her visits at intervals ever since. Her book is full of proofs that the people have remained intensely French in spite of German rule. Their bitterest hardship lay in the fact that every mother's son had to become a Prussian soldier or quit his home forever. As an example of the sacrifices by which even the poorest contrived to show their patriotism, Miss Betham-Edwards gives the following:

> It is the rule of the German Government to send twenty marks ($5) to every poor woman giving birth to twins. Just before my visit the wife of a French workman had borne three boys; but, although in very poor circumstances, she refused the donation. "My sons shall never be Prussians," she said, "and that gift would make them so."

The Wayfarer's Library includes novels by W. H. Marriott Watson, Guy Boothby, Hugh Walpole, W. Pett Ridge, Mrs. Clifford, Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, Walter Besant, W. Clark Russell, and others. History is represented by Herbert Paul's "Queen Anne," Hilaire Belloc's "The Historic Thames," and G. S. Street's "The Ghosts of Piccadilly." On the whole, the first forty volumes are fairly representative of recent London literary successes.

In form these books are slim, light, small enough to slip into a coat pocket, and neatly bound in cloth, with decorated end sheets. The type is new and clear, the paper good, and each volume has a tinted frontispiece and a ribbon book-mark. The series has solid merits, entitling it to a popular welcome.

The Vanished Fleet

A brief sketch entitled "A Captain of the Vanished Fleet," which originally appeared in the Atlantic Monthly, is published in book form as a memorial to its author, Dr. Benjamin Sharp, a distinguished American zoologist and explorer. The vanished fleet Dr. Sharp writes about used to sail out of Nantucket; the Captain he alludes to was a distinguished whaler who made many voyages around the Horn and brought home many a full cargo. (Pilgrim Press. 50 cents.)

PRAYER FOR PEACE

PRAYER FOR PEACE, AND OTHER POEMS. By William Samuel Johnson. New York: Mitchell Kennerley. $1.25.

THOSE who have read Mr. Johnson's romance of Paris, "Glamburie," need not be told that he is a poet, for, besides the fine poetic flavor of its prose, that book contains the haunting song that ends with the lines:

> "But at last I shall wake for my kingdom's sake,
> And rule for the world's redeeming
> In the glamour and gleam of the Over-Dream,"
> Said Love in the shadow, dreaming.

Now Mr. Johnson has gathered up a little sheaf of his magazine poems and named it "Prayer for Peace," from the first one, which Colonel Roosevelt used as an introduction to his recent book on "America and the World War." This poem is enough in itself to give the volume distinction. In four successive stanzas the poet prays for peace and gets the wrong kind, but in the last—

> I prayed for peace; God, answering my prayer,
> Spake very softly of forgotten things;
> Spake very softly old remembered words,
> Sweet as young starlight. Rose to heaven again
> The mystic challenge of the Nazarene,
> The deathless affirmation: Man in God,
> And God in man willing the God to be!
> And there was war and peace, and peace and war,
> Full year and lean, joy, anguish, life and death,
> Doing their work on the evolving soul. * * *
> The far fruition of our earthly prayer,
> "Thy will be done!" * * * There is no other peace!

Several other poems deal with aspects of the war. The fate of the common soldier, sent blindly to death for King or Kaiser, is touched with a pitying hand in "The Poor Little Guy," and the resurrection of a ruined cathedral is sung in "Notre Dame de Rheims." In the long and rather difficult poem, "Beyond Our War," the three Fates are represented as gazing into a crystal and telling what they see. Sometimes they speak in riddles, but at other times their lines ring out with such simple music as this:

> Mine eyes are bleared with battle smoke,
> Mine eyes are wand with tears,
> Watching the wars of evil folk
> Through hate's unending years.
> Man's thunders blur the reeling sun;
> His life-blood stains the sod;
> I cannot dream them back to One,
> These shattered lights of God.

Again and again in Mr. Johnson's verse one finds the Spinoza strain, a belief in the immanence of God in the universe. Evidently it is a living faith with the author, for it inspires him to his noblest passages—also occasionally to a mysticism that will baffle the matter-of-fact mind. But with it goes always a yearning sympathy for all that is human, a love of earth's beauty, a sure sense of earth's laughter and dreams. The artist's dream is voiced in "The Cursing of Art" and in "Around the Bend," where a dying painter at his easel says:

> Dear God! if I could paint
> The smell of the steaming earth, the feel of the bark,
> The weary's song down the reaches of the wind,
> That wistful, questing wind that flows and flows
> Around the bend. * * *

The mystery of personality, which separates all human souls, even the closest, is voiced in "Strangers," of which this is the last stanza:

> O, it's heart to heart on the Beacon Hill
> (And my wife is there with me!)
> But Love, alas! is a stranger still,
> And a stranger still, the Sea!
> O wandering, wistful, alien Love!
> O deathful, haunted Sea!
> Not the Dead below nor the Wonders above
> Can make you one with me;
> For the woman looks seaward and dreams apart
> (Though I call her mine on the Beacon Hill)
> And her dreams are the dreams of the Sea's deep heart—
> My Love is a stranger still!

At its best Mr. Johnson's poetry is rich in feeling, thought, imagination, and verbal music. Evidently he can make a name for himself in this field if he cares to cultivate it.

EIGHTY MILLION BOOKS

WITHOUT in any way impeaching their truthfulness, there is an excellent gift of imagination in figures. The statistician bringing together his rows of ciphers furnishes material out of which others, less given to laborious investigation than he, weave a fine texture of dreams. Thus, when The Publishers' Weekly estimates, after a careful survey of the different elements involved in the problem, that the figure representing the total annual book production in this country is something like 80,000,000, we are impressed, to say the least, with the amazing increase in popularity that literature must have achieved during a comparatively short period. Of course, 80,000,000 books is an aggregate quite too vast to be comprehended even with the assistance of the most vivid of imaginations. As The Publishers' Weekly points out, it means, for one thing, "slightly over three-quarters of a book a year per inhabitant." And it means, besides, that the reading of books has steadily increased until it is now general in all classes—for the old-time limitation of book reading to one class is scarcely conceivable in the face of so tremendous an output. Eighty million books is acknowledged to be merely approximate; the data from which an accurate total might be reached is not available. But The Publishers' Weekly makes good use of such figures as are at hand, and some of the facts evolved in the course of its computations are instructive as well as interesting. Thus, we learn that the number of titles of new fiction published in this country annually is approximately 900, of which about 175 are importations. The compiler further estimates that the average edition of the imported work of fiction is 600 copies, making a total of 105,000 volumes of imported new fiction; the estimate for imported old fiction—"such fictional classics as DICKENS and SCOTT"—is put at 300,000 volumes a year. Of fiction manufactured in this country it "seems reasonably safe to assume that 1,000 copies are the average minimum sale and that three-fourths of all new fiction titles sell above the minimum." The total yearly sale of new fiction of American manufacture is, "roughly, 4,000,000 copies"—a figure that should set at rest the fears of those who talk of the popularity of foreign as compared with American fiction in this country. The year's sales of old, or "reprint," fiction is also placed at 4,000,000 copies, making the annual total for all fiction of "approximately 8,000,000 copies." Other totals reached in this survey are: Non-fiction books, 13,400,000; Bibles, 5,000,000; subscription books, &c., 12,000,000; textbooks, 37,500,000; locally and Government published books, 3,680,000. For purposes of really instructive classification it seems a pity that "subscription books" should be considered by themselves. If analyzed, they would doubtless swell the number of "fiction books." As it is, the total for the latter is smaller than the usual estimate.

THE proposed memorial to ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, to be placed on his old home near Saranac Lake, in the Adirondacks, is a welcome tribute to an author who found hospitality in this country at a time when his literary fortunes were at a low ebb. STEVENSON'S fame as a writer has stood the test that has come through the changes in taste shown by the reading public since his muse achieved its first triumph. He may not be read so much as he was at one time; but his stories, especially his "Treasure Island," are in a fair way to secure a place among those works of fiction that are sufficiently endowed with the truth of humanity to win them immortality. STEVENSON was a literary artist something after the pattern of MEREDITH—whose verbal ambiguities he happily avoided—but he told a story in his own way and because he loved to tell it. His "Master of Ballantrae" was the principal work through which his name has become associated with this country. He is more closely identified with Samoa, the picturesque resting place that he made so peculiarly his own, than with the Adirondacks, or even his native Scotland. Otherwise, he was a man apparently without "a local habitation"—but that affords no reason why this country should neglect to claim him for the brief period when he made America his home.

IN a book that has just made its appearance in England under the title "Bernard Shaw: an Epitaph," Mr. JOHN PALMER adopts a novel method by which to bring comfort to those who see nothing but misery as a result of the war. Whatever else may happen, he assures them, the great conflict will end GEORGE BERNARD SHAW. Mr. PALMER reaches this conclusion as the logical deduction from the accepted view that "the ways of literature after the war are to be entirely altered." There is plausibility enough in the argument that it would be impossible to alter "the ways of literature" so long as Mr. SHAW is in evidence. The trouble is, one feels doubtful as to the validity of Mr. PALMER'S main postulate. Is the war going to have so drastic an effect on literature as he supposes? If it is, the writing of Mr. SHAW'S epitaph seems to be a reasonable act of prevision, commendable in itself, and showing a worthy regard for the needs of posterity. But it is more probable that the "ways of literature" will go on as they have before, and thus that Mr. PALMER has performed an unprofitable task. We like to think that every evil has its compensatory good. The silencing of Mr. SHAW, however, as one of the war's compensations is hardly certain enough to warrant an early outburst of thanksgiving.

WE are so accustomed to the classification that puts PLATO within the sober covers of books of philosophy that we are apt to view as a bit of harmless pleasantry Miss VIDA D. SCUDDER'S treatment of him in the current Yale Review "as a novelist." SHELLEY, of course, in serene defiance of the conventional way of looking at things, declared that PLATO was one of the greatest of poets—and whoever reads the "Dialogues" with this interpretation in mind cannot fail to be struck with its truth. Similarly, if we reread those immortal productions in order to weigh them in the balance of Miss SCUDDER'S theory, we find ourselves agreeing that PLATO was not only a novelist, but that "he is the match of DICKENS for portraiture, of MEREDITH for dramatic dialogue, of BROWNING for situation. With BALZAC or TOLSTOY he is competent to quicken us by the spectacle of existence, now to tragic passion, now to the laughter of the gods." Miss SCUDDER'S essay in support of her contention is enriched with unsuspected treasures gleaned from the great storehouse of the "Dialogues," as a result of which one sees the latter filled with the humanity that glorifies the best of our fiction and that is too often absent from "cold philosophy." Curiously enough, Miss SCUDDER omits what many would consider the best example of PLATO'S facility as a novelist—"The Apology," "Critias," and "Phaedo." These form a vivid, continuous narrative, culminating in the death of SOCRATES. No modern trilogy observes more carefully the rules of good fiction, nor reaches a more thrilling dramatic climax than this story that incidentally essays to prove the immortality of the soul. As a bit of short fiction, also, a story replete with humor, character drawing, and "local color"—it would be difficult for a modern writer to surpass "The Banquet." Altogether Miss SCUDDER'S paper is an unusually valuable contribution to Platonic literature.

FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS

IT is more than twenty-three years since this valuable reference work had its ninth revision. In the preface to that edition Mr. Bartlett said:

"The small, thin volume, the first to bear the title of this collection, after passing through eight editions, each enlarged, now culminates in its ninth—and with it closes its tentative life. * * * Accepted by scholars as an authoritative book of reference, it has grown with its growth in public estimation with each reissue. Of the last two editions forty thousand copies were printed, apart from the English reprints. The present enlargement of text equals three hundred and fifty pages of the previous edition, and the index is increased with upward of ten thousand lines."

In the present edition there are 1,054 pages of quotations, and the index fills 400 additional pages. The work attained a sale of 300,000 copies before Mr. Bartlett's death in 1905 at the age of 85. Mr. Dole explains in his preface the reasons for the 1914 revision:

"In this new edition the main body of John Bartlett's compilation, up to the beginning of the nineteenth century, has been left practically unchanged, the chief purpose of the revision has been to incorporate in the work quotations from those writers whose place in literature has been achieved since the issue of the ninth edition, in 1891. The selections from Poe, Whittier, Longfellow, Lowell, and other 'best writers of their day,' have been filled out extensively, and many new authors are represented by passages which have met with the seal of popular approval, and are distinctly worthy of perpetuation. In this way the book has been greatly enriched. The attempt has been made not to admit anything which John Bartlett's impeccable judgment would have rejected. It is not always easy for Elisha to wear the mantle of Elijah, but it is Elisha's business to carry on his predecessor's work in the same spirit."

President Woodrow Wilson has neither written nor said anything that is familiarly quotable enough to land his name in this company. There are, however, two quotations from ex-Secretary William J. Bryan's "Crown of thorns and cross of gold" speech of 1896. Theodore Roosevelt is quoted thrice. Only two quotations are from Washington Irving's writings, which seems strange, but Daniel Webster gets thirty-eight. Two of the three quotations from George Washington are as timely as when he uttered the words more than a century ago, viz.:

> 'Tis our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world.

How much we are indebted to the immortal Cervantes for the many familiar phrases among the witty sayings in common use is shown by the more than eight pages of quotations from his "Don Quixote." Some critics rate Thomas Moore, the Irish poet, as not in the first class, but he is quoted here much more fully than others whom those critics rank above him. There are only twelve quotations from Robert Louis Stevenson, seven from Bret Harte, and twenty-two from Charles Dickens. The number in each case, it seems to us, might have been greater. Oliver Wendell Holmes is quoted forty-four times, Whitman thirty-eight times, and James R. Lowell no less than ninety-seven times.

The Gold-Headed Cane

A reprint has been published of the second edition of Dr. William Macmichael's charming book entitled "The Gold-Headed Cane," which had its first publication in 1828, the year following the appearance of the original edition. This book, which is much esteemed by English doctors, contains the autobiography of a cane which is preserved in a glass case at the New College of Physicians in London. The cane, which had been successively carried by Dr. John Radcliffe, Dr. Richard Mead, Dr. Anthony Askew, Dr. William Pitcairn, and Dr. Matthew Baillie, was presented to the New College of Physicians in 1825; its autobiography is in reality a series of sketches and reminiscences of the professional careers and experiences of the distinguished men with whom it was associated. (New York: Paul B. Hoeber. $1.)

POPULAR SENTIMENT IN WARRING EUROPE

Ex-Senator Beveridge Gives the Results of His Personal Study of Conditions in Germany, France, and England—New Books on the Great Conflict

WHAT IS BACK OF THE WAR. By Albert J. Beveridge. Illustrated. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company.

EX-SENATOR BEVERIDGE'S articles in leading magazines have done a good deal to clarify American thought on certain aspects of the war. His book containing these articles in amplified form should deepen that effect. It is a book of facts, gathered at first-hand, regarding the ideas and public sentiment back of the battalions of Germany, France, and England. The mental attitude of each nation is presented without perceptible bias, and the reader is left to draw his own conclusions. One of the most striking of these is that the war is likely to last a long time.

With truly American enterprise Mr. Beveridge went to Germany and interviewed the Kaiser, Admiral von Tirpitz, Field Marshal von Hindenburg, Professor von Harnack, various industrial and Socialist leaders, and average people of all classes. The net result was to convince him of three outstanding facts:

This is the German people's war, rather than the Kaiser's war. Nearly 70,000,000 men, women, and children think, feel, and act as a single being.

They are convinced that they are the victims of a monstrous plot, hatched in a foreign country, to destroy modern Germany.

They are as sure of Germany's ultimate victory as they are of the process of the seasons.

The German people are as fully convinced of the absurd notion that England started the war as are the French and English that Germany started it. Senator Beveridge makes no attempt to draw a line between deceivers and deceived. He simply sets down the words of official and commoner, all denying the influence of a military party in Germany. He quotes Professor Harnack's statement that army officers are forbidden by law to take any part in politics, and that they have less influence with the Government than workingmen and merchants.

The significant thing is the unanimity of the nation. Of the first 2,000,000 German workingmen to go to the front, more than 1,500,000 were Socialists, and a surprising number of these were volunteers. The trade unionists were as keen to enlist as the Socialists. The Jews go to the front as willingly as the Teutons. The women are as determined as the men. Mr. Beveridge assumes that Germany now has 5,000,000 men under arms, and shows that it can keep that number in the field, despite losses, for the next six years at least. In a desperate emergency it could call out 11,000,000. The resources of the country are little affected, and the richest corner of France, with its mines, coal fields, and agriculture, is in German hands.

In France Mr. Beveridge talked with Gabriel Hanotaux, Henri Bergson, Eugene Schneider of the Creusot Works, M. Hervé the Socialist, and many others. Everywhere he found men and women with a quiet but intense determination to put an end to the long-standing German menace at whatever cost. The spirit of France is one of purposeful sacrifice, of resignation to bitter loss, of patriotic exaltation translated into deeds rather than words.

In England, however, the author found a different atmosphere. While the patrician class is intensely in earnest, and willing to give life and loved ones in the war, the great middle class is still unaroused and half the people of the so-called lower classes are sullenly indifferent. Says the author:

> In answer to fervent exhortations and appealing advertisements hitherto unknown to warfare, 2,500,000 British volunteers, it was said, had enlisted and were in training—an immense number, and yet only about half the men with whom France now holds her battle lines * * * and perhaps one-third of the number that Germany has under arms or ready to take the field.

Not the least interesting of Senator Beveridge's chapters is the final one, entitled "Probabilities." He believes that, no matter which side wins, the war is going to produce—in all European countries except Russia—"an immeasurable advance in democracy, expressed in terms of collectivism." He no longer looks on this war as a contest between absolutism and democracy. On the contrary, he believes that every battlefield is proving the winning power of team work in the form of democratic collectivism.

Germany was already far in advance in this line, he says, and England has been forced to overcome the weakness of too much individualism by passing the Defense of the Realms act, and, later, the commandeering bill, which places all industrial plants, as well as all railroads, under Government control. In France, as in Germany, prices of food and fuel have been kept within reach of the masses by law, while in England the public resentment at high prices and the cornering of supplies has weakened patriotism. Thus says the author. He believes that even in England many of these emergency laws will be carried over into peace times.

> The principle which runs through all of them [he adds] is Government control of fundamentals for the common good. They are fruits of the community spirit quickly ripened by the heated atmosphere of war. Nor will any Government, without protest, be able to take that fruit from the people after the millions of soldiers go back to the plow and the anvil. * * * It is not extravagant to say that time may show that the war marked the passage of an old economic dispensation and the coming of a new social and industrial period.

This is the only chapter in which Mr. Beveridge theorizes. In the rest of his book he is a reporter writing what he heard and saw. His experiences at the front would make easier reading if he had frankly used the perpendicular pronoun instead of the impersonal and tiresome "you," but these are meaty chapters, nevertheless. The excellent illustrations evidently are from the author's own camera.

MR. IRWIN'S WAR SKETCHES

MEN, WOMEN, AND WAR. By Will Irwin. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.

AS Mr. Irwin says, the war is vast beyond human conception, and it is covered by mists of secrecy. One gets only a glimpse here and there. In this book he presents a few of these swift dissolving views, just as he saw them—vivid, colorful, touching, heroic.

With three other war correspondents Mr. Irwin had taken a taxicab from Brussels and blundered right through a battle into Louvain at the moment when the Germans were swarming into that fated town. The Germans shouted with Homeric laughter when these captured Americans told how they had come there. The story of that experience is related with a simplicity, a clearness of detail, and a spirit of youthful adventure that give it an unusual charm.

The women who have won a place in the title of Mr. Irwin's book are the heroic French mothers and sweethearts who are running the shops and farms of France while the men are fighting the invader. From Paris to the Pyrenees they are nursing the wounded, plowing the fields, harvesting the crops, doing the nation's work, each in hourly dread of the news that will clothe her in mourning. Horses are few, and fuel is scarce, for the Germans have taken the coal mines; yet Madame goes on, in her serious wartime fashion, making the best of what she has. If it be only black bread and cabbage soup—it is for France! And in the "little French stocking" she still has something saved up. The Government allows 25 cents a day to the wife of every soldier, yet many of the women are giving this back to France. The Mayor of a southern city told the author that not more than one-third of the women entitled to this bounty had claimed it.

At an inn between Havre and Caudebec Mr. Irwin was served by a comely girl whom he had once heard chaffing a gay automobile party of young men. Now she was dressed in black, and the outlines of her eyes were blurred. She was doing a man's work as porter of the hotel as well as her woman's work, doing it all in a fog of grief, and finding time between grief and work to knit for the republic.

At Chartres a woman teacher, the wife of the master, appeared one morning in black. She went through the routine to the last detail, though the black meant that he had fallen. A little salesgirl in a Paris cigar shop was engaged; they should have been married in the Autumn. The war took him away. A friendly American one morning asked her, "Any news?" and then caught sight of her face and stopped. "Non, monsieur, pas de nouvelles," she said, and looked quickly down at her work. Then he noticed for the first time that she was sewing a black ribbon on her hat.

It is with such details that Mr. Irwin paints the word pictures, and he does it with an art that never loses the human touch. The chapter on "The British Calm" abounds in similar cameos of men. "The Splendid Story of Ypres" is the fullest outline of that battle that the present reviewer has seen. Mr. Irwin believes that Ypres may yet be regarded as the most vital battle in British history. Its genius was Field Marshal Sir John French, and it cost England 50,000 men out of the 120,000 engaged—a proportion of loss greater than any previous war ever knew. It cost the French and Belgians 70,000, the Germans perhaps 375,000, making half a million in all, or as many men as our North lost in the whole civil war.

Mr. Irwin's book is all the better for not being very long. It has no dull pages.

ENGLAND'S WARTIME LAWS

WAR: ITS CONDUCT AND LEGAL RESULTS. By T. Baty, D. C. L., LL. D., and J. D. Morgan, M. A. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $3.50.

BRITONS are decidedly restive under the drastic limitations of their ancient liberties inflicted by recent war emergency legislation. The legal textbook named above, written by two university professors, devotes nearly 600 pages to restating the laws of the British realm as affected by the war. It covers the whole ground from habeas corpus to contraband and bills of exchange, but the chapter of liveliest interest is that in which Professor Morgan criticises the Defense of the Realm act.

This act places every citizen under military law, and both authors condemn the regulations under it as unwise, arbitrary, unnecessary, and unconstitutional. The power exercised by the Military Press Bureau, abolishing the freedom of the press, they say, is a new and dangerous departure.

The new law makes it an offense, triable without a jury and punishable by penal servitude, to publish reports "likely to cause alarm." It requires every person "to stop and answer questions" and furnish any information required by a constable or officer. "Liberty is now in a precarious state—it hangs by a thread. The law is a blot on the statute book," the authors declare. Their indictment continues thus:

> For the first time in 250 years a civilian may be sentenced to death without trial by jury. Never in our history has the Executive assumed such arbitrary power over the life, liberty, and property of British subjects.
> The net of restriction is now so finely woven, so ingeniously designed, that it enmeshes every activity of the citizen. The military authorities can, on mere suspicion, arrest any one without warrant, and can equally without warrant enter any house by day or by night.
> They can punish with penal servitude for life any journalist who speculates as to the plan of campaign of the British or French forces, and with six months' imprisonment if he criticises the dietary or accommodation of the new recruits. They can stop any citizen in the streets, and compel him to answer questions, even though they incriminate himself. The private citizen is placed under the absolute orders of any Major holding his Majesty's commission.

A considerable portion of the British public is beginning to realize that its Parliament was stampeded by the emergency into some dangerous legislation, not the least harmful of which has been the unintelligent infringement of the freedom of the press. This book is one of numerous signs that the present law will not long be allowed to stand unmodified.

Contraband and the rights of neutral ships are treated cautiously and inadequately here, but it is significant that these authors condemn, however briefly, the present sweeping claims of Great Britain on the high seas. They point out that neutral ships carrying the most innocent cargoes to their own ports are now liable to confiscation, adding:

> All certainty and security are gone. This may be beneficial to Great Britain in the immediate present. It is our duty only to point out that it goes far beyond what neutrals have tolerated in the past, and may be calculated to drive them into the arms of a belligerent.

The volume touches many live issues and is almost as interesting to the lay reader as to the lawyer.

GERMANY'S COLONIES

GERMANY'S VANISHING COLONIES. By Gordon Le Sueur, F. R. G. S. McBride, Nast & Co. 75 cents.

MOST Americans, as they consider the great war, pass over one of its most important aspects. Engrossed by the great struggle in Europe or the attempt to force the Dardanelles, they forget that, presuming in the long run the Allies triumph, one of the most important of the results of their victory has already been attained. Thirty years ago Germany began to build a colonial empire, and in Africa and the Pacific sought her "place in the sun." She acquired certain territory and, if she was not particularly successful in developing it, she has at least established footholds of immediate strategic and possible future commercial importance. All these she has either lost or seems on the high road to lose.

How important this fact is likely to be to the British Empire and, through it, to the world is told in "Germany's Vanishing Colonies," written by Gordon Le Sueur, F. R. G. S. The fact that he was at one time private secretary to the late Cecil Rhodes, one of England's great empire builders, of course implies that it should be written from a pronouncedly British standpoint; but the very animosity he shows toward the methods adopted by the Germans shows how serious might have been their success.

Naturally Mr. Le Sueur speaks particularly of the German efforts in Africa, and especially of their plan to draw a line of German territories across the continent just north of the Orange River so as to hem in Cape Colony. Their opportunity came in the anti-imperial ideals of the Gladstone Government of the early eighties; but they made the serious miscalculation of depending upon the Boers to provide an essential link. It is interesting to note that Mr. Le Sueur absolutely denies the pro-German or even the pro-Dutch propensities of that people, and that he traces part of the poor success of German Southwest Africa to the way in which the authorities treated these Boer settlers they did attract.

In the same way the advent of the Germans in East Africa and in the Pacific is described and Mr. Le Sueur gives a sketch of the way in which the Kaiser obtained part of Samoa and Kiao-Chau. Then he summarizes the products and the development of each of the German colonies, and finally describes how many of them have already passed into the hands of England or the Japanese, and the operations that are still in progress against the rest. No doubt the ultimate fate of these German territories will be decided by the outcome of the war in Europe, but if that results in something of a draw it is not very likely that the Allies will relinquish what they have conquered now, as England did on several occasions in the eighteenth century. As Mr. Le Sueur has brought out, Kiao-Chau is too important to Japan and the Pacific Islands and German Africa to Australia and the South African Union for the Allies to consider them as mere pawns in the great game. It may be safely prophesied that unless Germany comes out the absolute victor in the war, never again will she see her flag waving over the colonial possessions that have been her pride.

Confederate Prisons

Homer B. Sprague, ex-President of the University of North Dakota, tells a very interesting story in "Lights and Shadows in Confederate Prisons, 1864-5." While in command of the Thirteenth Connecticut Infantry he was taken captive, and thereafter was a prisoner for many long months in Richmond, Salisbury, and Danville. His portrayal of his prison life is distinctly vivid and engrossing. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.)

American Politics

Six lectures by Dr. Arthur Twining Hadley, President of Yale University, are published in a volume entitled "Undercurrents in American Politics." Three of the lectures were delivered at Oxford University and three at the University of Virginia. The Oxford lectures deal with "Property and Democracy," the others with "Political Methods Old and New." (Yale University Press. $1.35.)

NEW FICTION FOR VACATION READING

ATHALIE. By Robert W. Chambers. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co. $1.40 net.

THE very day Athalie was born her mother realized that there was something strange about her. Perhaps the fact that she was destined to be the heroine of a Robert W. Chambers novel appeared when the doctor declared her to be "about as perfect as they make 'em." Her father was the part proprietor of a road house on Long Island known as the Hotel Greensleeve—Greensleeve being his patronymic—and there the youthful Athalie romped and played with her two sisters, named in comparatively prosaic fashion Doris and Catharine, and saw things invisible to ordinary mortals. It was her mother who first told her that she was clairvoyante and explained the meaning of the term when the little girl described the visit she had just received from an old neighbor who had recently died. This faculty Athalie found rather a nuisance, since it made the other children a trifle afraid of her, and she hid it as best she could, although after her mother's death she found it a great comfort. Presently, when she was about 12 years old, a party of New York men came down to Long Island for the duck shooting, and put up at the Hotel Greensleeve. The son of one of them, Clive Bailey, Jr., accompanied them, and became very friendly with Athalie. The two young people ate peach turnover together, he gave her a wrist watch, and the experienced reader immediately recognizes him as the hero. While he is staying at the Hotel Greensleeve Athalie's father dies, and the scene consequently shifts soon after to New York.

During the next half dozen years he and we have but one brief glimpse of Athalie. When we meet her again she is an expert typist and stenographer in the office of Wahlbaum, Grossman & Co.; one of her sisters has gone into the chorus at the Egyptian Garden, and the other is a model in a big dressmaking establishment. Even with their combined earnings the three girls are very poor, obliged to live in a "grimy" apartment and make their supper of scrambled—and decidedly dubious—eggs. However, Athalie manages to have "an array of bottles, vials, jars, lotions, creams, scents on her bureau," which she uses in the very elaborate "nightly grooming" by means of which she keeps "her hands and feet * * * snowy and satin smooth." She also improves her mind in the intervals by reading "good English." Then one night, after she has finished her evening toilet and, arrayed in a "somewhat intimate costume," is waiting for her sisters to return home, Clive Bailey walks in. Athalie and he immediately renew their old friendship. After a little while he establishes her in an apartment which has "a big square living room * * * a bedroom all done in gray and rose, with dainty white furniture and a white bear rug beside the bed," with another, less ornate, chamber for her sisters, and gives her silver, furs, clothes, and a large white cat named Hafiz. They go constantly to theatres and restaurants, where Athalie, who of course is marvelously beautiful, is much noticed and admired. Their relation is a purely platonic one, but, strange to say, "people think it something more," as Clive's mother presently informs him. Mrs. Bailey is a worldly woman, "flint-hardened in the igneous social lava pot," and she has already chosen a wife for her son, in the person of a wealthy and extraordinarily disagreeable débutante, "as cold as a cod." From this arrangement develops plenty of trouble for Athalie and Clive.

Circumstances finally force Athalie to use her power of clairvoyance as a means of making money; it proves a veritable gold mine, she quickly becomes the fashion, and is surrounded by admirers, for, besides her marvelous beauty, she has grace, charm, intelligence, sweetness, humor, and every other desirable quality. Nearly all the men she meets fall in love with her, and she has proposals galore. But she is true to her love for Clive, though the course of it is so very far from smooth. The book contains a large amount of the typical Chambers dialogue, but it is written in a rather perfunctory manner, as though the author himself were not greatly interested in his characters or their history. The idea of the clairvoyante girl has possibilities, and Mr. Chambers's fondness for dealing with what may be generalized as the occult is well known. However, it is a long, long way from "The King in Yellow" to "Athalie."

OF HUMAN BONDAGE

IT is not so very many years ago that the three-volume novel was declared to be extinct—a dictum many will remember only because it inspired Rudyard Kipling's famous poem. For like so many forms of art over which funeral orations have been pronounced, the supposedly dead three-volume novel was only in a sort of chrysalis sleep, from which it has been awakened, though in a greatly altered shape. Very different indeed from the "old three-decker" of romance which carried "tired people to the Islands of the Blest" is the long novel of today—as different as is the sailing ship from the passenger steamer. It is not meant to provide pleasant voyaging for the weary; one needs to be quite thoroughly awake to enjoy a trip with the modern writer of three-volume novels—with Mr. Onions or Mr. Beresford or Mr. Maugham. True, "Of Human Bondage" is issued in one volume, but it is quite as long as three ordinary novels; following the method of the older English writers which has recently become so popular with their present-day successors, it relates with strict accuracy and an abundance of detail the story of a man's life from his ninth to his thirtieth year.

Philip Carey's history has a good deal of variety in its scenes and incidents. We meet him first as a very little boy, taken by his nurse to bid good-bye to his widowed and dying mother; then he is a rather forlorn child in a country vicarage, cared for to the best of their rather limited ability by his childless uncle and aunt; from their home he goes to school at "Tercanbury"; follows a year in Germany, then London and the office of a chartered accountant. Quickly coming to the conclusion that the profession of accountant is not the one for him, Philip, who has a few thousand pounds of his own, decides to go to Paris and study art, but after a couple of years he very wisely accepts his master's advice, and, realizing that Foinet is right in telling him that his work shows "intelligence and industry" but no talent, he renounces art and begins to study medicine. Financial troubles force him to drop his hospital work for a time, and he learns by bitter experience what it means to be one of the unemployed. Presently he is only too glad to take the place offered him of floorwalker in a ready-made clothing shop, but at last the death of his uncle, for which he has long been waiting and hoping, enables him to return to the hospital and finish his course there; when we finally part with him he is a qualified doctor.

The novel is written with a carefulness and conscientiousness which are entirely praiseworthy. The very leisurely method gives opportunity for any quantity of pictures, pictures in which each minute detail is elaborated and finished. Life in the country vicarage, with the selfish, slightly sensual vicar and his humble little wife, so grotesque to look at, so warm and generous of heart; the Paris studio and its habitués, among whom poor, proud Fanny Price toiled and starved, and made herself generally disliked, while full of a mistaken self-confidence she labored at the painting for which she had no gift, until the inevitable tragedy came; the hospital, and Philip's acquaintances and experiences therein, and especially interesting to Americans because it describes customs so unlike our own, the shop where Philip "lived in," sharing a room with three other employes. The characters, of course, are many, and nearly as diverse as the scenes in which they play their parts; so many of them are there, indeed, that while almost all of them deserve special comment, it is only possible to say that they are real, and with a few exceptions rather disagreeable people; but there are, of course, two or three who stand out in the foreground.

First and foremost of these is Philip Carey himself, a personality well and consistently developed from the opening page to the last. He has a club foot, and the effect of this deformity upon his actions and his temperament is traced with numerous little deft touches. Sensitive, intelligent, impressionable, passionate, sympathetic, and weak-willed, his inner life is revealed in its every phase. Yet interesting, lovable even as he is, the reader's principal feeling for him is pity. For throughout a very considerable portion of the book, Philip is a slave to his entirely physical passion for a selfish, ignorant, stupid, vulgar woman—a woman he thoroughly despises, while he grovels at her feet. This love causes him intense suffering, and even at the very end he realises that he will never be "quite, quite free" from his passion for Mildred, "vile woman" as she is, and as he knows her to be. She is one of the book's memorable characters, a creature without, so far as one can discover, a single redeeming trait, so utterly loathsome that while one pities Philip's agony, it is difficult to prevent contempt from mingling with that pity. It is easy to understand why Philip attracted Miss Wilkinson and Norah Nesbit—plucky, large-natured Norah, one of the few people in the book whom one would like to meet in the flesh—and healthy, happy Sally, who resembled "milk and honey," but Mildred's charm is entirely that of the erotic and perverse. She is also exceedingly well drawn.

Philip's path through life is marked by the making and breaking of friendships, the formation and destruction of one illusion after another. Brought up to believe that while salvation outside of one particular creed might be possible, it is decidedly improbable and that all "infidels" are necessarily wicked people, he is astonished to discover that the American Weeks, "who believed in hardly anything Philip believed * * * led a life of Christian purity." This discovery is the beginning of doubt; from doubt he goes on to atheism, and presently he forms a rule of life "to follow one's instincts with due regard to the policeman around the corner." Put into practice, this rule does not work very well, and it is succeeded by a theory of making a beautiful pattern out of one's life which is scarcely more successful. However, it is quite impossible to deal other than superficially with this very long book within the limits of a review. Each section of Philip's life deserves a column to itself, for each is rich in analysis, in observation, in the thoughtful comments on life and living of an exceptionally intelligent man. The vivisection is at times a little too minute, the small incidents rather over elaborated, and there are certain episodes, like that of the Chinaman and Fräulein Cäcilie, which seem both repulsive and superfluous. Nevertheless, Mr. Maugham has done a big piece of work. His book is one of those novels which deserve and should receive the attention of all those who care for what is worth while in contemporary fiction.

TREASURE OF HIDDEN VALLEY

Hidden Valley, according to Mr. Emerson's tale, was tucked away in a range of the Rocky Mountains in Wyoming, and there a generation ago a young man had found a wonderful deposit of gold in nuggets and dust. But he never could find it again, although he spent years and much money in the effort. So, dying, he left to his son an account of the location of the valley as he was able. The son, having met early with misfortune in Wall Street, decided that a lost mine in a hidden valley offered a surer prospect of fortune than the pavements of New York. Events proved him, finally, to have been in the right, but many things befell before he found the fortune waiting for him in that faraway nook of the mountains. And even after that happy moment the San Francisco earthquake took a hand in his fate and so disturbed the skeleton of the Rockies that still more things befell him and the Hidden Valley. The modern West and the old-time West mingle in these events and in the characters and furnish many incidents typical of the region. One of the characters, Burail Hampton, was the hero of a former novel by Mr. Emerson. It is the West of big mining and irrigating schemes, of fierce political struggles, and of the still existing feud between cowmen and sheepmen of which the author writes. He seems to know the region well, to have, in fact, better knowledge of conditions and people than skill in their portrayal. Several love affairs, of which three come to a successful conclusion, furnish plenty of romance.

THE CRAYON CLUE

THE CRAYON CLUE. By Minnie J. Reynolds. Mitchell Kennerly. $1.35 net.

Miss Reynolds's novel deals with an intolerable condition of graft and tyranny existing in the public schools of "Bartown." The acme of oppressive requirements is reached when the teachers are compelled to use greasy chalk crayons which make blackboard work next to impossible. But these very crayons give "Billy Pen," a charming and clever young teacher, a clue which, as she follows it, sweeps her into a great campaign for honest government. She becomes a force to be reckoned with, "takes the stump," and is even invited to speak from the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church, where she preaches "a great sermon." After a hard fight and many exciting occurrences she carries all before her in both politics and love, demonstrating what a woman can do, once she is roused. The story is told with much vivacity and earnestness. The author "has been given the lion's share of the credit" in getting an amendment for equal suffrage through the Colorado Senate in the Winter of 1892," and for years afterward was an active factor in Colorado politics. In 1910 she campaigned the State of Washington for suffrage, with a great victory as the result, and she is still a prominent worker for the cause. She writes, therefore, with the authority of one who knows whereof she speaks, and her book is not only a story of interest but a good campaign document for the Women's Political Union.

JIMMIE'S GENTILITY

A galloping story is this, that takes the reader through a plot of wonderful convolutions and many incidents and situations of breath-taking excitement and hair-raising peril. So intent is the author upon telling his complicated and belief-baffling yarn that he does not stop to consider plausibility or concern himself with the reader's probable feelings. After leading his red-headed hero, with much facetious detail, through the period of childhood and youth, he launches him upon a wild chase which carries the young man from California, where the early scenes are laid, back and forth between Europe and the Pacific Coast, and finally leads him, in the pursuit of the truth about his ancestry, into weird adventures in Vienna, the Balkan States, and Dalmatia during the beginning of the war, and finally back to California again.

WOLFINE

It is a pretty poor novel nowadays that doesn't include at least one dog and one trained nurse. As a rule, the dog has to be content with something less than the title rôle, but "Wolfine" is an exception. The author is wise to give the best part to one who is far and away the best actor. Wolfine is a true creation, a dog rich in character with the highest instincts of the race, and when she is on the stage her support is unimportant. Unfortunately, she is out of sight much of the time, and during these intervals the story drags more or less, in spite of the fact that an accidental marriage and a rather vivid chapter on white slavery, a villain, a brave hero, and a fair heroine, combine to season the plot to the Summer Reader's taste. It is not a book to read through while you are getting to a place an hour or so out from the city. You settle down to it between New York and Chicago or on the dreary journey to the Adirondacks.

Flags of the World

A great body of useful information is presented by W. J. Gordon in his carefully prepared work entitled "Flags of the World, Past and Present." All the national flags are described and interesting facts are set forth concerning their histories and associations. The flags are pictured in colored illustrations that reproduce drawings by W. J. Stokoe; these pictures, the author guarantees, are accurate in color and proportion. (Frederick Warne & Co. $2.25.)

Great Painters

Excellent short biographies are given by Edwin Watts Chubb in "Sketches of Great Painters" of fifteen of the world's master artists; the list includes Raphael, Leonardo da Vinci, Rembrandt, Titian, Rubens, Michelangelo, Murillo, Velasquez, Van Dyck, Turner, Corot, Reynolds, Rosa Bonheur, Whistler and Millet. All of the biographies are illustrated. (Cincinnati: Stuart & Kidd Company, $2.)

Senator Beveridge's Book, What is Back of the War, presents to Americans a new aspect of the war.

Senator Beveridge went to Europe to find out the thought behind the war in Germany, in France, and in England, and the several Governments gave him exceptional opportunities to interview men and women in many walks of life, statesmen, soldiers, authors, philosophers, socialists, capitalists, laborers, peasants,—and set down their views with care. These conversations with representative men are likely to attain permanent historic significance.

He went into the trenches and among batteries in action. He saw battles. He visited hospitals, prison camps, and captured territories. And he tells what he saw there in his new book What is Back of the War. It presents much new authentic data to Americans on which to base judgment, to estimate resources, and to forecast the outcome.

Illustrated with many remarkable photographs. 650 pages. 8vo, cloth, $2.00 net. At all booksellers, or mailed anywhere on receipt of the price.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS FROM TIMES READERS

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

M. H.—Would you please give me a short account of the Misses Findlater, the authors of so many Scottish stories, whether either of them are married, and when they first began to write?

Jane Helen and Mary Findlater are the daughters of the Rev. Eric Findlater of Lochearnhead, Scotland. The first-named was born in Edinburgh and her sister in Lochearnhead. Both received their education at home. The first publication by Jane Helen was the "Green Graves of Balgowrie," and this was followed by a number of Scotch stories, among which are "Penny Moneypenny," "Crossings," and "Seven Scots Stories." In collaboration with Kate Douglas Wiggin she wrote "The Ladder to the Stars," and with her sister "The Affair at the Inn." The first publication of Mary Findlater was a volume of "Sonnets and Songs," and this was followed by a number of novels. She also collaborated with her sister Jane Helen in writing "Penny Moneypenny," "Crossings," and "Tales That Are Told." With Kate Douglas Wiggin she wrote "Rose of Joy." The sisters are unmarried and live at Southfield Mount, Paignton, Devon.

M. E. R.—Will you please give me a sketch of the life of Laurence Hope?

Mrs. Adela Florence Nicolson ("Laurence Hope") was the daughter of Arthur Cory, Colonel in the Indian Army, by his wife Fanny E. Griffin, and was born at Stoke House, Stoke Bishop, Gloucestershire, England, on April 9, 1868. She was educated at a private school in Richmond, and afterward went to reside with her parents in India. In 1889 she married Colonel Malcolm Hassel Nicolson of the Bengal Army, and settled at Madras. The name Violet, by which her husband called her, was not baptismal. Her first volume, "The Garden of Kama; and Other Love Lyrics from India, Arranged in Verse, by Laurence Hope," was published in 1901. It was generally reviewed as the work of a man. It was reissued in 1908 as "Songs from the Garden of Kama." Two other volumes, under the same pseudonym, "Stars of the Desert" and "Indian Love," appeared respectively in 1903 and posthumously in 1905. Some of her shorter poems have become popular in musical settings. She died of poisoning by perchloride of mercury on Oct. 4, 1904, at Dunmore House, Madras. She had suffered acute depression since her husband's death on Aug. 7, 1904. She was buried, like him, in St. Mary's Cemetery, Madras. She left one son, Malcolm Josceline Nicolson.

E. M. B.—Will you please inform me as to the authorship of the poem beginning:

A poor wayfaring man of grief
Hast often passed me on my way,
Who sued so humbly for relief
That I could never answer nay.

It was formerly printed in an old school book.

The poem quoted by our correspondent is "The Stranger and His Friend," by James Montgomery. It is printed in full in Dana's "Household Book of Poetry" and in several other collections of verse.

G. H.—I have a book, "The Vision of Rubeta; an Epic Story of the Island of Manhattan," published at Boston, 1838. Is it known who wrote it and is it of any special value?

It was written by Laughton Osborne. It is worth about $3.

E. H. R.—Will you tell me where I can get a copy of a book entitled "Mary of Burgundy," by Laura Costello?

"The Memoirs of Mary, Duchess of Burgundy," by L. C. Costello, was published in 1833 and has been long out of print. There is also a novel "Mary of Burgundy," by G. P. R. James, which was published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York, and which can doubtless be obtained from the publishers.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

E. D.—The line quoted by "M. R. J." in your issue of July 18: "Dark clouds reach out long fingers and touch the moon," is from a poem of Anne Reeve Aldrich, entitled "In Shadow," in the volume, "A Rose of Flame." The verse in which the lines occur reads:

Yes, go; the night is changing as we wait.
Black clouds stretch fingers out and clutch the moon.
The mists hang low; the winds begin to croon
Filling the air with wailings desolate.

C. A. COLLINS—Answering the inquiry of "P. M." in your issue of July 15, I think the only poetical embodiment of the story referred to is a French music hall song which has been translated as follows:

There was a youth who a maid did love,
But she was coy and hard to move,
She said to him—If my love you would win,
You must do for me a deadly sin;
She said—would you have me for your
Bring me your mother's heart for my dog's meal!
The youth ran home, and his mother he slew,
He cut out her heart, and back he flew.

But, as he ran, he fell to the ground,
And the bloody heart in the dust rolled round,
And, as the dust rolled in the clay,
It found a voice, and thus did say,
The mother heart spoke, soft, but clear,
"Did you hurt yourself when you fell, my dear?"

ADELA F. SMITH—In your issue of July 11 "S. L. S." asks for the author of the line: "Who breaks his birth's invidious bar." It is in Tennyson's "In Memoriam," LXIV. I give the stanza:

Who breaks his birth's invidious bar,
And grasps the skirts of happy chance,
And breasts the blows of circumstance,
And grapples with his evil star,

And makes by force his merit known.
And lives to clutch the golden keys;
To mold a mighty State's decrees,
And shape the whisper of a throne.

Answers to this appeal were also received from Herbert W. Lockwood, Glen Ridge, N. J.; Lindley M. Stevens, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and James McMahon, Ithaca, N. Y.

JOHN LOUGHNANE—Replying to the appeal of J. Sanson Johnstone in THE BOOK REVIEW of July 4, would say that the lines quoted by him are from "The Vision of Mirza," by Joseph Addison.

I. C. M.—In THE BOOK REVIEW of July 4 James Donaldson asks for the author of the poem, the first verse of which is:

I shine in the light of God,
His likeness stamps my brow;
Through the valley of death my feet have trod,
And I reign in glory now.

In reply to this request would say that the poem was written by the Rev. Luzerne Rae of Hartford, Conn., in 1852. Just after the burial of his wife, in the loneliness of the twilight hour, he felt her presence near, and was inspired to write the verses.

APPEALS TO READERS

H. M. C.—Will some reader kindly give me the words of "The Ballad of the Iron Cross" and the name of the author?

A. E.—I should be glad if any of your readers could enlighten me by whom a poem called "Philosophy," and starting "A bee went to a flower," was written and where obtainable.

L. S. A.—Will some reader please tell me the author and the entire verses of the poem which begins:

Two more little feet to tread the dusty way.

ALICE THOMSON.—Through your query page will some reader kindly tell me where to find the poem which contains these lines:

It was just before the last fierce charge
When two riders drew their rein
For a parting word and a touch of hand,
For they might not meet again.

I think it refers to a battle of the civil war.

V. A. M.—Can any reader tell me the author of the following lines:

God gives our years of failing strength
Indemnifying fleetness,
And to the day of youth a seeming length
Proportioned to their sweetness.

BOOKS WORTH READING

A WORK in two volumes entitled "The Parents' Guide" is published by the University Society; it was prepared by the editorial board of the society, of which William Byron Forbush is the chief. The matter contained in the two volumes is arranged in six departments: I., Home Equipment; II., Physical Life and Problems; III., Mental Life and Problems; IV., Social Life and Problems; V., Moral and Religious Life and Problems; VI., Personal Conduct and Character. The aim of the editors has been to provide information and advice helpful in the rearing of children; in carrying out this aim they have been aided by distinguished and authoritative men and women, including Dr. Charles W. Eliot, Archbishop Gibbons, Jane Addams, Dr. Charles F. Thwing, Felix Adler, Kate Douglas Wiggin, Professor Michael V. O'Shea, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, the Rev. Dr. John G. Hibben, Admiral Chadwick, Marion Harland, Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, and other well-known Americans. (University Society.)

A volume entitled "The Sacramental Principle" contains an expansion of four addresses delivered before the St. Paul's Lecture Society of London by the Rev. Paul B. Bull, Priest of the Community of the Resurrection at Mirfield, England. In this treatise the author undertakes to show that the sacramental system of his Church is not an artificial elaboration of ecclesiasticism, but rather an institution that "rests on the fundamental principles which lie at the very foundation of the nature of the universe." (Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.)

A volume entitled "The Normal Life" contains the substance of a course of lectures delivered in Baltimore recently by Dr. Edward T. Devine, under an arrangement made by the Social Service Corporation. Dr. Devine's lectures were the first of a series planned for successive years on the general theme of "Social Construction"; the view he gives of the normal life is very charming, and along with it he presents practical advice for those who desire to realize it. (Survey Associates, Inc. $1.)

A lesson in what are called "twentieth century" methods in religious, educational, and social activities" is set forth by Herbert Heebner Smith in a volume entitled "Publicity and Progress." The author, a newspaper man and an experienced advertiser, shows how publicity methods that have been successful in business may be extended to non-commercial institutions for the benefit of all the people. (George H. Doran Company. $1.)

In "The Well-Considered Garden" Mrs. Francis King, President of the Women's National Agricultural and Horticultural Association, tenders excellent practical advice to those interested in her subject, based on an extensive gardening experience. There are thirty-two full-page illustrations in the book, and four planting plans for color. (Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.)

The University of Toronto has published a pamphlet entitled "Review of Historical Publications Relating to Canada." In this pamphlet Professor George M. Wrong, H. H. Langton, and W. Stewart Wallace present a survey of Canadian historical literature that will be useful to the student and the general reader. ($1.50.)

Francis Newton Thorpe of Pennsylvania, who has made a great deal of money the last twenty-five years through growing and selling apples, peas, plums, grapes, and cherries, tells how he has done it in an illustrated volume entitled "An American Fruit Farm; Its Selection and Management for Profit and Pleasure." The book is thoroughly practical and contains a great deal of really valuable information. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50.)

THE WORLD OF BOOKS IN MIDSUMMER

MR. GEORGE HERBERT PERRIS'S book, "The Campaign of 1914 in France and Belgium," which Henry Holt & Co. will publish within the next few days, is an account of the conduct of the war and of scenes upon the battlefields and in the devastated fields and villages of the west, as seen by a war correspondent who is himself a pacifist. Mr. Perris is said to give in his book a just and impartial view of the part played by the several nations in bringing on the war. He also describes their differing methods of warfare. He has been the special correspondent at the front of The London Daily Chronicle and has had charge of that paper's corps of war correspondents.

A volume presenting "a plan to stop war and insure peace," by Alfred Owen Crozier, will have early publication by the Stewart & Kidd Company, Cincinnati. Its title is "Nation of Nations," and the author offers a draft of a "supreme constitution" and a framework of organization for such a confederation of Governments as would, the author thinks, by means of its own military and naval forces, protect all supporting nations against unjust attack and so guard the world's peace forever. The author compares and contrasts his plan with that of the League to Enforce Peace, of which ex-President Taft is the head, holding that the latter would bring about a "universal entangling alliance" based on unenforceable treaties, while his plan, since it would provide for a new separate government of governments, would offer means of regulation and enforcement.

McBride, Nast & Co. will have ready in two or three weeks "Modern Germany and Its Historians," by Antoine Guilland, newly translated into English. The author studies the five important historians, Niebuhr, Ranke, Mommsen, Sybel, and Treitschke, who have been most influential in fostering the doctrines of imperialism. A general introduction analyzes the comparatively recent growth of Germany's intense patriotism, and afterward the author takes up each historian separately and deals at length with his work and influence.

A China that will be rather upsetting to the conceptions of those who have not kept abreast of progress in the youngest republic will be described in Gardner L. Hastings's "Present-Day China," which the Century Company will bring out in the early Autumn. It will tell about oil fields where grow forests of derricks, an army in natty khaki suits, cotton mills that run night and day, the blight of child labor, suffragism, and aristocratic ladies who are proud of their large feet.

Frances Hodgson Burnett's "The Lost Prince," appearing serially in St. Nicholas, will be published shortly in book form by the Century Company. The tale is based on a legend which belongs to an actual country, but the beautiful land in which Mrs. Burnett imagines her hero's story of romance and mystery to take place is mythical. He is by birthright a Prince, although he does not know it, but makes his way about Europe in the guise of a little tramp, secretly carrying a sign and a message to certain men wherever he may find them, knowing only that he must obey and pass on in silence and having always before him the ideal of a noble Prince.

A new story of business and social life in New York, by William Hamilton Osborne, whose "Blue Buckle" and "Red Mouse" will be remembered, is promised by McBride, Nast & Co. for mid-September. It will be called "The Boomerang," and its story will turn upon the mysterious disappearance of the son of a trust magnate and the suspicion of being responsible for it that is cast upon the hero. Time, work, and fate bring about the situation which makes the title particularly suitable for the story.

A biography of Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, by Beckles Willson, is announced for publication in the early Autumn by Houghton Mifflin Company. It is the only biography authorized by the Strathcona family, who have turned over to the author a mass of private documents and letters which are said to constitute practically an inner history of Canada's years of spectacular growth and throw new light on the development of the great Northwest, the building of the Canadian Pacific, the Red River uprising, and other factors in Canadian history.

The Yale University Press will bring out this month "Civilization and Climate," by Dr. Ellsworth Huntington, in which he summarizes the results of years of study of the influence exerted by climate on civilization. Dr. Huntington has observed the work of several thousand factory operatives and students at all seasons and therefrom has deduced an approximate measure of the climatic elements which influence human efficiency. His study of past and present climatic variations has convinced him that when the great countries of antiquity rose to eminence they enjoyed a climatic stimulus comparable with that of the leading nations of the present time.

HARRY A. FRANCK, whose "Vagabond Journey Around the World" and "Zone Policeman 88" have had many readers, has been knocking around in South America for many months, sometimes doing police duty, sometimes managing a moving picture show, and again tramping on his way, looking at life and taking pictures. Recently a friend in New York received a postcard from him saying that he expected to cross into British Guiana in a few days, after eleven months in Brazil. After doing the three Guianas and Venezuela in this fashion he will put into a book some of the experiences thus gained in South America.

Dr. J. William White, author of "A Textbook of the War," Emeritus Professor of Surgery in the University of Pennsylvania, while in London recently was entertained by Premier Asquith and other officials. He has now gone to Paris with a party of surgeons and nurses, where he will take charge of a floor of the American Ambulance Hospital.

The prize of $100 offered by the Christian Women's Peace Movement for the best short story embodying Christian ideals of peace has been awarded to James Church Alvord of Littleton, Mass., for a story called "The Iron Cross." It is to be issued at once in popular form at 10 cents the copy, and may be ordered from M. H. Leavis, West Medford, Mass.

Hugh Walpole is still in Russia where, after making a study of the attitude of the Russians toward their present situation for a London daily, he has taken up Red Cross work, at first in the Moscow hospitals and then at the front.

A recent account in an English periodical of book sales says that only a few books are not affected by the war. These are mainly non-fiction publications that deal in one way or another with the great conflict. But Thomas Hardy's works are included in the list of those for which there is still a demand.

Louis Untermeyer is taking a long vacation at Kennebunkport, Me., where Booth Tarkington, Mrs. Deland, and several other authors have their Summer homes.

J. D. Beresford says that the Beresfords are all "Conservative to the backbone," except himself, and that he "can boast the distinction of being the only Socialist the family has ever produced."

Herbert Adams Gibbons's "The New Map of Europe" has gone into its third printing, the new edition having had added an index and a fifth map which shows the changes in the Balkans and other Near Eastern territory since 1870.

Mitchell Kennerley has been elected President of the Anderson Galleries, New York City.

Booth Tarkington's "The Turmoil" has had first place in The Bookman's list of best sellers for four successive months.

INDIANS OF GREATER NEW YORK

INDIANS OF GREATER NEW YORK. By Alanson Skinner. THE HOPI. By Walter Hough. Nos. 3 and 4 in the series, Little Histories of North American Indians. Cedar Rapids, Iowa: The Torch Press. $1 each.

THIS admirable series aims to present authentic, sympathetically written pictures of the life of the American aborigines, devoting, usually, a volume to each tribe. The two preceding volumes dealt with "The Navaho," written by Oscar H. Lipps of the Indian School at Carlisle, and "The Iowa," by William Harvey Miner. The plan of the series provides for the writing of each book by an authority who shall as far as possible avail himself of original sources and present much quotation from the writings of those who were in touch with the Indians, or contemporary with the events described, in order that the accounts of customs and events may be both accurate and vivid.

Mr. Skinner, who writes the volume on "The Indians of Greater New York," is assistant curator of anthropology in the American Museum of Natural History, New York City. It should have particular interest for all New Yorkers who aspire to even a superficial knowledge of the history of their city, and it ought also to make acceptable supplementary reading for history students in secondary schools. He gives some account of the three tribes from which came the Indian bands who dwelt in and near Manhattan Island 300 years ago, pictures their life, their manners and customs, and recounts the story of their relations with the whites in peace and in war. One chapter is devoted to an account of the traces of Indian occupation still existing round about New York City and others describe the relics that have been found in this region. A bibliography closes the volume, which has for its frontispiece a map of this locality showing the places where Indian shell deposits have been found. The book, which is written in a very readable style, shows careful study of the subject.

The author of the volume on "The Hopi," Walter Hough, is curator of the Division of Ethnology, United States National Museum, at Washington. In a brief preface Mr. Hough speaks frankly of his respect and admiration for the character of these Indians as a people, and his affection for many individuals—sentiments which are shared by most white men who have gone among them. A sentence in this prefatory note describing the Hopi as "a tribe of Indians living at the threshold of modern civilizing influences and still retaining in great measure the life of the ancient housebuilders of the unwatered lands," will be liked for its aptness by all who know much of the Hopi people, and will stimulate the interest in his subject of those to whom it is new.

Mr. Hough, who has spent a good deal of time in the Hopi villages, treats his subject comprehensively and at the same time with such accuracy and extent of detail as to give a very complete picture of their life and character. He describes the country in which they live, their towns, their social and religious life, manners and customs, arts and crafts, amusements, history, traditions and myths, and devotes one long chapter to a number of brief biographies of important personages among them.

Mr. Hough writes in an easy and graceful style, which, together with his sympathetic viewpoint, makes his study of the Hopi people a fascinating picture. The volume has an interesting frontispiece from a photograph of an Indian mother and child.

A NEW VIEW OF THE JAPANESE EMPIRE

THE JAPANESE EMPIRE AND ITS ECONOMIC CONDITIONS. By Joseph d'Autremer. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

JUST now any writer who can throw light on the Far Eastern situation, especially on Japan, white hot and puzzling at its centre, is welcome. An unfortunate amount has been written, much of it of such a nature that the result to the public has been far from enlightenment. "The Japanese Empire and Its Economic Conditions" would seem a suspiciously comprehensive title, but a few pages and the reader is convinced that it is justified. M. d'Autremer knows Japan. And he has written, with a minimum of deviation, what he knows and not what he thinks of Japan.

The result is not only an exceedingly valuable volume, but one which inspires the utmost confidence. M. d'Autremer's knowledge is obviously first hand. The amount and conciseness of it are amazing. Here is practical information on everything, it would seem, from the cost of living in Tokio to the Constitution, from railway trips to army organization, from manufactures to manners. He tells you how much it costs to get to Japan and what to do with your money after you get there. He gives you hotel rates and the mean temperatures in all the leading cities of the empire. He gives you weights, measures, currency; he describes all the curious vegetables you are likely to encounter in the course of dinner. In short, from the point of view of the prospective traveler in Japan, the volume is indispensable.

Its appeal, however, extends beyond that narrow field. What M. d'Autremer has to say of Japan's economic condition is valuable. His study of the trade and commercial activities of the country is marked with the same dry succinctness. He has a business man's knowledge of the textile industry, that of ceramics, of metallurgy, and his review of these fields is direct and enlightening. It is the cotton goods industry which has showed the most marked development in the past two decades, and it is here that M. d'Autremer finds the seeds of Japan's future industrial problems. He hints rather darkly at the conditions which are implied by socks selling at retail in China at 5 cents, towels at 2 cents: "It is true that when one knows the starvation wages of the Japanese factories, one is less astonished. All the Japanese imitation is execrable, but for the Chinese, who have not the means to pay dear, it is precisely what he wants."

It is in China that M. d'Autremer sees Japan's future—a future both troubled and successful. The rest of the world, he claims, has greatly overestimated the industrial "yellow peril." Japan is becoming less and less a good customer for Europe and America. Where it will compete with Europe is in China with the cotton trade; there is every indication that Japan will before very long establish a monopoly of that market.

One of the hampering factors in Japan's industrial advance in the immediate future is Socialism, with all the revolt against oppressive industrial conditions which it implies. Socialism has already sent down roots, says M. d'Autremer, and in the event of the appearance of "a man who knew how to use the malcontents, with one stroke a Socialist Party, now chaotic, would be effectively created." The burden of two wars in the course of ten years has been heavy, and protest has begun to articulate itself.

The workman was the first to strike, and, indeed, his lot is a most lamentable one, and the Japanese, who are not wilfully blind, are the foremost in recognizing this. The director of the School of Industry at Tokio, for example, does not hesitate, in a long article published by the Chu o ko ron Review, to demand that there should be more protection, and better measures for the preservation of health and morality for the working classes. In 200 communities of workmen which he examined he found frightful corruption and deplorable morals. The protection of minors, especially of young girls, did not exist. The working women are penned up in big rooms and often forbidden to go out more than once a week.

Just why the betterment of industrial conditions argues inevitably the spread of Socialism is not clear, but M. d'Autremer's obvious bias is not apparent to any very damaging extent throughout this volume, which to the student of the Japan of today should be of great service.

FOLLOWING "MAD ANTHONY'S" STEPS TO STONY POINT

How to Enjoy a Fine Summer Day of Swimming, Mountain Climbing and Historic Associations Beside the Glorious Hudson River, While Retracing Intrepid Commander's Famous March.

By Sarah Comstock.

"YOUNG man," I says, 'likin's one thing,' I says, 'and loving's another. Some people may like this place, but I don't; I love old Stony Point.'"

And when William Ten Eyck solemnly tells you what he said to the debonnair youth who had casually and patronizingly observed, "Nice spot—like it pretty well," as he looked over the historic battlefield, you don't in the least wonder that he loves old Stony Point. For here he was born, here his father and his father's father before him lived and died, here this old man's boyhood and young manhood were spent, in the midst of one of our greatest national traditions. His grandfather David ran the ferry which carried soldiers and officers back and forth during the Revolution. In William's boyhood days the memories of the War for Independence were yet young, and he used to hear its participants exchange their tales of stolen marches and battlefields and plundering British and gallant victories—it is to him a tale of only yesterday.

When the State of New York set aside the battleground of Stony Point, one of the most beautiful heights of land that rise above the Hudson River, to be a park for the people, a playground, and a memorial forever to one of America's bravest conquests, what could have been more fitting than to put William Ten Eyck in charge, loving guardian of the ground he has known all the days of his long life? There you will find him, watchfully and affectionately caring for the park, welcoming every visitor who shows any interest in the beauty and wealth of history which this remarkable beak of land possesses; and if you're lucky enough to arrive on a day when the crowd is absent, and to find favor in the eyes of William Ten Eyck, you will have many a good old story to bear away with you besides the bracer which the winds of the Highlands and the smell of green out-of-doors offer you to carry back to dusty New York.

What a cocktail it would be if such a compound could be served in any restaurant by way of appetizer! A dash of Hudson breezes, a whiff of new-cut grass, another dash of blue ripples, another whiff of leaves just washed by midsummer rain, and a finishing touch of black-eyed susans all aglow in a field! It's a great season for black-eyed susans, by the way, this Summer of 1915; have you noticed them? I know fields that look as if old King Midas had been traveling their way; not such a bad kind of gold coin, those!

When Mad Anthony marched upon Stony Point the night was dark and the climb was stiff. A century and more has made extensive alterations in the approach. Instead of wading through marshes and scrambling, clinging, like Alpine climbers up the wall of rock, you of the twentieth century may approach comfortably by way of the West Shore Railroad, which deposits you almost within a stone's throw of the park gate.

The regular trains stop at Stony Point station, and from there you may walk, or hire a conveyance, for a mile of beautiful driving road out to the park; but the train which arrives at noon makes a special stop at the park itself, and the late afternoon train returning also makes this stop, which affords you over four hours for the visit. You will find graceful, curving paths to wander over, shady spots for a picnic lunch, a fine dock from which to dive, with an excellent swimming cove—and then, the story of Mad Anthony!

There are not many stories like this one. Perhaps no one but Wayne could have performed just the sort of utterly mad feat which he performed that July night in 1779. But the madness turned out to be a vital turning point in the war, a triumph which set his name ringing wherever the American flag floated.

"Our streets rang for many days with nothing but the name of General Wayne," wrote Dr. Rush. "You are remembered constantly next to our good and great Washington, over our claret and Madeira. You have established the national character of our country; you have taught our enemies that bravery, humanity, and magnanimity are the national virtues of the Americans."

These were the stars, then, that our national wagon was hitched to, even as long ago as 1779, and we don't seem to have unhitched it as yet!

The American position had become critical in the Summer of 1779, for the British had taken possession of both Stony Point and Verplanck's Point, which you will see directly across the river. The stretch is narrow just here; pinched between Peekskill Bay on the south, and Haverstraw Bay on the north, the water is merely a narrow gateway to the upper river, and the possession of the opposite points amounted to holding the key to that gate.

West Point was threatened.

Washington realized that his primary task was to recover these points. Accordingly, he moved the most of his army up from Middlebrook to the region of the Hudson Highlands. Sir Henry Clinton, who had taken the two points personally on the 1st of June, saw what Washington's move meant, and set to work to reinforce the forts; the air teemed with oncoming storm. "The little Gibraltar," as the British called Stony Point, they claimed was unconquerable; their new fortifications were strong to the utmost degree, and the situation of the point was a fortress in itself.

Look at this situation from the entrance gate which now rises in an arch above the modern road. Just below you lies a deep ravine, which you cross today on a bridge, and through which the railroad passes. That ravine has been floored with earth for a railroad bed; but in old days it was an inlet of water and marsh, almost impassable; Stony Point at high tide was practically an island.

"Why, I used to get in a scow and go from one o' my grandfather's, who lived at King's Ferry at the upper end of the inlet, to my other grandfather's, who lived at the lower end," Mr. Ten Eyck will tell you.

And not only was this point surrounded by water, but it has a rock face that is almost perpendicular on all sides, and rises to some 700 feet in elevation at its highest peak.

Washington knew well enough what daring it would require to retake such a "Gibraltar." Accordingly he took inventory of his officers, and the upshot was that he picked Wayne.

"General, I'll storm hell if you will only plan it," Mad Anthony is said to have replied.

So the plan was laid, and Wayne, having gathered his men, waited for the low tide which gave a wet but possible approach through the morass on the landward side.

Somehow the Americans contrived to keep their advance absolutely secret. During the afternoon of July 15 they were approaching Stony Point, marching over the steep and winding mountain roads which led thither from the interior. Finally, about 8 o'clock in the evening, the patriot soldiers arrived at Springsteel's farm, where they were halted until the hour was ripe for the desperate dash.

That old farmhouse is standing today, and you may see it for yourself if you are enterprising enough to travel the additional two miles or thereabouts which a visit to it requires. It lies up the Cricket Town Road, to the rear of the village of Stony Point.

If you are to visit it, the best way is to leave the train at the regular village station, then walk, or drive, out this country road. You must pass the estate of Brewster Allison; a little beyond, you will be directed to "Bill Miller's place," which was once the Springsteel farm. It has changed hands more than once since the seventeen hundreds, but it is almost as it was on the night when Wayne halted his army on the farmland around this old dwelling, formed them into two solid columns, with picked men in a company leading each column. The "forlorn hope," to which General Hull refers in his memoir, consisted of twenty volunteers bearing axes with which they were to blaze a trail if possible.

If you are a gallant enough patriot to trudge to see this halting ground, you will be almost literally following the American march, for you will now trace the road out to the Point, which runs in the general direction of the old road. From the centre of the town the distance to the battleground is about one mile. While the army halted on Springsteel's farm they were given bits of paper to put in their hats, that they might be recognized in the black night's battle to come.

Orders had been secretly spread among the surrounding farms that every dog be killed the day before, so now, when at 11:30 the men set out, they marched through a dead silence. The orders were that not a gun was to be fired, only the still bayonet might be used in the assault; and any man who should load his musket was to be put to death immediately. The watchword given was the famous phrase, "The Fort's Our Own," and that phrase you can read today, graven in the stone of the entrance gate, to be a memory to our children's children.

The two columns marched out toward the Point parallel, but, upon approaching the deep marsh which cut it off from the mainland, they divided, Wayne leading his division toward the south, while the other division, under Colonel Butler, turned left, to the north, near the landing of old King's Ferry.

The way had been paved for this advance by an old negro slave named Pompey, and his story can be read in Lossing's "Pictorial Field Book of the Revolution." It is told, also, by William Ten Eyck, for it was the grandfather of this old park guardian who told it to the famous historian Lossing.

"Mr. Ten Eyck, the old ferryman at Stony Point, informed me that he knew this negro well," says Lossing; and that ferryman's grandson today relates very much the same tale. Pompey belonged to a loyal Whig, and he was quite as loyal himself—and certainly quite as cunning.

After the British had situated themselves at the Point, Pompey visited their fort, offering strawberries for sale. This looked an innocent matter; and as the Summer days brought on more ripe fruit, the old negro came to be a familiar figure around the British fort, and the soldiers and officers bought berries and cherries of him day after day. They little guessed that he was carrying back every significant utterance he heard, turning over information regularly to his master.

At last, as the middle of July approached, Pompey told the British that his master would not let him come in the daytime any more. "We can't spare your fruit," said an officer warmly, and forthwith the gulleless-looking old darkey was given the countersign that he might come and go freely at night.

On July 15 that countersign was "The Fort's Our Own." Promptly this fact was communicated to the patriot officers by Pompey, and it was given out as the watchword of the Americans, their inspiration for the terrible scaling of summits and midnight battle which lay before them.

Look down from the entrance bridge at which you stand, and think of what that assault meant. Pompey had gone ahead of the American forces, engaging one sentinel after another in conversation while two men accompanying him, and disguised as farmers, gagged the sentinels.

And now, wholly unknown to the British on the height, the Americans pushed on, wading through the water at the foot of the precipitous rocks, dashed straight up that perpendicular wall, cleared away the abattis, passed on to the breastwork, and, as Hull relates, "mounted the parapet and entered the fort at the point of the bayonet." In the darkness, the two bodies of Americans, approaching the top from two directions, might not have recognized their own fellows but for the bit of white paper in each hat.

"And now," says Lossing, "the garrison was aroused from their slumbers, and instantly the deep silence of the night was broken by the roll of the drum, the loud cry 'To arms! To arms!' the rattle of musketry from the ramparts and behind the abattis, and the roar of cannon, charged with the deadly grapeshot, from the embrasures. In the face of this terrible storm the Americans forced their way through every obstacle, until the van of each column met in the centre of the works, where each arrived at the same time."

Wayne received a shot in the head just before the climax of the charge, and he believed that it was a fatal shot. He sank to his knees but, with the aid of his officers, struggled up to his feet again and cried, "March on! Carry me into the fort, for I will die at the head of my column!"

He was helped to the fort, and by that time the pain of the shot was lessening. The order had been already given that when the works were forced, each man was to shout the watchword loudly; and Mad Anthony, sanest of Anthonys that he was, was able to join his valiant soldiers in their lusty shout. At 2 o'clock in the morning of July 16, he sent the following brief message to his chief:

Stoney Point, 16th July, 1779.
2 o'clock A. M.

Dear Genl.

The fort & Garrison with Colo. Johnston are ours. Our officers and men behaved like men who are determined to be free.

Yours most Sincerely,
ANTY WAYNE.

Genl. Washington.

The utmost mercy was shown the conquered British, not one life being taken after the capture of the fort and the raising of the flag. The commander, Johnston, with 543 men under him, was taken prisoner. Out in the waters of the Hudson below, a group of British vessels which had been lying at anchor, quietly slipped away to safer quarters down the river, and an early morning firing from Stony Point upon Verplanck's Point across the narrow water, made that promontory "our own" as well. America, not Britain, now possessed the key to the upper Hudson, and West Point was no longer in danger. Washington realized that it was not feasible to attempt to hold Stony Point as a post, so an evacuation was ordered, after all stores of the enemy were taken and their works destroyed. But they were thoroughly driven out, and the victory of the Americans was so decisive as to turn the tide of the war emphatically. It is commonly accepted that Wayne's feat was one of the most brilliant events of the entire Revolution, and Congress rewarded him with a medal and a vote of thanks.

The battleground, which is now a State Park of remarkable beauty, is in charge of the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society, and this organization has carefully traced the locality of each redoubt and marked every one. You will recognize them by the staff on each. Several cannon are posted where the old redoubts once stood; although modern in making, the carriages of these guns are modeled after the heavy pattern used in the Revolution.

Follow the path which leads out to the extreme tip of the point, and you can visit the lighthouse, which stands at an elevation of 690 feet, ten feet lower than the highest redoubt peak of the park. Every boat which passes up and down the stately river is guided by the long rays from this light, night after night. Below it, at the end of a woodsy trail, stands the bell tower, close to the shore. On foggy nights this bell rings the hours through, while above it a red flame flashes far out over the water, guiding every doubtful boat. The two towers stand on United States Government land, adjoining the State reservation.

Another path leads down a long slope to the shore, where a trim little modern dock and attractive bathhouses await the swimmer. Here's a cool dip for a hot day. This point is close to the old landing of King's Ferry of Revolutionary days.

This ferry was part of the route from New England into New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Its first master was one King, and later on, in war time, David Ten Eyck came to be ferryman. In the ferryhouse the present William Ten Eyck was born. Another old Ten Eyck homestead is still standing in the park.

Near the entrance to the park stands the Lodge, the front room of which is used as a museum, and its relics are precious. There's many an old treasure here, picked up after the battle. You will see a canteen and a powder horn, mortars and ramrods. A section of a tree trunk, cut within recent years, contains a bullet which must have remained there through all these years.

One delightful treasure is a copy of The Boston and Country Gazette Journal of Aug. 2, 1779, in which is related the story of the Stony Point conquest. "Our men have destroyed the Fort and brought off all the artillery and stores," rung the ancient news item.

While you are visiting the old battleground your eye will catch sight of an enticing modern sign at the entrance to certain secluded paths, reading simply "Camp Anthony Wayne." Your curiosity will be less than normal if you don't follow one of these little winding paths and see where it leads.

Suddenly, upon a commanding height, there comes in sight a military camp, bustling with active life, its flag floating from the high knoll where once the British outpost was situated. Soldiers move briskly about, officers shout, there's life and hustling military activity going on. This is the camp of the Boys' Brigade, where, all the long Summer days through, from reveille at 6 to taps at 10, as many as a hundred boys or more drill and play and swim and eat and march and hold sham battles—scrambling, with their artillery, over the identical walls where Mad Anthony and his men scrambled almost a century and a half ago.

The guns of West Point above boom down the heights upon their ears, the memory of war days haunts the heights where they hold happy camp. They stand for the young America that Wayne and his contemporaries fought for, and they're the sort of American boys that those old forefathers might well be proud of.

LEADING EDUCATORS OF THE COUNTRY TELL WHAT SCHOOLS SHOULD DO

Opinions on Preparatory Methods Expressed by University and College Presidents at the Request of The New York Times.

BELOW is the second installment of letters to THE NEW YORK TIMES from university and college Presidents on the subject of preparatory school methods.

In view of the widespread interest in the school question at this season, when parents all over the country are thinking about where to send their children for the coming academic term, the educators were asked for their opinions on courses of study, needed changes in methods and curricula, and the relative merits of different kinds of secondary schools for boys and girls.

Methods Are Too Superficial.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I shall not attempt to say anything about the training of girls, except that what I have to say about the training of boys I believe applies in large measure to the training of girls.

As to needed changes, I am firm in the opinion that the change most needed is greater thoroughness in fundamentals. There are exceptions, of course, but as a general proposition it can be stated with confidence that we are superficial in our school methods. We try to teach too much at once. We try to cover too much ground in the one subject within a given time, and we do not teach and test with sufficient persistency.

I don't hesitate to be more definite and say that we give too little attention to writing, arithmetic, and reading—the "three R's." They are the tools all have to work with, and hence the students should be able to use these tools with accuracy and facility, so that they may not be impeded in their more advanced work.

The students should be assigned only to such tasks as they can perform satisfactorily, if they work conscientiously, and then they should be held to a strict accountability.

The tests should take account of quality of performance rather than quantity, and every possible effort should be made to cultivate in the learner honest pride in work well done.

I am not in favor of specialized preparation for entrance to engineering and other professional courses. Let the specializing come later. Give us the boys who are sound in the general subjects.

Particularly should attention be given to drill in speaking and writing English.

As to military training I hold that all the able-bodied youth, educated at the public expense, should be prepared in some degree for military defense service. At least, some attention should be given to military drill. This would supply an immediate need, quite apart from the military service we hope will never be required—namely, a more prompt and complete obedience to orders given under authority, that is to say, discipline. This drill might be made also to improve the physique of the boys and make them more capable of acting promptly and intelligently in emergencies.

The entire burden for improvement should by no means rest upon the shoulders of the schools; the colleges should do their share, through a sympathetic co-operation, particularly bearing in mind that only a small per cent. of the high school students enter college.

Opposes "Get Wise Quick" Ways.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am encouraged in believing that the schools are striving to do a more thorough work. Of course my view is all tinged by consideration of the quality of college entrance work. In many things this improves. But everywhere is needed a sterner regard for precision of quality in all the rudimentary work.

Basic principles, for instance, in Algebra should be held paramount to any and all instances. Syntax should be conceived of as the requisite ground of literature—whether in Greek or French. Mastery of paradigm and construction cannot have its absence offset by any superficial amount of translation.

I do think that subjects of academy grade are too numerous. Fewer topics with persistent drill in and by these are the more acceptable way. The "get wise quick" can never supplant festina lente.

Also I am sure that oral English is treated too much as a Cinderella. Good reading aloud—quick withal, intelligent, vocal interpretation—should be a rule where now it is sadly an exception. The poverty of vocabulary is one note of the prevailing neglect of the ancient classics. Logotype phrase and term do half-duty for the keen right word.

But I am hopeful that an intenser spirit of thoroughness is entering all of our schools. In general, study should be far stouter and differences should be discountenanced. This, too, is the precept most needed today in all our colleges.

President Hamilton College.

English a Neglected Study.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The kind of preparatory school I prefer is one in which the chief emphasis is placed upon thorough, systematic habits of study, with fine scholarship and ideals of service held before the young people. Athletics should have a universal interest and application, but should not be absorbing. The study which is most neglected, I dare say, is English. The very finest tool with which the student constantly works, whether he writes, speaks, or thinks, is the one which is most neglected. The mother tongue is the medium of expression and impression. If our preparatory schools do not begin doing better work in this field, some one will have to insistently demand a reform. I do not feel that military training in the secondary schools is of great importance. However, I would not seriously object to it.

W. G. CLIPPINGER,
President Otterbein University.
Westerville, Ohio.

Too Wide Range of Subjects.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Many of our "preparatory schools" are trying to cover too wide a range of subjects, sacrificing thoroughness to scope. This should be remedied. Preparatory education should be thorough in the things that are essentially fundamental in a good education. Pupils should be thoroughly grounded. For example, in spelling, grammar, composition, rhetoric, mathematics, history, and in whatever languages they select in addition to their mother tongue.

Lack of thoroughness is the thing that is most observed in students when they reach college. There are some things without which one cannot be well educated. In these things the preparatory schools should be thorough. The time is ripe for Spanish to be introduced into our preparatory schools generally—this because of the commercial opportunities offered the United States in the South American republics.

Generally speaking, the work in our preparatory schools needs to be made more thorough rather than broadened in scope, and, above all, character building is of the utmost importance. Without integrity of character, all education is relatively a failure.

As to military training in preparatory schools, somehow I have a feeling that it would be an awful day for America were we to begin a course which would instill into all of our youths a spirit of militarism.

W. L. PICKARD,
President Mercer University.
Macon, Ga.

From the Religious Viewpoint.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Having no special theory to advance as to the changes, if any, that are needed in the method being pursued by our preparatory schools, I shall not enter upon a discussion of that subject. I will say only that I believe it is exceedingly desirable for every preparatory school except the public high schools, which are patronized entirely by pupils who still live in the homes of their parents, to provide an active and positive Christian influence. This is necessary because most of their students are passing through the most critical period of their lives.

I am absolutely opposed to any greater extension of military training among our schools. I have no sympathy with the idea that preparedness is a defense against war, but believe, on the contrary, that it is natural for any man to seek an opportunity for doing that which he is well prepared to do.

Advantages of the High School.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The best possible place for the average American boy and girl to be prepared for college is the American high school. Here the essentials of democracy are instilled along with the less important book information. Here the student is far more likely to be compelled to learn, for there is no fear of loss of tuition or fees. In too many high schools, however, athletics is now lowering the standard of scholarship, exactly as it is doing in too many colleges and universities. In high schools intra-mural athletics should have place. Inter-high-school contests have proved their worthlessness.

Any regular four-year high-school course should be accepted as giving adequate training for college work. The colleges are rapidly coming to this position. The high schools should insist on it. Many a lad receives his first college impulse after three years in high school. Shall he be compelled to study an additional year or two before he will be admitted to college, merely because he has not taken a "college preparatory" course? Educational nonsense! It is mental training, not information, that should admit to college. Yet information is needed in life. And soon, I believe, the time will come when no student will be graduated from an American high school unless he can use a typewriter. That is the twentieth century equivalent of the eighteenth century quill. Every American boy and girl should be taught to use it.

Military training in high school or preparatory school? Never! Keep American youth from military ideals as long as possible. In college, perhaps, it is not bad to train young men to a familiarity with the use of arms; with military formation, drill, and discipline; but not in high school. That is too impressionable an age. We wish the generations to come to be generations of peace; we wish them also able to care for the nation and its heritage. But that training should not be given until the easily molded years of youth have passed.

In Young Women's Schools.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since Rockford College draws its constituency from all parts of the country, (from twenty States in 1914-15,) my impressions in regard to preparatory education are based upon general rather than local information. They are, however, confined to the education of young women, and are based more upon experience with public than with private schools.

I have observed that the average young woman entering college is far better prepared in Latin than in modern language. The necessity in many small schools of combining modern languages with some other study under one instructor proves a serious handicap to the student who enters college. Mathematics is far better taught than science, as a result of insufficient laboratory equipment. The uniform college entrance requirements in English have standardized the work in literature, but not in composition. There is no uniformity in the ability of students to write an accurate English sentence. The student from the private school writes better than the average student from the public school; this is, no doubt, due to the fact that the teacher in private schools has smaller classes than the high school teacher.

The change most needed in preparatory education is the fostering of an increased sense of responsibility on the part of the student. The average young woman in her freshman year at college is too dependent upon her instructors and notably deficient in the ability to see the ultimate end that is to be accomplished by a given course. This lack of mental initiative, as serious to the young woman entering the business world as to the college freshman, might be more effectively corrected by the preparatory schools. Methods of increasing this spirit of independence will present themselves to any efficient teacher who sees clearly the goal that all educators desire.

President Rockford College.
Rockford, Ill.

Reform in College Requirements.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We are all agreed that the secondary schools, like the colleges, are capable of improvement. But with the discussion of ways and means the difficulty begins. This is due in large measure to a certain vagueness of idea in our minds as to just what we are striving for. If the only aim is to get a student into college, the school fulfills its mission by doing exactly what the college prescribes and attempting nothing more. As a matter of fact, this has been the tendency for some time, with the result that narrowness of curriculum, rigidity of requirement, and inflexibility of method have acquired an unwarrantable importance.

If, on the other hand, the preparatory course is looked upon as part of a vital process which continues, instead of beginning, in the college and afterward through life—the final end being the development of the person—then the function of the school is a different matter, allowing a larger freedom and bringing that most important educational force, the personality of the teacher, into fuller play. The character of the preparatory school and its methods must depend chiefly on the attitude of the college toward the two views I have named.

My sympathies are with the plan that will give the preparatory school a larger freedom, if this can be done, as I believe it can, without any sacrifice, but with some improvement, in the quality of scholarship and in the preparation for college work. The first step must come from the college. The college might further widen the scope of the preparatory work it will accept, and still leave entrance into college more difficult than entrance into the Holy City, the latter having many avenues of approach, "on the east three gates, on the north three gates, on the south three gates, and on the west three gates."

With the co-operation of the college the methods of the preparatory school will be improved by laying a greater emphasis than is possible under the present system on the following three things:

(1) Thoroughness. This is a crying need. The colleges complain loudly of slipshod work in the preparation of their students. The attempt is to cover too much ground in a limited time. Quantity should yield to quality. The quantitative requirement in foreign language, for example, might be somewhat reduced and the qualitative requirement correspondingly increased.

(2) Appreciation. The ordinary student regards the period of preparation as a sort of wilderness or barren stretch through which he must pass in order to reach a pleasant land beyond. This is wrong. The preparatory studies must be seen to have value in themselves. The masterpieces of literature, for example, which fall within this list were not written to illustrate the principles of grammar, logic, or composition; they make an appeal to life. If the student does not discover this and acquire some appreciation of the true, the good, and the beautiful along the pathway of his preparatory course, he is simply wasting time.

(3) Purpose. That attitude of mind known as earnestness of purpose is always a factor in achievement, and some way should be devised for giving it a fuller recognition among the preparatory qualifications. Though it will not take the place of knowledge or ability, it possesses a tremendous power for extending the radius, so to speak, of the knowledge and ability which the student commands. Certain allowances—as in the matter of conditions—may properly be granted to the earnest student which in other cases it would be unwise to do.

The ideal place for training of this kind is probably the well-conducted private preparatory school, where the teacher comes in closest contact with the individual boy or girl—the mature mind with the growing mind—and exerts an influence that is personal rather than official. It goes without saying that only those teachers should engage in this work who themselves possess the qualities which we wish to see developed in the pupil.

AUGUST IN THE THEATRES OF NEW YORK

BETWEEN SEASONS

BACK HOME." That is the name of the book of stories Irvin Cobb wrote out of the memory of his youth in Kentucky, and it is the name of the play which Bayard Veiller, with some collaboration from Cobb, has fashioned from that book for the New York stage. It was tried out in Atlantic City not long ago, and the Selwyns will present it in New York some time this coming season.

Its rôle of rôles is Judge Priest, kindly ruler of an old Kentucky "cotehouse," whose people are the people back home, whose story and portrait the Cobb book is. There has been no final announcement as to who would play this part, and though Thomas A. Wise has been mentioned it is possible that he might not be free to create the rôle at the time when the New York production is made. The part is by no means easy to fill, but the difficulty can hardly be called insuperable, for it would seem that if, at the eleventh hour, it were found necessary, Mr. Cobb himself might be persuaded to assume the rôle. Why not? He is not an actor now, to be sure, but then a year ago he was not a lecturer, and a few years back he was not an after-dinner speaker—not by a long shot.

The tissue of the play has been taken from the stuff of all "Back Home," but the framework has been fashioned from one of the tales in particular, that splendid, stirring, savorous chapter called "Words and Music," wherein the old Judge turns the current of a murder trial by summoning into the old Forked Deer County courtroom the memories of the war of the Confederacy. It is one of those stories they have in mind who speak of Irvin Cobb as the successor to Bret Harte.

'Orrors.

THE Grand Guignol season at the Coronet in London has been reaping the benefit of the amenity of the Entente, and the English reviewers deal with a sort of studied gentleness with the program brought from Montmartre, though it continues to display a considerable percentage of what the British call "blug," scarcely a coveted theatrical property in wartime.

Conspicuous among the short shockers are "Le Poison Hindou" and "Sous la Lumière Rouge." The first is an ingenious variant of the unloaded revolver. A husband having found his wife false casually presents her and her lover with some jujubes. While they are munching them unsuspiciously they must settle down in a species of mannerly boredom, for the husband is in narrative mood. Their composure vanishes, however, when the story he tells develops into an account of a Brahman who works his revenge through the medium of poisoned sweets. Then he cheerfully announces that the candy they have eaten is deadly, that he possesses an antidote sufficient to save one of them, and that he will withdraw from the room long enough to let them decide which. When he returns he finds his wife being slowly throttled by her lover. Of course, the sweets were quite harmless. Nothing is dull it seems in plays these days.

"Sous la Lumière Rouge" is the work of the man who wrote "The Kiss in the Dark," the most dreadful of all the penny dreadfuls presented in the several programs at the Princes. A flashlight, taken of a supposedly dead woman's corpse by her lover, reveals after the burial that the eyes were open. The exhumation that follows shows in the gruesome detail brought to light that she had, indeed, been buried alive.

"It is a relief, at any rate," plaintively observes the reviewer in The Referee, "to know that the audience is not requested to view the body."

Billie Burke's Plans.

BILLIE BURKE, the only one of the Frohman stars who will not answer at roll call when the new season begins, is, for a time, to practice her wiles upon the motion-picture camera, and then, much more wealthy for that venture, she will resume her work on the New York stage, appearing in a new comedy with herself as the star and her husband as the manager. This may be looked for before the end of Autumn.

Mr. Ziegfeld has promised to dress the comedy with the best decoration Joseph Urban can devise and to assemble an impressive supporting company for the first appearance of Miss Burke under his management. The comedy itself has not yet been selected, although it may be said that among those now under consideration is one by Catherine Chisholm Cushing, who wrote "Kitty MacKay" and who also wrote "Jerry," the exceedingly unsubstantial farce which Miss Burke found so amazingly successful on the road.

Miss Anglin at Berkeley.

MARGARET ANGLIN is in her glory. She is in full possession of the beautiful Greek Theatre of the University of California and rehearsals are now in progress for her appearance there in three Greek tragedies on three successive Saturdays of this month.

The plays are the "Iphigenia in Aulis" of Euripides in Potter's translation, the "Medea" of Euripides in Murray's translation, and the "Electra," of Sophocles, in Plumptre's translation. They are to be given after dark. Livingston Platt of Boston has designed the properties, costumes, and stage equipments. Walter Damrosch has composed the musical settings and will conduct the orchestra of sixty pieces. Gustav von Seiffertitz is stage director, and the company includes Fuller Mellish, Ruth Holt Boucicault, Saxone Moreland, Pedro de Cordoba, and Lawson Butt. Two hundred supernumeraries and choristers will be employed.

The performances come at boom time for the exposition. These are carnival days in California and each mail piles high the advance orders for seats.

William Dallam Armes, Chairman of the Musical and Dramatic Committee of the university, writes:

"The beauty and impressiveness of Margaret Anglin's productions of 'Antigone' in the Greek Theatre in 1910 and 'Electra' in 1913 led this committee immediately after the latter to invite her to make three productions there this year and to assure her that if she would do so no other Greek plays should be given in the Greek Theatre during the exposition period. The invitation was accepted and Miss Anglin promised even to surpass her previous efforts."

The New Jones Play.

OTIS SKINNER is at Bryn Mawr—his home, not the college—contentedly familiarizing himself with the manuscript of a new, and as yet nameless, play by Henry Arthur Jones. The leading character, an appropriately romantic rôle, is an actor. The play is a comedy.

Mr. Jones began work upon it in the seclusion of Bermuda last Spring and completed it before he sailed for England a few weeks ago. It is said he was inspired to write it when some one told him that a distinguished contemporary and compatriot had referred to him as an old fogy, or words to that effect. The veteran playwright, who has a low opinion of "The Madras House" anyway, felt that he was put upon his mettle and determined to produce a bright comedy in his best style and earlier manner, the manner, it seems, of "Joseph, Entangled."

A YEAR OF 'TWIN BEDS.'

Final Week to be Marked by Bide-a-Wee Benefit.

"Twin Beds," which opened at the Fulton Theatre early last August, winds up its first full year in New York next Saturday evening at the Harris, and thus having achieved the longest run in the history of last season, its engagement here comes to an end. Five companies will entertain the road this season with this farce by Salisbury Field and Margaret Mayo, and Paris is to see it, too.

There is to be a special matinée of the play at the Harris next Friday afternoon for the benefit of the Bide-a-Wee Summer Home for dogs and cats on Long Island. Madge Kennedy, Ray Cox, John Westley, and other members of the original cast will give their services for this occasion. There will be a special scene written in to display the talents of a pet cat of Miss Mayo's and of the dog that is to play one of the title rôles in Frederick Ballard's new play to be produced soon by Cohan & Harris.

'MEDEA' AT N. Y. U.

Mme. Barsescu to Play the Greek Tragedy There Tuesday.

The "Medea" of Euripides will be presented to the students of the New York University Summer School on Tuesday afternoon and evening of this week at Battery Hill, University Heights. The rôle of Medea will be played by Madame Agathe Barsescu, the play will be presented by the Art Drama Players and will be produced under the direction of Mme. Ada Dow Currier.

Mme. Barsescu, a Rumanian by birth, has long been a favorite on the German and Viennese stage. She made her first stage appearance in "Minna von Barnhelm," in Berlin in 1883. She has played here with the Irving Place stock company, and a year ago last April gave a distinguished performance as Jocasta in the German performance of "Oedipus the King," at the Metropolitan.

BRIGHTON BEACH.—"The Birth of a Nation."

THOSE who have been following the controversy between the screen and the stage over the services of the favorite player folk may note with interest that while the patrons of the New Amsterdam Theatre are enjoying the songs and dances and imitations by dainty Ina Claire in the "Ziegfeld Follies," the patrons of the Broadway Theatre a block away will have the opportunity this week to see her as the star of a photoplay. It is "The Puppet Crown," in which Carlyle Blackwell plays the leading man's rôle. This is a film version of the popular novel by Harold MacGrath.

The week's program for the Rocking-Chair Movies at Brighton Baths includes, besides several Keystone comedies, such features as Mae Marsh in "The Outcast," William A. Hart in "The Darkening Trail," Max Figman in "The Truth Wagon," and Henry B. Walthall in "Beula."

Germantown, Penn., should be an ideal place for the motion picture director and it is interesting to note that the new Continental Photoplay Corporation has opened its studio there. This part of Philadelphia, which was the scene of the Revolutionary battle that bears its name, is still packed with memorabilia of Colonial days. House after house, built from the stuff taken from the local quarries, still stands, looking much as it did when the old Wister house was new, when the Chew Mansion was one of the finest homes in that part of the world and when the thriving, exceedingly suburban Germantown Avenue was a long and lovely lane.

Among the Vitagraph plans for immediate production are two photoplays, one by Robert Edgren, entitled "Black Caesar," and the other "Masters of Men," a film version of the story by the late Morgan Robertson. Commencing in October the Vitagraph Company will release a Sidney Drew picture every Friday. It will be styled Sidney Drew day. Mr. Drew will direct the taking of all the pictures in which he and Mrs. Drew appear.

The Lasky program of features for the months of September, October, and November include these players in these photoplays:

Blanche Sweet in "The Case of Becky."
Charlotte Walker in "The Revelation."
Lou-Tellegen in "The Explorer."
Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."
Donald Brian in "The Voice in the Fog."
Laura Hope Crews in "Blackbirds."
Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden Out West."
Blanche Sweet in "The Cheat."
"The Chorus Lady."

Director A. L. Shakman of the Eighty-first Street Theatre announces that he will be happy to extend the hospitality of that motion-picture house to the children in the different institutions in New York and Brooklyn. The orchestra at the matinées will be open to these youngsters and there will be no charge of any kind.

"Hearts Ablaze," the feature play at the Vitagraph this week, is based on an original romance of intrigue in court and cloister. It was written by Eugene Mullin. "The Goddess" has reached its thirteenth chapter. "His Bunkie," "She Took a Chance," "His Fairy Godmother," and "The Cub and the Daisy Chain," with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, are other films to be shown at the Vitagraph.

The Famous Players' program of features for the next three months is as follows:

Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly."
Marguerite Clark in "The Prince and the Pauper."
Pauline Frederick in "Zaza."
Hazel Dawn and John Mason in "The Fatal Card."
Sam Bernard in "Poor Schmaltz."
John Barrymore in "The Incorrigible Dukane."
Charles Cherry in "The Mummy and the Humming Bird."
Hazel Dawn in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."
Marie Doro in "The White Pearl."

"Rags" is the name of the new photoplay by Edith Barnard Delano in which Mary Pickford will be seen this week at the Strand Theatre. It was produced by the Famous Players. A new comedy, travel pictures and the news in film will complete the screen program for the week at this big movie house.

In producing the picturization of William J. Hurlburt's play, "The Writing on the Wall," in which Olga Nethersole starred for two seasons, Vitagraph Director Johnson required the front of a block of tenement houses, with a particular type of fire escape, for use in one of the scenes vital to the interest of the story. A search throughout the entire east side of New York City and through the tenement district of Brooklyn failed to reveal even a single tenement that would answer his purpose, as recent fire laws and the activity of the Building Inspectors were responsible for the complete elimination of the type of escape that would conform to the requirements of Hurlburt's story. To overcome this obstacle and complete the realism of the pictured narrative, Director Johnson was compelled to have built in the open air studios at Flatbush the outer shell of a front of houses, every detail of which being produced from still pictures of the Bowery photographed about fifteen years ago. One scene only of the house fronts, which served as the background for tense action, was taken when they were set on fire, and one of the most thrilling episodes of the 5,000 feet that will comprise the finished picture was filmed.

50,000 a Week.

It has been estimated that "The Birth of a Nation" is being presented to more than 50,000 persons a week. This is made possible by the fact that the big Griffith film is on exhibition, not only at the Liberty, but at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, in Chicago, in Boston, at the Fair, and at Atlantic City.

"THE WAY TO WIN," BY MR. KNOBLAUCH

He Writes a Patriotic Sketch for Gabrielle Dorziat to Present in the English Music Halls.

EDWARD KNOBLAUCH is the author of a one-act play called "The Way to Win," which has served as a vaudeville vehicle for Gabrielle Dorziat, the French actress, who was seen here last season in "The Hawk," as a member of Mr. Faversham's company. It was first shown at the Coliseum, where it found favor as a patriotic sketch, with several good opportunities for the display of Mlle. Dorziat's gifts. Says The London Telegraph:

"The story of 'The Way to Win' is slight, but full of effective moments. A young English sculptor has fallen passionately in love with a captivating French actress. A chance word dropped by her inspires Gerald with an idea for a statute of Victory. Marianne is forced to leave him for a few weeks, and in her absence he completes the work. But there is something, he sorrowfully admits to himself, lacking in it. Exactly what he is unable to define. On Marianne's return she quickly enlightens him. Gerald must go out into the world and begin to live before he can achieve the great task he has set himself. Even loving him as she does, Marianne cannot conceal the truth that, after all, her lover is no better than an artistic 'slacker.' His country calls for him, and he has not answered to the summons. Little by little her enthusiasm gains upon the artist, who now sees things as they really are. A passing regiment, playing the 'Marseillaise' makes itself heard. Seizing the tricolor hanging on the wall, Marianne declaims the French national anthem with such electrical effect that, after a parting embrace, Gerald rushes off to enlist, with the assurance that, should he return safely, Marianne will be his bride.

"The little piece was played with the utmost spirit both by Mlle. Dorziat and Owen Nares, but the chief share of the work naturally fell to the former, whose superb powers of declamation, especially in the recital of the 'Marseillaise,' provoked the audience to a prolonged outburst of applause. The very simplicity and directness of the sketch served largely to insure its success."

Midnight Frolic Continues.

The "Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic" atop the New Amsterdam Theatre, which was scheduled to end its engagement last evening, will be continued for three more weeks. It will be followed by a new midnight revue of Mr. Ziegfeld's devising.

BOYS IN BIG STORM TRIM SHIP LIKE TARS

TERRIFIC BLOW RENDS SAILS

The training ship Newport, with students of the New York State Nautical School on board, is on her way from Honolulu to San Francisco. She left here on May 4, on a 15,385-mile trip. A report was received yesterday by William Bagley, Secretary of the school, in which Superintendent F. S. McMurray, the commanding officer, tells some of the interesting events of the voyage, also gives an account of the arrival of the ship at Hilo, Hawaii.

The first bad weather on the trip came, Captain McMurray reported, when on June 10, on the run from the Panama Canal to Honolulu, the Newport struck a violent gale, and many of the 150 cadets became seasick.

"During the afternoon," Superintendent McMurray writes, "the ship was snugged down to a single reefed foresail and spanker. She carried inner and outer jibs and mail trysail. The weather had been threatening, with overcast sky and squalls, with much rain. The wind freshened after sunset and at 10:30 it was blowing a gale."

The wind increased and it was necessary to call all hands to shorten sail. The outer jib stay was carried away. The Superintendent reports that the cadets were an hour and a half on the fore and main topsail yards before they succeeded in stowing the sails.

With enough canvas to steady her, the Newport raced through the night before the storm. There was a succession of gales that culminated in a terrific outburst at 1:30 A. M. This was accompanied by violent rain. The main trysail gaff broke in two, tearing the sail. It was inky, and the gale was so fierce that it was impossible to do more than temporarily secure the gaff, leaving the sail set.

This difficult job had hardly been accomplished when the inner jib split and had to be taken in. The ship was then hove to on a starboard tack under double reefed spanker and with what was left of the main trysail. She rode the sea very well.

"The barometer dropped to 28.48, a low glass for this locality. The rain was practically continuous. At 9 A. M. the following day the spanker was taken in, having chafed a hole in it, and the ship wore to the port tack under a storm fore staysail, and a storm mizzen set. The steering gear shortly afterward gave evidence of failure, whereupon it was discovered that it had become disconnected through the working out of some screws attached to the shifting gear. Repairs were completed in twenty minutes by Machanist John Cahill, under the supervision of the Engineer Officer, Mr. Mathews.

"The trysail and broken gaff had been sent down at daylight for repairs. On the afternoon of the 11th, the weather moderated, leaving a heavy swell and a fine breeze from the South. Sail was made and the torn sails unbent.

"The cadets on the whole worked very well, considering they had spent the entire night on deck and were exhausted from their continuous labor and discomforts."

The Newport is the first vessel that ever went direct from the Canal to Hilo, and she was enthusiastically welcomed at that island. A Reception Committee met the cadets and gave them a fine time. The committee were welcomed on board by Captain McMurray and his officers. The Chairman, C. C. Kennedy, tendered the keys of the city to the Captain, and informed the officers of the plans for their entertainment. Later all on board were taken in automobiles to see the sights.

Half the population turned out when the Newport, with sails set, threaded her way out of port and headed for Honolulu, the last port of call before making San Francisco.

With favoring winds the Newport is expected in New York on Oct. 17. She will stop at New London and Glen Cove, where, it is expected, most of her cadets will go ashore.

NOW THE GOLDFISH DOCTOR.

New Expert Will Tell How to Fit Up a Tank at Cost of $150.

About the latest expert to appear in a city already reasonably well supplied with specialists of all sorts is a goldfish expert whose headquarters are in Madison Avenue. It appears that appropriately enough the simple life is not good for the goldfish, who never should be forced to swim around in a plain glass bowl, after the manner of his ancestors in captivity.

The new expert has worked it all out scientifically. To five goldfish add three polywogs, a half dozen snails, and a carefully estimated amount of water plants and put the whole in five cubic feet of water. Thus you have the proper unit for up-to-date goldfish keeping.

If the scientifically regulated aquarium seems a bit expensive the expert assures you that her aquarium is a labor-saving devise, the expert arrangement being self-maintaining, and the goldfish are assured of a long and happy life.

The water plants supply the proper amount of oxygen, the snails prevent the formation of slime, and the polywogs absorb the impurities in the water. But one calamity can threaten this automatic housekeeping. Should the polywogs insist on becoming frogs drastic steps must be taken, for the expert formula has been upset. And incidentally one can acquire a scientifically arranged goldfish tank, flanked by two tiny Japanese bowl-gardens, for the modest sum of $150. That's why they're called goldfish, the expert explained.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

City.

The following physical examinations have been held:

Orthopedic Surgeon—Eight passed; none rejected.

Gardener—Twenty-eight passed; eight rejected.

Efficiency Accountant—Twenty-nine passed; one rejected.

Actuarial Clerk—Four passed; three rejected.

Applications for trade instructor will be received until Aug. 10, and for typewriting copyist, female, until Aug. 18.

The American Alliance of Civil Service Women, of which Anna W. Hochfelder is President, will hold its regular fortnightly meeting on the evening of Aug. 2. All women interested in civil service and civic affairs are invited to be present.

United States.

The commission announces for Aug. 18, at the New York Custom House, a competitive examination for assistant pathological inspector, for men only, to fill vacancies, a salaries ranging from $1,000 to $1,400 per annum, in the Federal Horticultural Board, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. The duties will be the inspection for plant diseases of seeds, plants, and propagating parts of plants imported from foreign countries into the United States, particularly those brought in by the United States Department of Agriculture. Competitors will be examined in plant pathology, practical questions in inspection work, and education and experience. Graduation with a bachelor's degree from a college or university of recognized standing, such training to have included a course in plant pathology, is a prerequisite. Applicants must not have reached their thirty-fifth birthday on the date of the examination. Further information may be obtained from the commission, Washington, D. C.

EDUCATION NOTES.

In addition to the usual items for increased register the Committee on Vocational Schools and Industrial Training asks for the following in the departmental estimate for 1916:

Six additional vocational teachers in prevocational schools, $5,070; for extension of prevocational work in P. S. 58, Brooklyn, nine vocational teachers, $5,265; bonus for fifty academic teachers in prevocational schools, $200 each, $10,000; for new activities to be established in existing vocational schools, eight positions, $15,000; estimate for regular part time, co-operative and continuation classes, $97,870; rental of additional quarters for Manhattan Trade School for Girls, $7,200.

Associate City Superintendent Haaren has made the following estimate for the extension of continuation class work to 20,000 pupils in 1916; rentals, $42,000; teachers, $160,000; supplies, $5,000.

The Committee on By-Laws has recommended that the by-laws be amended in the schedule relating to substitutes in vocational or trade schools by striking out the line reading "additional teachers with knowledge of bookkeeping, $4 per day," and inserting in lieu thereof a line reading "additional teacher, $4 per day."

The Committee on Special Schools has made a report recommending that the matter of obtaining, equipping, and supervising playgrounds and play centres throughout the city be referred to the new committee, which will have charge of recreation centres.

Local School Boards of Districts 23, 29, and 33 have made semi-annual reports as required by the charter. They will be analyzed and referred to the appropriate officials and committees.

Henry A. Smith has been appointed as an attendance officer for a temporary period.

TAXPAYERS DEMAND CUT OF $150,000,000

Prominent Property Owners in Certiorari Proceedings to Review Assessments.

SEES A SERIOUS PROBLEM

Real Estate Paper Says Never Before in the City Were So Many Persons Protesting.

Certiorari proceedings to review assessments on real estate in New York City demanding cuts, amounting to about $150,000,000 have been started, and the list of protesting taxpayers includes the names of many well known persons, business firms, and estates.

On the Woolworth Building a reduction of $1,500,000 is claimed, the assessment being $9,500,000. The United Electric Light and Power Company demands $1,500,000 reduction on its property at Academy Street, assessed for $5,500,000. On the Dakota, in Central Park West, owned by Edward S. Clark, $450,000 is claimed; on the Commercial Cable Building, 20 Broad Street, $1,000,000; on the Century Building, at Broadway and New Street, $1,200,000; on Lord & Taylor's Fifth Avenue store, $1,300,000, and $125,000 on the adjoining buildings; on the Trinity Building, 111 Broadway, $750,000; on the adjoining building, $560,000.

R. H. Macy & Co. want a reduction of $1,750,000 on their store at Herald Square, assessed at $6,900,000. Michael Friedsam, representing the Altman Estate, claims $250,000 on the Altman Store in Fifth Avenue, and several smaller items on nearly a score of properties in the adjoining neighborhood. The New York Stock Exchange claims $1,370,000, and the New York Produce Exchange, $700,000. The National Park Bank alleges it is assessed $900,000 too much.

The official organ of the Real Estate Board of New York in its August issue says:

"The subject of overassessments of real estate is becoming a serious administrative problem. Perhaps the depressed condition of real estate has aggravated the situation. But there probably never was a time in the history of the city when so many persons were concerned over the fact that their properties are too highly assessed. In Brooklyn the situation is acute. In Manhattan it is, if anything, more so.

"Throughout the city real estate owners are resorting to certiorari proceedings to have their assessments redressed. The total of these reductions in the five coroughs is said to reach $150,000,000. But in any event it is unusually large. The Bulletin publishes herewith a portion of those filed in Manhattan. It would take nearly the whole issue of a magazine to publish the full list. The individual reductions run from $4,000 or $5,000 to nearly $2,000,000."

The Bulletin insists that a grea deal of the trouble comes from the appointment as Tax Commissioners of persons not expert in the assessing of valuations of real estate. It, however, gives Commissioner Purdy credit as being "accessible, courteous, reasonable."

NEXT WINTER'S STYLES

Paris Openings Delayed Two Weeks This Year, but We Shall Soon Learn What Is to be Worn in Cold Weather.

THE majority of the leading houses in Paris put off the dress openings of the season until the first of this month, although we were promised all the news of clothes by the second week of July.

What the reason was for the change in dates—whether the paucity of American buyers in Paris early in the month of July, or the difficulty of getting ready a new set of models after the manufacturers had depleted the first set—is of little importance to the question at large; the result is very satisfying to those buyers and sellers who want new clothes for the Winter and not for the Summer.

The merchants and dressmakers who are in the habit of showing the new styles for Fall and Winter at the beginning of October or late in September were distressed at the news that the French houses would show all their Winter clothes to American buyers during the first week in July, for it meant that delivery would be in August and the clothes would be on the hands of the American importers nearly two months before they were needed. Such a calamity would be far-reaching, having disastrous trade results to those who make a specialty of selling clothes by the retail method.

Style Purveyors in Battle.

The fight between the manufacturers and the specialty shops, among which one may class the dressmakers, (if one wants to take the risk of being corrected,) is too well known to need more than casual mention to the person who deals in this branch of merchandise; but the people, who know little of the continuous factional fight, would always take the side of the manufacturer unless they were of that class who demand exclusiveness in their clothes—and who rarely get it.

The reason the majority of our women like the side of the manufacturer is because he brings the new fashions to their doors and their purses quicker and cheaper than it is possible for the dressmakers or specialists to do.

The one thing that the specialists strive for is to get their frocks before the public who want the last thing from Paris and open the way for the manufacturers to copy these styles at once; the sooner the better, for the moment a French style is run to ground, the specialists have the chance to sell a new and complete set of fashions to the world of women who will no longer wear a style that is selling for $15 through the cheaper ready-to-wear departments.

So, you can easily see, you who are the victim of all these machinations, tricks, and counter-tricks, how seriously it disturbed the commercial life for the French designers to announce that their openings would be a month earlier than usual. Last Summer the openings were advanced ten days because of the war, but there was so much difficulty in getting the clothes through to American shores that none of the merchants or dressmakers was in the least disturbed.

Probably the American buyers protested against the new schedule. Whatever the reason, the majority of New York houses sent over buyers during the second week in July, who would be on the scene of battle and see that no one buyer had an advantage over another. In other words, if there was anything to be seen all must see it, and if any French house decided to spring a trick on the others by opening a week ahead of time no American house would be left out of the game.

Already Many Models.

There are manufacturers' models in plenty in America already. Those who sell to the trade that pours into New York in July to get the Fall materials, hats, and gowns must be served. Why that flood does not wait until September is not a question for an amateur to settle by an answer. For mysterious trade reasons the flood arrives in July, and those who want to make money cater to it by going to Paris early in the Summer, by persuading the French houses to turn out several hundreds of new models for American trade and shipping them home in June when they are then prepared to hand to the thousands of buyers who do not cross the ocean. Good business, that.

There are certain dressmakers catering to a large trade that does not dwell in or near New York, who also hurry home with a few models, buy others from the manufacturers, and get their Autumn business off their hands almost before one knows that October is coming.

This variety of clothes has been on the market since July and the people who copy each acceptable fashion in large quantities are already at work. Soon the shops will offer them as the first and most authoritative ideas in Winter fashions. Whether or not they prove to be all that their agents claim for them is a doubt that will not deter hundreds of women from buying them, because they are at hand, and Fall clothes are always needed as soon as the first chill makes its appearance, except by those lucky ones who always find a suit or a frock left over from the preceding season which happens to fill the first necessity.

Our Hips Again Flat.

There is a strong tendency in each of the fashions that are advanced as forerunners of what is to come in October toward flattened hips. For the last few months we have grown quite large in that spot; we have avoided any appearance of slimness and given ourselves over to gathers and pleats at the waistline. This fashion was deplored by all but the excessively slender, yet as all the models called for a certain amount of fullness from waist to ankles there seemed no other way to arrive at it except through a wide circular skirt, a cut to which the majority of women objected.

The latter method of cutting the skirt, however, is the one that is advanced today, and the unevenness of the hem, which is sure to result, is offset by accentuating it and using cord or pleating as an edge.

To quiet the rebellion against this kind of skirt among the larger number of women the Spanish flounce has been revived on all kinds of skirts, or rather on skirts made of various materials. Organdie, broadcloth, gabardine, velvet, batiste, and satin are the fabrics that show this deep ruffle; it gives the necessary fullness at the knees without increasing the girth around the hips.

It may not matter very much how one achieves that line of slimness at the hips and width at the ankles; the main thing is to be well assured of the silhouette and then work it out through any channel one desires.

It is in just this divergence of method and idea that the different dressmakers have a chance of success. There is a silver lining to the cloud of full skirts if these individual treatments are welcomed; especially will the incoming of the deep flounce with the smooth hip line please the women who have looked unpleasantly abnormal in the skirts that were gathered about the waist.

As to the frankly circular skirt which is growing in favor among those who decide on the fashions there is a silver cloud to it also. A band of some kind of opposing fabric is dropped below the uneven edge of the hem which frames it in, or rather gives it a straight selvedge. The introduction of this redeeming feature has turned discouragement into optimism. It may be possible, after all, say many, to wear a circular skirt with confidence in its behavior, something that has been impossible since circular skirts were invented.

In the prevailing taffeta frocks that will be worn without coats on warm days and with them on chill days the skirts are scalloped, not unduly, the edges corded, and the uneven line held together by a five-inch band of double net, which is slightly gathered and steadied on its lower edge by a thick cord of the taffeta.

If you are not familiar with this method of finishing an uneven skirt hem it is quite worth your while to try it. The effect is good because the skirt has the appearance of being actually finished; the ragged edge does not always give this.

The Milliners Ahead.

The milliners are usually ahead of the dressmakers in the matter of new fashions, and in Paris there has already been invented a high turban that few faces can stand and a rakish Italian hat called the Bersaglieri, which was brought to America by enterprising importers in the latter part of June. It is far more suitable to the average American face than the high turban which the French wear with such dash and spirit.

The trouble which confronts the Italian infantry hat will be overpopularity. Whatever is brought out in the early part of the season is usually so frequently copied and so widely worn that its attractiveness is doomed before the actual season for it arrives. It serves well in the between period, when the Spring finery has lost its glamour and the Autumn fashion is not established.

It no longer causes astonishment that we wear velvet and coque plumes in the hot days of August, or that we are addicted to lingeries in the ice of February; clothes and the seasons do not match, and the dressmakers do not try to make them. Caprice is the dominant passion in fashion, and there is really no reason why we should cling to the tradition that certain fabrics are intended for certain months.

This tradition was established when science had not prevailed over weather, and houses were hot or cold according to the calendar. Now we are so protected from all disagreeable conditions that we have cast aside the idea that the calendar should have any influence on clothes. This is truer in Winter than in Summer, of course, for no one has yet learned successfully to temper the heat to the most shorn of lambs, and the sight of velvet in August gives a shudder to those who remain in hot climates, but rapid transportation gives one so many chances to feel a breeze that never came to their ancestors that both velvet and fur have kept out of the cedar chest and made ready for Summer service. The fashion for white fox has been so pronounced all Summer that it is difficult to persuade the younger set to relinquish it, even on days when the thermometer calls for mosquito netting as a covering.

But, to take up again the thread of the main subject, which is velvet hats; there is renewed activity among the milliners to keep them in fashion. Felt cannot be made in France this year and the French milliners have not used it as a Winter material for nearly a decade, so one does not expect to see any fashionable Winter hats for formal wear made of felt, but of velvet there will be a plenty. A French felt factory, or its methods, has been installed in America, and some excellent hats for sport wear have been turned out and proved acceptable to the large majority of women who live out of the city from May until November. There is a fine finish to them that gives them somewhat the appearance of satin, and while they are warmer than straw their popularity was assured from the beginning.

Metallic Fabric for Hats.

One of the most brilliant milliners in Paris has brought out a metallic fabric for formal hats which is artistic and expensive. In France it would be used for evening hats with half décolleté or even high-necked frocks, but the evening hat in America is a debatable fashion. It is rarely worn no matter how strenuously the milliners try to make the French fashion popular. The English method of always going bareheaded after 7 o'clock prevails.

As our afternoon dressing is quite elaborate because of the various kinds of entertaining which the women indulge in among themselves, a social custom unknown in Europe, the metallic hat will find a place in the wardrobe of those who spend sums of money on costumes for bridge, teas, luncheons, weddings, matinées, and especially the afternoon dances, which show no sign of waning.

It is claimed by the milliners that this dancing has had the same influence on hats as did the motor car, both demanding small shapes. It is not easy to dance in a hat with a brim, and consequently few were worn last Winter or this Summer at the fashionable places. The woman with the large face never relishes the idea of a season of small hats, for she knows she looks her worst in them, but she need not despair, for there are several varieties of brimmed hats that are both smart and becoming.

The tendency is to return to the brim that droops a bit in front and back with slightly rolling line at the sides, the shape invariably known as belonging to the Empress Eugénie. It is unusually attractive above the face of a woman who has large features or who has not that fresh look of youth which the present jaunty small hat seems to require.

One of the really clever things the milliners have invented is a new kind of veil for the small hat, although it will serve on one with a brim if one is skillful in the art of adjusting this accessory. It falls below the waist when dropped to its full length; it is made of chiffon and lace, half and half. The chiffon part, which is at the top, is passed tightly around the hat, not meeting by a few inches in the back. It can be left to hang straight down over the face, or thrown straight back over the hat, hanging down the back, or the chiffon half can be thrown over the hat, leaving the straight fall of coarse lace, self-colored, over the face.

The milliner who brought it to this country had it as a complete piece of headgear, hat and veil as a whole, but women who saw its advantage had it draped on the small turbans they owned. Now they have learned to make the veil without the aid of a milliner, thereby saving many dollars and getting the same attractive effect.

The Only Way To Know That This Furniture Sale Offers the Greatest Values

Is to make your own comparisons.

The principal reason for our exceptionally low prices lies in the pertinent fact that we invariably buy for cash. We take full benefit of all discounts, and give these savings to our patrons in lower prices than would otherwise obtain.

Our personal representative had been more than fortunate in securing the co-operation of some of the best Furniture makers in this country.

This co-operation has permitted us to show a bigger, broader, better stock of fine Furniture at SMALLER PRICES than ever.

This co-operation has given to the people of this Borough the opportunity to practice wonderful economies this year.

As an incident of the conservative way in which we tell of the wonderful values offered in this sale, let us cite this episode which occurred the other day:

A woman came here to look at a Dining Room Suite. After she had definitely decided what she would buy, she called up her husband from this store and told him that the best value she had seen anywhere she had discovered in Abraham and Straus, but, lest her judgment be biased, requested that he confirm it by seeing for himself. His confirmation came in a very emphatic way. He arrived in the afternoon, and after looking at the Suite his wife had chosen, together they added to it a Bed Room Suite, making a purchase that totaled very near double the price of the Dining Room Suite.

This is but one incident from hundreds that we could print.

In every case where customers come here with the intention of making one purchase, they invariably stay to make two or more. Not only are the prices temptingly low, but the Furniture itself is so extremely good that it is quite beyond comparison.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

Readers of The Times are particularly requested to read the following before sending queries to the Query Department:

No answers can be given regarding legal or medical matters, card problems, propriety in dress, correctness of English sentences, and values of stamps and coins, nor to questions of a trivial character or of concern only to the questioner.

To receive attention every question must bear the name and address of the person sending it. This does not necessarily mean that the name will be published when the question is answered; only the initials will be used if the questioner so desires. No attention will be paid to queries to which the name and address of the sender are not appended.

Hundreds of letters are received by this department, so that it is obviously impossible to answer all of them immediately. In many cases there must be a certain amount of unavoidable delay.

Russian and Italian Navies.

J. C.—Will you kindly tell me which is the larger navy, the Russian or the Italian?

Estimates, figures, and comparisons of this kind can only be given as existent before the war. Before the outbreak of hostilities Russia stood sixth among the great navies of the world, and Italy seventh. The total personnel—officers and men—of the Russian Navy was 52,463, of Italy 36,093.

New York Buildings.

A. I. R.—Will you be kind enough to give me a list of some of the best-known buildings in New York City, including some of the newer buildings?

Among the best-known public buildings in New York are the Sub-Treasury, the Metropolitan Art Museum, the Public Library, the Municipal Building, (new,) the Custom House, the Post Offices, the City Hall, the buildings of Columbia University, the College of the City of New York, and New York University, including the Hall of Fame; among the well-known buildings which are not "public" are the Pennsylvania Railroad Station, the Grand Central Station, (new,) the Woolworth Building, (new,) the Fuller Building, (the Flatiron,) the Singer Building, The Times Building, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Building, the Equitable Life Insurance Building, (new,) the Bankers Trust Company, the Hudson Terminal Buildings, the Adams Building, (new,) the Whitehall Building, the Trinity Building. These are a few of the best-known and most striking buildings. This list lays no claim to exhaustiveness.

"The Black Watch."

E. C. D.—For some time past I have been trying to learn the origin of the "Black Watch," as the Forty-second Highlanders' Regiment is sometimes called, and have concluded to ask you for information. I am told that it was formed in the days of Wallace. Even so, why "Black Watch"?

"The Black Watch," one of the most famous regiments in the British Army, was organized by the Duke of Athole in 1688. It became the Forty-second Regiment of the line in 1739. Its illustrious career began with Fontenoy, and few regiments equal it in battle honors. Its name is due to the dark tartan which is the regimental uniform.

The "D. R." and "D. A. R."

W. B. G.—Will you please tell me in what way are the "Daughters of the Revolution" different from the "Daughters of the American Revolution?" Which is the older society? Which has the larger membership?

The Daughters of the Revolution and the Daughters of the American Revolution are two separate societies, the mark of eligibity to each being lineal descent from a soldier or officer in the army or navy of the United States during the War for Independence, or from a civil officer in that war. The "D. A. R.," as it is usually called, is the larger and older society; it was organized Oct. 11, 1890; the Daughters of the Revolution was organized Aug. 20, 1891.

Army Pay.

MAX RANUN.—A great deal is being said by army circles about enlarging our army. My understanding is that it is already the costliest army in the world in proportion to its size. If it be increased, certainly the per capita expense should be reduced. Officers and men should be paid less, perquisites reduced, and extravagant army post buildings no longer constructed. For the information of many of your readers, please publish the following: What is the pay and perquisites of each grade of army commissioned officers? After an officer has served twenty years, counting the four years he is schooling at West Point, does he not receive 40 per cent. more, or additional, pay of his grade then and of whatever grade or rank he may thereafter attain? How much per mile is an army officer allowed for traveling? How many generals are there on the active list, and what does their pay, with perquisites, amount to for one year? How many generals are on the retired list, and what does their total yearly pay amount to? What is the average pay of our officers as compared with those of the French Republic? How many of our officers are serving with troops and how many are in the offices in Washington or elsewhere?

Following is a table of yearly initial, or base, pay of army officers in this country, the French Republic, and Great Britain, the last-named being given because it, like the United States, has a volunteer army, while that of France is enrolled by compulsory military service:

The United States—General, there is none; Lieutenant General, grade discontinued by act of Congress March 2, 1907; Major General, $8,000; Brigadier General, $6,000; Colonel, $4,000; Lieutenant Colonel, $3,500; Major, $3,000; Captain, $2,400; First Lieutenant, $2,000; Second Lieutenant, $1,700; Sergeant, $360; Corporal, $252; private, $180. Great Britain—General, $14,600; Lieutenant General, $10,950; Major General, $6,326; Brigadier General, $4,866; Colonel, $2,008; Lieutenant Colonel, $1,599; Major, $1,421; Captain, $1,029; First Lieutenant, $577; Second Lieutenant, $460; Sergeant, $200; Corporal, $146; private, $89. France—General, $5,558; Lieutenant General, there is none; Major General, $3,648; Brigadier General, $2,432; Colonel, $1,744; Lieutenant Colonel, $1,271; Major, $1,063; Captain, $676; First Lieutenant, $480; Second Lieutenant, $452; Sergeant, $83; Corporal, $31; private, $20.

This minimum scale is increased for length of service by percentages similar in all countries. In European countries, however, officers receive extensive "allowances" in addition to the pay listed above. The laws covering these "allowances" and increases of pay are, of course, too voluminous and complex to quote in the limited space of the Query Column.

It should be noted, in comparing the pay of the United States Army even with that of Great Britain (the only other country having a volunteer military service) that the United States Army is the only thoroughly democratic army, in which both officers and men are drawn from all walks of life, and it is, therefore, the only country which must offer special monetary inducements in competition with the wages of labor. Officers of the United States Army, unlike those of the European countries, are supposed to be able to support themselves and their families on their army pay.

These facts, as well as differences in standards of living and purchasing power, must be borne in mind in any attempt at comparison between the armies of the United States and European nations. Generally speaking, the salaries for officers in our army are greater than for those of European armies, and the "perquisites" less. All soldiers in all armies receive quarters, clothing, and rations. All officers receive quarters or allowance in lieu thereof. All mounted officers receive allowances for horse and equipment. Officers in the United States armies receive allowances for fuel and light, extra pay when on aviation duty, and, in common with the soldiers, extra pay for tropical service.

The General Staff of the Army is made up of four Brigadier Generals, four Colonels, five Lieutenant Colonels, twelve Majors, and thirteen Captains. There are twenty-one general officers of the line, including six Major Generals. The chiefs of staff corps and bureaus of the War Department number eleven. There are 241 general officers on the retired list. The total number of commissioned officers on the active list is 4,823, staff and line, including 99 First Lieutenants, Medical Reserve Corps, on active duty; 60 dental surgeons, and 231 additional and detached line officers. The total enlisted strength of the army, exclusive of provisional and hospital corps, is 89,965. The army appropriations for 1914-15, not including the Military Academy, fortifications, and like expenses, amounted to $94,229,047. Further details must be referred to the War Department.

Queen Mary's Birthday.

T. R. H.—Queen Mary of England was born May 26, 1867.

Gunfire Control.

INQUIRER.—I am anxious to procure information as to the firing of the 12-inch, &c., guns in the navy. Are these guns fired separately or are they fired together by the officer on the fire-control platform? Am I right in assuming that the moment they are discharged they are reloaded and each Gun Captain signals to the officer on the fire-control platform that the gun is ready? That this officer then gives them the elevation and sidewise measurement so that each one of these eight guns will be pointed the same, and he can then fire from his platform as he sees fit? Now, then, when are these guns discharged—when the bow rises on a wave and stands motionless for a moment, or when her bow is in the trough of a wave motionless for a moment? How do they know that she is the same each time she is fired? Do they have an instrument on the fire-control platform somewhat like a water-level, so that these guns are not fired until she has risen to a similar position each time on a wave?

Specific answers cannot be made to your inquiries as information regarding fire control is not furnished by the navy. In general, fire-control systems have been adopted in all services, by which guns can be fired (a) from a central station, (b) by this central station in conjunction with a particular unit, (c) by the unit alone. Guns are reloaded immediately after firing unless an order to the contrary is given. Various methods are in use for keeping the central station informed of the readiness of the gun for firing. Also there are various methods of informing the units of the range and bearing of target. Any method of central control is elastic, and guns may be fired at a particular point of the roll or when the guns are ready.

Historic New York.

W. R. REVELL.—Will you kindly answer the following questions: Where is Alexander Hamilton buried? Where is Robert Fulton buried? In what theatre did Charlotte Cushman make her début? Is there a theatre still standing in which Booth played? What was the scene of the Stokes-Fisk tragedy? Where is the house in which Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton met the night before the duel?

Alexander Hamilton and Robert Fulton are both buried in Trinity Churchyard in New York City. Robert Fulton's remains were to have been removed to the Fulton Water Gate Memorial at 114th to 116th Streets on Riverside Drive, but that has not yet been completed.

Charlotte Cushman made her début in "Macbeth" Sept. 13, 1836, in the Old Bowery Theatre.

Booth's Theatre stood at the corner of Sixth Avenue and Twenty-third Street. It was opened Feb. 8, 1869, but was closed in 1883.

The scene of the Stokes-Fisk tragedy was the Grand Central Hotel.

Alexander Hamilton attended a reception given by Oliver Wolcott the night before the Hamilton-Burr duel. He was taken to the Bayard House on Jane Street after the duel.

Alcohol, Tobacco, and Insurance.

C. L. B.—Can you furnish me with the following information? I wish to know the money value of cigarettes consumed in the United States per year, of cigars, of chewing tobacco, of tobacco entire, and of intoxicating liquor. I also wish to know the sum total of premiums paid in the United States per year in life insurance, fire insurance, and accident insurance.

The tobacco production of the United States in 1912 was 962,855,000 pounds, of which 440,749,962 pounds were exported, as "unmanufactured" tobacco. That year we imported tobacco valued at $48,305,042. The farm value of a slightly smaller crop in 1913 was $122,481,000. The crop of 1909 was increased in value $230,509,000 by manufacture. Tobacco of 1914 paid (ending June 30) excise and customs amounting to $103,338,000. Deducting $61,452,481 the value of the exported tobacco in 1914 (ending June 30), and adding to the field value, manufacture value, excise and customs and the imported tobacco, and we may approximate the wholesale value of the tobacco consumed in a year in the United States, as about $452,380,661. Tobacconists claim that they now make hardly 33 per cent. profits, which would indicate a retail value of about $803,174,215.

Cigarettes manufactured in 1914 in the United States numbered 8,707,626,290. Cigars manufactured in 1914 in United States in 1914 numbered 16,427,096,016. Chewing and smoking tobacco manufactured in 1914 amounted to 412,505,213 pounds, and snuff manufactured in 1914 in the United States to 32,766,741 pounds.

The intoxicating liquors consumed in the United States for the year ended June 30, 1913, were in gallons as follows: Spirits, 147,445,528; wines, 55,327,461; malt liquors, 2,030,347,442; total, 2,233,420,461. The internal revenue paid on these liquors was $163,879,342 on spirits here manufactured, and $66,286,989 on malt liquors. The customs on malt, wines, and spirituous liquors imported were possibly $20,000,000, as these importations, respectively, (gallons,) were 7,689,223, 6,643,612, and 4,121,981, total of 18,434,816 gallons. The combined estimates of the Internal Revenue Department and of the National Grocers' Association indicate that the annual drink bill of our nation is (at retail costs) about $1,724,807,519.

The regular legal reserve companies' life insurance report of Jan. 1, 1914, showed payments to policy holders of $469,388,122. The fire insurance paid for losses in 1913 amounted to $202,694,933, and for accident losses (accident insurance) the amount paid in 1913 was $15,581,234. The life insurance premiums received by the regular legal reserve companies to date of their report of Jan. 1, 1914, amounted to $714,806,-359. Cash premiums received by the fire insurance companies doing business in the United States in 1913 amounted to $381,036,994. Personal accident insurance premiums for 1913 amounted to $34,522,481.

Declaration of War.

JAMES GARRY.—Please tell me which has more power in war, the Emperor of Germany or the King of England. Which has more power in the declaration of war?

The Emperor of Germany, as has been stated in the Query Column, has absolute power to make declaration of defensive warfare, and to define the meaning of the word "defensive" in whatever circumstances may arise. His declaration of offensive war must be approved by the Bundesrat to be final. As England is a country in which greater personal governing power lies in the hands of her Ministers than of the King, the Cabinet takes the active part in the conduct of warfare which in Germany is left in the hands of the Emperor.

A Married Woman's Signature.

WILLIAM H. B.—A woman named Helen Augusta Brown married a man named Jones. Is there any well-defined rule which establishes whether she shall, in signing her name to important papers, and assuming that she is to use only three parts to her name, sign it as Helen Brown Jones or Helen Augusta Jones?

A married woman usually keeps her maiden name as her "middle name" after marriage, but she can legally sign it the other way if she wishes.

Qualifications for Voters.

S. O. C.—Will you kindly tell me if there is any State in which a literacy or property test is required as a condition to granting the franchise to a male voter who is otherwise eligible?

The States of Arizona, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, South Carolina, and Wyoming add to their listing of qualifications for voting the definite statement that a voter, otherwise eligible, must be able to read, most of the States adding "and to write" English. To vote in Missouri a citizen must be able to "read or understand the Constitution of the State." The State of Louisiana requires the possession of $300 worth of property assessed in the voter's name. Many States make the specific announcements that all taxes must have been paid by a certain date if one is to be eligible as a voter.

Kaiser's Daily Telegraph Interview.

J. MACKENZIE.—Price Collier in "Germany and the Germans" gives the following account of the Kaiser's Daily Telegraph interview:

The incident occurred in October, 1908. "The gist of it was that the British press and people continued to distrust him, while all the time he was and had been the friend of Great Britain. The Emperor cited instances of his friendship, and declared the English were as mad as March hares not to believe in him; insisted that by reason of Germany's increasing foreign commerce and on account of the growing menace to peace in the Pacific Ocean, Germany was determined to have an adequate fleet, which perhaps one day even England might be glad to have beside her own." The secret history of this incident has never been divulged.

Straus Memorial.

Latin Primer.

SARAH BELL.—Kindly tell me whether there is a Latin primer suitable for a child of 5 or 6 years old.

The New York Public Library contains no primer simple enough for such a young child. The simplest is the "Beginner's Latin Book," by Collar and Daniell.

United States Consul at Bucharest.

Mr. C. Campbell, Jr., is United States Consul General at Bucharest.

Capital of Holland.

K. PARSONS.—Amsterdam is the commercial capital of Holland and The Hague is the Court capital.

Second Sunday in October, 1880.

ELMER CHAMBERS.—The second Sunday in October, 1880, was the tenth day of the month.

Kolb Brothers.

Owing to a typographical error the name of the brothers who are famous as explorers of the Grand Canyon was printed Kobt instead of Kolb in the issue of June 20.

Neutrality of Belgium.

Mrs. JOHN F. FINN.—Was the United States one of the signatory powers guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium? When and where was the convention held?

The neutrality of Belgium was guaranteed by treaty between Prussia, Austria, Great Britain, France, Russia, and the Netherlands and was signed in London, April 19, 1839, and ratified between the contracting powers in 1870.

A Correction.

In the issue of June 13 the pier of the Hudson Navigation Company was given as being located at the foot of Desbrosses Street. The pier is at the foot of Canal Street, No. 32, North River.

Attorneys in Anti-Trust Suit.

B. L. L.—Please give names of attorneys who defended the United States Steel Corporation in the recent anti-trust suit which was decided in their favor.

Lindabury, Depue, and Faulls were the solicitors for the United States Steel Corporation. Joseph H. Choate, John G. Johnson, Francis Lynde Stetson, David A. Reed, Raynal C. Balling, Cordenio A. Severance, Richard V. Lindabury of counsel.

Declaration of Independence.

H. C.—Is the original of the Declaration of Independence still in existence? Where is it kept, and in what condition is it at present?

Since April 23, 1894, the original of the Declaration of Independence has been kept in a steel safe in the Library of the State Department, Washington, D. C. It has been seriously damaged by many reproductions and much handling, so that few of the signatures can now be read. It is kept from the light to try to preserve the vestiges of ink that remain.

Marriage Licenses.

C. M.—In applying for a marriage license in New York City must both parties be residents of New York or Brooklyn? Must both parties appear in person? At what hours may application be made? Must one be a resident of New Jersey in order to be married there? Does New Jersey require a license also?

Marriage licenses in New York City are issued at the City Clerk's office, Municipal Building, opposite City Hall, open from 9 A. M. till 4 P. M.

Licenses are required in all States except Alaska. Only California and New Mexico require the appearance of both parties in making application. A marriage may be solemnized in any place in the State where parties are both residents and have a license issued as prescribed by statute, but non-residents can only be married in the town or city where their license was issued.

Voting from Place of Business.

G. J. K.—Can a man vote from his place of business, provided he has registered accordingly?

No; a citizen may vote only from his residence.

Nicolaus Amati.

C. S. GARRIGAN.—There recently came into my possession an old violin with the label "Nicolaus Amati Cremonensis" in the inside. Can you tell me anything of the maker?

Amati was the name of a family of famous violin makers at Cremona, Italy, from 1550 to 1693. Two brothers, said by some authorities to be the first makers of the violin in its modern form, were succeeded by their two sons, and their grandson Nicolo, who lived from 1596 to 1684, was the most famous of all. He greatly improved the model, giving it larger and finer tone. So valuable are the genuine violins made by this family that they are extensively imitated, and spurious labels bearing the Amati name are often attached to instruments. It would be well to consult an expert about the genuineness of your violin.

Losses in Great War.

A JACKSONVILLE SUBSCRIBER.—Have you any figures on the losses in the present war?

Compilations from official sources published July 8 give the following figures:

	Killed.	Total Casualties.
Russia	733,000	3,485,000
France	400,000	1,400,000
England	116,000	428,000
Germany	482,000	1,567,000
Austria	341,000	1,245,000
Belgium	47,000	247,000
Serbia	64,000	226,000
Turkey	45,000	181,000
Japan	300	1,210

Appendix to Bryce Report.

J. B. MacHARG.—The appendix to the Bryce report on alleged German atrocities can be obtained through T. Fisher Unwin Co., London, N. C., England.

Submarines at Constantinople.

CARL B. PETERS.—To settle a dispute will you state whether any of the Allies' warships approached within range of Constantinople within sixty days from April 25? Germany contends that submarines are not classed as warships.

On May 27 it was reported that the British submarine E-11 entered Constantinople harbor and discharged a torpedo at a transport alongside the arsenal. On May 12 a British submarine had already penetrated far into the Sea of Marmora and sunk several Turkish transports and two gunboats.

A vessel used for offensive action is classified as a warship; such vessels are battleships, cruisers, gunboats, and torpedo craft—that is, craft firing torpedoes, among which submarines are classified.

The Trent Affair.

W. BRYNE.—In an argument mention was made of our stopping a British ship in our civil war and taking off some of her passengers. Will you kindly print particulars?

On Nov. 8, 1861, Captain Charles Wilkes of the U. S. ship San Jacinto seized Messrs. Mason and Slidell, envoys to England and France appointed by the Confederacy, from the decks of the British steamer Trent. These men were on their way to try to secure recognition and alliance for the Confederacy. They had run the blockade to Havana and taken passage from thence on the British ship. The Commissioners were carried to Boston. England had always prided herself upon affording refuge to political offenders of all countries and was indignant.

Troops were sent to Canada, and demands were made for the surrender of the men and for an apology. The brusque tone of the original note was softened by the influence of the Prince Consort and the command of Queen Victoria. After some delay the American Government yielded, and the two Commissioners were placed on board an English steamer.

China and Japan.

P. J. MOYER.—If China did not agree to all the demands of Japan, will you kindly tell us the demands, substance of same, with which she refused to comply?

China acceded to the demands regarding Mongolia, with the exception of the agricultural demand. Group V. was withheld for future discussion. This was a group of seven articles relating to the employment by China of Japanese advisers in political, financial, and military affairs, to the Japanese supervision of Chinese police, to the right of Japan to ownership of Chinese land, to the Japanese supervision of manufacture and purchase by China of munitions of war, and to various railroad and mining rights; also to the right of Japan to propagate Buddhism in China.

China agreed to the demands of Group V. respecting the Fukien Province, and her final proposals refused only to authorize Japan to supply half the arms used by China, to participate in the conduct of Chinese arsenals, to appoint Japanese advisers in China, and to preach Buddhism. They disliked the Japanese proposal to postpone the discussion of Group V. to some future time, but accepted it on May 9, when the Japanese ultimatum relegated the group to future discussion.

Death of Lucretia.

HOMER M. GREEN.—Kindly give me all the information possible regarding Botticelli's, "Death of Lucretia," published in the Sunday Supplement in April.

The "Death of Lucretia" is now in the collection of Mrs. John L. Gardner in Boston, Mass. It is one of the later works of Botticelli, and may have been designed as panels for furniture. Some critics maintain that much of the painting was executed by pupils of the master.

It is interesting as a reflection of the interest of his time in classic learning. The picture shows a change in his mind from the serenity of his earlier works to a more agitated, vehement, and intense manner. The background, showing the architectural beauty and regularity of Rome, is employed as a setting for the tragic incident of the story, to heighten the effect of the outrage by showing the city which stood for the personification of law and order.

The three panels show three phases of the same incident. In the centre a group of armed men, summoned by the cry of Collatinus, who stands above the body of his self-slain wife, all show by their attitudes their horror and anger. Behind Collatinus is an arch of triumph depicting the glorious scenes of ancient Rome. At the left, in a portico of the building, Tarquin is shown seizing upon Lucretia, having treacherously stolen upon her while he was her guest. He threatens her with his sword. At the right Lucretia falls swooning among her women. In the centre is shown her body, the sword still in her breast, she having killed herself, refusing to live shamed.

Crow's Nest.

S. E. B.—Please inform me of the height of the crow's nest on a battleship from the surface of the water; also what is the greatest distance at which one in that position can see another in a similar position with the most powerful glass?

We have been unable to find this information. Perhaps some TIMES reader may give you the distances.

British Societies.

J. B. sends L. E. Kremer the address of a British society of which he is a member. The Overseas Club, Herbert Riley, Secretary, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Ships to Archangel.

C. B. O.—In a discussion it was asserted that of fifty-two ships which had left New York for Archangel, not one had arrived; that they had all been taken into Kirkwall or Stornoway by the English and their cargoes unloaded. Can you give me any data about this?

The port of Archangel does not open until April, and we are informed that the estimate of fifty-two ships having sailed from New York is too high. Seventeen ships are known to have sailed from New York bound for Archangel, and of these only two, the Tyr and the Signe, were taken into Kirkwall, but no action has been taken with respect to their cargoes.

Two other vessels, the Kurak and the Czaritza, are on their second voyage, proving that they at least got through safely and returned. The Czar, which left this port on June 2, arrived safely at Archangel.

Registration of Architects.

GEORGE H. DIEMER.—I understand that a law has been passed in New York State governing the registration of architects. If so, kindly give particulars.

This law, and all the conditions governing it, were published in full in The American Architect for May 26, 1915. This paper is published at 50 Union Square, New York City. The administration of the law is in charge of the University of the State of New York at Albany.

Censorship.

Mrs. A. HUSSER.—Very often the papers contain cables via London unfavorable to the Allies. Can you explain how such news is passed by the censor?

In which States does a majority decide in civil cases?

The censorship is supposed to suppress only such news as would have a detrimental effect upon the military operations of the country. Its object is not the suppression of unfavorable news as such.

By the Constitutions of Texas, California, Nevada, North and South Dakota three-fourths of a jury may render a verdict in civil actions.

Workmen's Compensation Act.

A READER.—Kindly inform me if an employer is compelled in this State to hold a compensation policy.

This is a compulsory law in New York State since July, 1914. All injuries arising out of or in course of employment causing disability for more than two weeks, or death, must be compensated. The industries covered include all hazardous employments. Persons compensated in private employment include all employes in industries covered, excluding farm laborers and domestic servants. Public employment not included. The entire cost rests upon the employer, who must give proof of financial ability to make payments, or must insure in a State fund, a mutual or stock company. An employer who insures in a State fund is released from all liability for compensation of injured employes.

Tenpenny Nails.

BUTLER REBER.—Please inform me where and how nails became known for sizes as tenpenny or twelvepenny nails.

The adjectives tenpenny, twelvepenny, &c., now used to denote nails of certain sizes, originally in the fifteenth century denoted the price of nails per hundred. The original significance was lost in the fluctuation of prices, but retained to designate sizes.

Natural Education.

J. W. FAWCETT.—All your questions will be answered by Mrs. Winifred Sackville Stoner's book on natural education, published at Indianapolis in 1914, which you may consult at the Public Library or obtain through any bookseller.

Employment Agencies.

S. A. DE BEAR.—Can you tell me which State department has control of employment agencies?

Refer your matter to the Department of Labor, Albany, N. Y.

Serge and Taffeta Frocks
Dame Fashion's Latest Caprice

Smartly tailored are they, with a sturdiness of development that will make them ideal trotting frocks for late summer and early fall wear.

Finest French serge you'll find combined with crisp, lustrous taffeta, plain or in large block plaids, showing dark greens and reds and blues outlined in gold. Even a casual survey will bring the conviction that you like these newer frocks very, very much.

A demure little model is of taffeta with twelve-inch band of serge at the bottom of the wide skirt. The wide cuffs and belt with square tabs are adorned with black bone buttons, giving a mannish finish, which is offset by a wholly feminine collar of white Georgette crepe piped with the taffeta. 15.00.

A black taffeta combined with navy serge, on tailored coatee lines, garnished with many bone buttons, is 17.98, and a serge frock trimmed with plaid taffeta (note the reversal of fabrics) is 20.00.

Varied models for misses, 12.98 to 20.00.
For women 15.00 to 37.98.

EDITORIAL
The Cost of Doing Business.

Do you know how much it costs to sell, wrap and deliver a dollar blouse?

Probably not.

These at the head of this store know it. They know to the fraction of a penny. It amounts to a very considerable percentage of the gross profit on that blouse. There is very little left when the amount is deducted. Sometimes, when the dollar blouse is sold closely, there is nothing left after the costs of selling, wrapping and delivering are deducted.

Please read and analyze the following:

Mrs. X steps up to the blouse counter. She looks over the lines because she really wants a blouse to wear tomorrow to Mrs. Z's. She finally selects what she knows pleases her. "Charge and send it, please," she says, and leaves the department. She gets her blouse that afternoon and wears it to Mrs. Z's home the next day. She likes her blouse and keeps it.

Soon after Mrs. X leaves the blouse department a her friend, Mrs. Y, approaches. Mrs. Y does not need a blouse; in fact, she has little idea of buying. She is SIMPLY SHOPPING. She looks over practically the same assortment that Mrs. X looked over and finally selects one. "Charge and send it, please," says she, and walks away.

Her blouse reaches her about the same time Mrs. X receives hers. She does not need a blouse. She does not want a blouse. In short, the subject of blouses is giving her no concern whatever. The result is the blouse remains in its original box in her closet until a week or so later, when she discovers it and sends it back.

Both of these blouse transactions cost Bamberger's the same amount. On Mrs. X's purchase we made a profit. On Mrs. Y's we lost exactly the price of selling, wrapping and sending, AND THE BLOUSE WAS OUT OF OUR STORE, MANY DAYS.

The above transactions, hypothetical though they are, are fairly illustrative.

Won't YOU co-operate with us and become a Mrs. X?

Talk it over with your friends.

HAPPENINGS IN MOTORDOM DURING THE WEEK

GOOD SHORT RUN LEADS ALONG ATLANTIC SEABOARD

Route to Atlantic City Is Delightful After First Stages Have Been Passed—Resort 140 Miles from New York by Road.

Motorists whose lot it is to pass the summer in New York will be glad to exchange the city's humid atmosphere for the clear and bracing air of the Atlantic seaboard, especially when this desirable change can be pleasantly accomplished by traversing an interesting country with excellent road surface. This accounts for the high favor in which the Jersey coast routes are held by owners of automobiles.

For the run to Atlantic City, outlined below by the Bureau of Tours of the Automobile Club of America, three exits from New York present themselves: One by taking the Municipal Ferry from the Battery to Staten Island and crossing the island to Tottenville, from which point the ferry must again be taken to Perth Amboy; a second, by the Forty-second Street Ferry to Weehawken, thence southward through Newark, Elizabeth, and Rahway to Perth Amboy, and the third by the new ferry from the Battery to Atlantic Highlands. Each route has its advocates; the first and third avoid the busy streets in the North Jersey cities and a rough stretch of road south of Rahway, while the ferry across New York Harbor and the Tottenville-Perth Amboy ferry are escaped by the Weehawken route.

Once beyond the Amboys, however, the route suggested is by way of the splendid Ocean Boulevard, which is reached over a few miles of very poor road between South Amboy and Keyport, but which amply repays this preliminary inconvenience by the magnificent run it affords as soon as the road, passing New Monmouth, reaches the Boulevard at Atlantic Highlands. This is, in a sense, the starting point if the new ferry is used.

Rising over the Navesink Heights to Highlands, the route crosses the Shrewsbury River to Highland Beach and opens up a wonderful stretch of coastal scenery, as it pursues its winding course, by easy grades and gentle curves, and over a perfect surface. These gratifying conditions prevail for miles with sufficient variation in the aspect of the country traversed to make the trip interesting, extending down the coast through Seabright, Long Branch, and Allenhurst to Asbury Park. Having covered about sixty miles from New York this bright and cheerful place suggests a stop for luncheon.

Continuing south through picturesque but rigidly governed Ocean Grove, the smaller resorts of Bradley Beach and Avon are passed through. A right turn along the shore of Shark River in Belmar leads past Como Lake Station to Spring Lake, a charming little holiday resort free from the legislative restrictions in force in some of the other towns along the route. Just south of Spring Lake is Sea Girt, long the scene of the annual rifle-shooting competitions of the army and navy, where the route takes a turn inland before it swings south again through Manasquan and Brielle to Point Pleasant.

From here an interesting run may be made along the shore, by keeping straight south on Barnegat Bay through Mantoloking to Seaside Park, but the main route turns west at Point Pleasant and proceeds through Burrsville and the land of whispering pines to Laurel Farms and Lakewood. Lakewood lies eighty miles from New York by the Ocean Boulevard and shore road and, although chiefly valued as a pleasant Winter resort in the midst of its pine woods, and although some of its hotels are not open except in Winter, it may conveniently be made a halt.

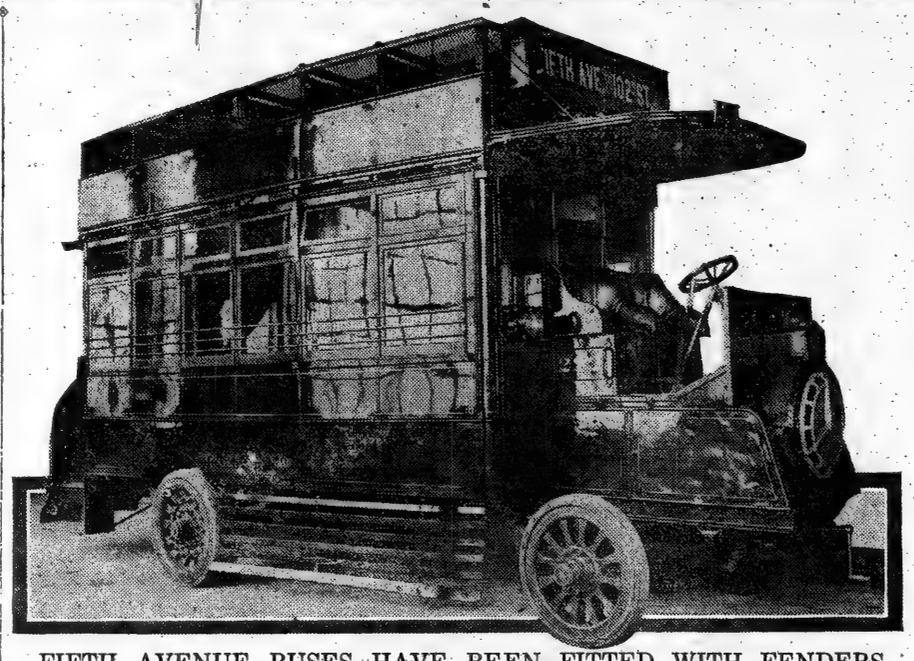
The route from Lakewood runs south past a lake and across the railroad to Toms River, where a road branches off to the left for Island Heights and Seaside Park. Crossing the river, however, the main route keeps on for Forked River and Waretown close to Barnegat Bay, where the views over the bay and to the great Atlantic beyond are of impressive character. The whole neighborhood now being traversed teems with wild life and enjoys a deservedly high reputation among sportsmen on that account, a spot frequently selected as headquarters being Barnegat, the next place on the route.

Southward of Barnegat is Manahawken, from which a new road leads due east for the Island Strips, on which are situated Barnegat City and Beach Haven. Running through Manahawken, the road now traverses a quaint and picturesque bit of country as it passes Cedar Run, Staffordville, and West Creek to Tuckerton, in the spotlight of late on account of its famous "wireless" plant, where the route swings inland for New Gretna.

Shortly after passing the church in New Gretna, a sharp left turn is made and a tract of salt marsh crossed to the Mullica River, which is crossed by a fine, long bridge. Passing the Soldiers' Monument, half a mile beyond the bridge, the road turns left through Port Republic and pursues its winding course across the level country by way of Smithville, Oceanville, and North Absecon to Absecon. Here the main Philadelphia road branches off to the right, but the coast route, following the trolley tracks along Atlantic City Pike through Pleasantville, turns sharp left into Atlantic City Boulevard and finishes on South Carolina Avenue in Atlantic City, the most famous resort on the Atlantic Coast.

From New York the total distance is 140 miles, while from Asbury Park it is eighty miles and from Lockwood sixty. Hotel accommodation is practically unlimited in Atlantic City as regards variety of quality and rates, but it is only common prudence when visiting a place of such wide popularity to take the precaution of making arrangements well in advance.

MAP OF COAST ROUTE.



FIFTH AVENUE BUSES HAVE BEEN FITTED WITH FENDERS.

Long wooden safety fenders have been hung beneath the bodies of all motor buses operated by the Fifth Avenue Coach Company on Fifth Avenue, Riverside Drive and other thoroughfares in the city. The fenders are hung on either side of the buses, between the front and rear wheels, and curve outward toward the rear, so that the rear wheels of each vehicle are protected.

Oddly enough, the majority of accidents to pedestrians in the streets of both New York and London on account of the motor bus have been rear-wheel accidents. People have a way of waiting for the front wheels of the bus to pass them and then heedlessly walking into the path of the rear wheels. New York bus accidents last year were only one pedestrian injured to over 1,500,000 miles of service. With the installation of the fenders it is believed that mishaps to persons in the streets are very much a thing of the past as regards the motor bus.

The installation of the fenders called for an interesting bit of shop management at the company's garage on 102d Street, just east of Fifth Avenue. It was desirable that the full fleet of vehicles should appear upon the streets with fenders attached. This called for rapid work in a wholesale way. Everything was in readiness for the installation when the crews brought in their buses late Saturday night, July 17, after the last trips. A corps of mechanics was on hand and the fenders, fully assembled, were piled at convenient points nearby. As each big green vehicle rolled in it was quickly attacked by the workmen, and long before daybreak the installation had been accomplished upon each of the 150 buses.

S. A. E. HAS ISSUED NEW DATA SHEETS

Many Subjects Covered in Latest Addition to Valuable Handbook of Society.

The Society of Automobile Engineers has sent to its members a number of additional data sheets for the S. A. E. Handbook. Among the data sheets are those giving details of the most recently adopted standards of the society, rendering immediately available the information as to these. The new yoke and rod end pin standards, large hex spark plug shell, large diameter thread pitches, standard sizes of pneumatic tires, recommended practice for pleasure car frames, side-outlet carbureter flanges, larger-sized flared tube ells and tees, and the new specifications for ground-return electrical installations on gasoline automobiles are described and illustrated clearly.

In addition, the table of horse-power values derived from the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce formula has been extended to cover eight and twelve cylinder engines. Conversion tables of percentage of grade to angle of grade are also included. Piston displacement tables for eight and twelve cylinder engines of from 137.4 to 1,531.5 cubic inches content are given. Two sheets are devoted to crank angles and corresponding piston positions. The effect of altitude on horse-power development of gasoline engines is treated on three sheets, with curves and formulas. Diametrical and circular pitch tables, which are useful to engineers in laying out transmissions and other gear work, are given on four sheets. To the metric conversion data previously issued there has been added a table giving decimals of millimeter for each thousandth of an inch. It is believed that this is the first time this information has been distributed generally.

The new table of standard linear units should be found beneficial, as well as the conversion curve of miles per gallon to liters per 100 kilometers, enabling the engineer to judge intelligently of gasoline consumption performance expressed in terms of the metric system. The sheets on the standardization of pipe thread gauges, total keyway depth, equivalent values of electrical, mechanical and heat units and the economical selection of belts and pulleys, make the Handbook of greater value.

Simultaneously with the distribution of the new sheets, a revised index was issued containing exhaustive cross-references in order that all data in the Handbook, which is now constituted of over 400 pages bound in two loose-leaf folders, can be located in a minimum of time. The members of the society are furnished with a complete index for insertion in each volume of the Handbook. As new standards now before the society for mail ballot are adopted, additional data sheets will be issued. The society also collects and prepares for publication other data than its adopted standards, when the former are of direct interest to the automobile engineer and manufacturer, proper credit being given to the original sources. The Handbook is one of the most valuable products of the society. In addition to the official version of newly adopted and firmly established automobile engineering standards, it contains more data necessary in the automobile drafting room than are obtainable in any other one publication.

Motor Buses In Canal Zone.

Four motor buses, recently purchased by the Panama Railroad Company, were put in regular service between East Balboa, Balboa Heights, and Ancon on July 1.

BIG FUTURE IN RUSSIA.

Motor Trucks Will Be Needed for Her Freight Problem, Says Consul.

The demand for automobiles in Russia has been covered mostly by imported goods according to United States Consul General John H. Snodgrass, stationed at Moscow. Imports of automobiles and automobile platforms and frames over the European frontiers of Russia were valued at $5,519,000 in 1912, $8,821,000 in 1913, and $8,229,000 in 1914.

"The Russian automobile industry is undeveloped," he reports, "owing partly to the difficulty of competing with the prices of imported automobiles, due to low duty. The poor condition of the roads in Russia is also a great obstacle. There is, however, a great future for the automobile in Russia, owing to the vast territory of the empire and the scarcity of industrial centres and railroads. The country is facing a problem of the highest importance—the regulating of the freight traffic—and it is expected that a considerable number of reliable trucks will be required for this purpose."

TOURIST STARTED AGENCY.

Lone Autoist Was Cause of Prosperous Ontario Business.

What is now a prosperous business in an Ontario village had its beginning in the chance call of an American tourist who was obliged to stop there because of an accident to his car, according to United States Consul Felix S. S. Johnson, stationed at Kingston, Ontario. The manager of the only general store in the village saw in this incident an opportunity for the sale of automobile supplies, and he accordingly added a small stock of pumps, tires, spark plugs, &c., and gasoline to his hardware department.

"The growth of his business has been such," says Mr. Johnson, "that today his window displays of motor car accessories compare favorably with those throughout Canada; he has built a garage and engaged a competent machinist; and he last year disposed of twenty-two American cars to farmers in the surrounding country, and this year, despite the war, has secured orders for fourteen. His automobile sales are a development of the motor-supply department, for he saw that, unless he created a local demand, his trade in accessories would be limited to the infrequent tourist.

"The success of this general store manager would seem to point the way for agencies in other rural sections. The agents in these places have more spare time on their hands, and, with a large circle of friends among the farmers, it is far easier for them to interest would-be purchasers than a salesman sent out from one of the large Canadian cities, who would be a stranger to the men he approached and, as such, looked upon askance."

TRY NEW AUTO FUEL.

Royal Automobile Club Testing Natalite, Made from Sugar.

Motor fuel from sugar house waste is the latest proposition from England, the Royal Automobile Club having made tests with a new fuel, to which the name natalite has been given, from Natal, the country of its origin. It is a mixture, the principal ingredient, alcohol, being obtained from the waste products of sugar refining factories.

Natalite has a specific gravity of .800 and a freezing point very much lower than benzol or petrol. In recent tests with a hydro-aeroplane fitted with a 100-horse power engine it was found that the engine would run at 1,450 revolutions per minute on natalite, as against 1,250 revolutions per minute with gasoline. It is claimed that water will readily extinguish the flames in case of fire.

It has been a common fault with alcohol and its mixtures that unless the combustion is complete and perfect corrosion of the cylinders is apparent after prolonged use. To obviate this there is introduced in natalite a slight percentage of an alkaline substance to neutralize the acidity which leads to the corrosion. In South Africa a test car has been running exclusively on this fuel in its perfected state for the last six months and more, and no trouble of this nature has made an appearance.

URGE ENFORCEMENT OF VEHICLE LIGHT LAW

Safety First Society Is Calling Attention of Police in Rural Districts to Provision Which Applies to Horse-Drawn Wagons.

As a part of its campaign to minimize the number of preventable accidents occurring upon the public streets and highways, the Safety First Society of New York is directing the attention of police authorities in the cities, towns, and villages throughout New York State to the amendment to the highway law requiring lights on all vehicles, which became effective on July 1.

Apparently, the State and local authorities have overlooked this new law, which was enacted by the Legislature on April 26. It provides that every vehicle on wheels while upon any public street or highway must have attached thereto a light or lights, so that they may be visible from the front and from the rear, one hour after sunset to one hour before sunrise. The provisions do not apply to vehicles designed to be propelled by hand or vehicles designed principally for the transportation of hay or straw while loaded with such commodities.

The attention of the police officials in the rural districts is particularly called to this section, as owners of vehicles used for the transportation of hay or straw are only exempt from displaying lights when such vehicles are actually so engaged. At all other times when upon the public highways during the period specified these vehicles must display a light.

Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not to exceed $10. Owing to ignorance upon the part of owners of such vehicles that this law is now in effect, it is not improbable that many arrests will be made for failure to comply with its provisions.

New York City is exempt from the new section, and it does not affect the motor vehicle law, which requires that each automobile must be equipped with three lighted lamps, two in front, visible at least 200 feet in the direction in which the automobile is proceeding, while the third lamp, fastened in the rear, must display the red light, with a white side light reflecting upon the rear number plate so as to render the same visible at least fifty feet away.

In view of the increasing number of accidents at night upon the State highways, involving automobiles, motor cycles, and horse-drawn vehicles, Charles L. Bernheimer, President of the Safety First Society of New York, has written to Governor Charles S. Whitman, referring to the highway law amendment requiring lights on vehicles and suggesting that the police authorities be notified in regard to its provisions and to take the necessary steps to enforce it. It is the contention of Mr. Bernheimer that if prompt action is taken by the local authorities there will be a reduction in the number of accidents, providing the public is duly informed through the press and the regular channels of the Police Departments of the new highway law requirements.

URGES WORK FOR MAIMED.

English Motor Writer Wants Chance for Wounded in Industry.

"We are by now becoming accustomed to the sight of men who have lost limbs in the war in an age when, in the majority of cases, these can be artificially replaced," says H. Massac Buist in The London Morning Post. "The British theory of assisting these pensioners in the past has consisted in teaching them basketmaking and the like. But this is the age of industry, as Germany has recognized for some months by establishing centres all over the Fatherland where soldiers disabled from war service are being specially trained and drafted into factories.

"Our enterprising enemy recognizes rightly that there is no reason why the majority of such men should become only basketmakers, doorkeepers, and the like. They are, instead, swelling the ranks of her armies of manufacturers, because there are so many machines nowadays that can be tended quite successfully by a man with an artificial foot, leg, hand, arm, or eye, while it is obvious that the higher the wages these men are put in the position to earn the better it is for the welfare of the community.

"Cannot we also organize the means of training men broken in the war, and will not the trade unions do the humane thing and enormously increase their popularity by making provision for recruiting such men to their ranks? The nation has urgent need of their services while the war progresses, and their fellow-countrymen would feel the happier to know that, after the campaign, they will be qualified to gain a livelihood."

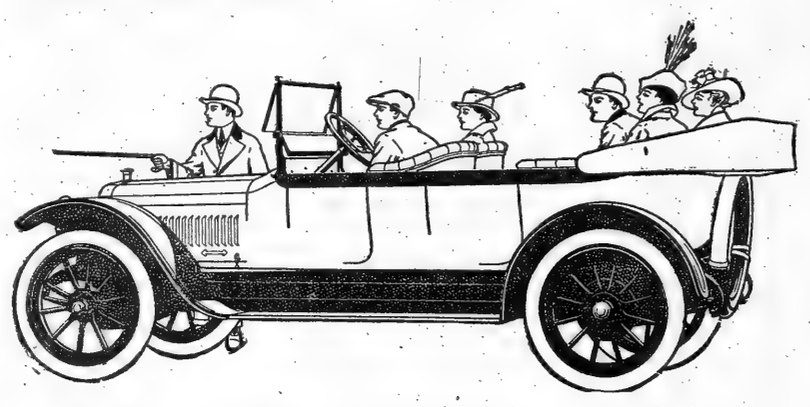
WINTON SIX



Real Quality Takes Time

Never before was caution in buying a car so necessary as now. Cuts in prices indicate cuts in quality; for there are no miracle men among automobile makers. New types of cars impose upon buyers the necessity of discovering for the maker the faults that are always found in undeveloped cars. Then the buyer must wait—sometimes for years—for the discovered faults to be corrected. Never before then does he really get what he expected in the first model.

Safety and satisfaction are sure only when you buy from a maker who has not sacrificed quality, has not cut prices, and has not marketed experiments. The Winton Six, made expressly for buyers who want the best the world produces, is now in its eighth consecutive year of proved success. No other car in existence has an equally wonderful record.

Two models, both sixes. 33 H. P. $2285. 48 H. P. $3250.

THE STANDARDIZED COLE 8

A New Standard of Motor Car Value

The motoring world has witnessed an establishment of new automobile values, based on the application of the multiple cylinder principle—now conceded to be the greatest forward step of the decade.

To know what multiple cylinder motor power really means to a car—the rapid pick-up, the perfect control of high speed or low without gear changes, the new dominance over hills and bad road-stretches, the new confidence and comfort in driving—you should try out a Cole Eight.

The characteristic architecture of Cole Eight embraces the convenient instrument board, the Cole direct drive, and divided front seats. It insures roomy seven-passenger capacity, and the most careful attention to each detail in upholstering, trimming and finish.

All Low "First-Cost" Records Broken

The new 1916 Maxwell shatters all low "first-cost" records for a real automobile. Think of it—a full 5-passenger car—an absolutely complete car, with electric starter, electric lights, high-tension magneto, and every refinement—a luxurious car—a beautiful car—a powerful 50-mile-an-hour-car,—yet a light-weight real economy car—for $655

All Low "After-Cost" Records Broken

The "first cost" of an automobile is a big consideration to any sane man, but the "after cost" is an even bigger consideration to any man who wants to remain sane in his automobile investment.

The "after cost" or upkeep is what a car costs you to maintain, run, and enjoy, after you have bought it, and it is mighty hard to enjoy an automobile if it costs you too much to run.

The Maxwell has lowered all economy records for:

ELECTRIC FIRE APPARATUS IS GAINING POPULARITY

Many Cities Are Finding Battery-Driven Machines Economical and Efficient — Special Advantages of Type.

By A. Jackson Marshall,
Secretary Electric Vehicle Association of America.

Ever since the first fire department was organized in ancient Rome, countries have vied with one another in the development of efficient fire apparatus, endeavoring to make fire the "servant" rather than the "scourge" of man. One of the greatest problems has been the propulsion of apparatus, and at present the greatest effort is being made to develop motor-propelled appliances. It is interesting to follow the development of fire fighting from the early period when the "bucket brigade" was the most efficient means of combating the enemy. The hand engine and man-pulled hose carriage were considered marvels of efficiency in their day, but it is with a mixture of curiosity and amusement that we now look upon apparatus relegated to the glass cases and rusty environs of museums.

In 1875, shortly after the period of the great fires which devastated some of our cities, a new movement sprang up which heralded the modern building era and modern fire-controlling appliances. It was at this time that steam engines came into general use. The inclusion of fire fighting among the scientific problems of the day as one worthy of serious consideration dates from modern times, and hence the many improvements which have been introduced into its practice are all of such recent origin that even now they are only emerging from an embryonic stage.

It is with considerable interest that Fire Chiefs throughout the country are watching the results and performance of electrically propelled fire trucks and engines in the cities where they have been adopted. The very many obstacles that present themselves in the changing of horse-drawn to motorized apparatus of a large Fire Department are such that the utmost care must be used to secure that method of propulsion for apparatus that will give speed, reliability, and efficiency, together with ease and economy of operation. In these points the advantage of the electric over other methods of propulsion is fast establishing itself.

The first storage-battery fire engine in this country came into existence in 1912, when Engine 217 of the New York Fire Department was converted into an electrically propelled apparatus. The engine, originally a horse-drawn steamer of the largest size, was converted to the motor type by the removal of its forward running gear and the substitution of two coupled-rear freight wheels, a storage battery, and the necessary steering and controlling devices. This conversion cost $4,000. The bills for repairs and renewals during two years came to $744.29, $486.97 of which was for battery renewals that were made after the machine had been in service a year and a half. Operating this engine has cost the city $1,370.03.

The experience of Philadelphia with electric fire apparatus has been most successful. Two years ago the first step was taken, and Engine 20, a first-class steam fire engine, weighing 10,500 pounds, horse drawn, was equipped with an attached two-wheel storage-battery tractor. The excellent performance of Engine 20 during the tests made in the congested traffic zone induced the bureau to convert two smaller steam fire engines, horse drawn, to battery tractors, also the two horse-drawn, high-pressure hose wagons to storage battery apparatus. In addition to these five pieces of electric apparatus, the City of Philadelphia has recently ordered two combination hose and chemical wagons and one sixty-five-foot aerial truck, to be storage-battery driven.

In a report on electric fire apparatus given by Chief Mechanician George S. Walker before the Electric Vehicle Association Convention last year some interesting tests were described, in which the electric excelled all the specifications demanded. In one performance of a fire engine equipped with electric tractor a distance of four miles was covered in eleven minutes, while the same distance consumed thirty minutes with horse-drawn apparatus. Chief Walker said of this performance:

"This test was made to corroborate our belief in the battery tractor. Along that route there are many hills and one extremely sharp, dangerous curve, and the time made on that run, eleven minutes, stands today as record time, not excelled by any fire apparatus of any make, weighing very nearly six tons, over the same route. * * * The facts presented to me after over a year's experience are so satisfactory and the results so gratifying that I unhesitatingly say that for use in the congested traffic zone and the close adjacent territory of any large city like Philadelphia, the storage battery tractor is the very best method of propulsion for fire apparatus that is presented by any present-day methods. I sincerely hope that the bureau will be able in the near future to receive the necessary funds that the present small number of motor apparatus may be so augmented that our city will possess the requisite apparatus that modern methods demand."

No more convincing proof of the superiority of the electric fire apparatus could be obtained than a letter from Chief Engineer W. H. Daggett of Springfield, Mass., in which he states that the actual use in the service of the department has shown one of the chief advantages of battery-driven apparatus to be absolute positiveness in starting.

"The pieces we have here," he states, "have never failed to start instantly, and our experience with them has been such as to inspire a feeling of confidence that they are sure to start when needed at any time or place. We have as good gas cars as are owned by any city, but there are times when the crank is used more than once to start the engine, and the larger the engine the more time it takes, also the greater difficulty to spin. Up to the present time we have not thought of failure in starting with our battery-driven apparatus, and no piece has been out of service a minute since it was installed. The battery in the aerial truck is two years old. It is my belief that, making due allowance for the operation of the batteries under adverse conditions, the cost of maintenance of a piece of apparatus is as follows:

Renewal of plates, (in four years).....	$500
Renewal of separators, (in two years,) eighty cells at 35 cents.....	28
Charging batteries, (in four years, at $60 per year).....	240
Broken jars, (four years, at $7 per year)	28
Total in four years.....	$796
Total in one year.....	199

"In other words, I estimate $200 a year as the cost of maintenance of a battery-driven aerial ladder truck of such size and capacity as was formerly drawn to fires by three horses."

When it is considered that the maintenance and upkeep of three horses varies from $500 to $600 per year, it is evident why Chief Daggett is so enthusiastic in his report of the electric apparatus.

In Baltimore, Md., Engine 32 of the Fire Department is equipped with a storage-battery tractor, "which," says Fire Chief Enrich, "is the most reliable and economical apparatus in the whole department, and can always be depended upon."

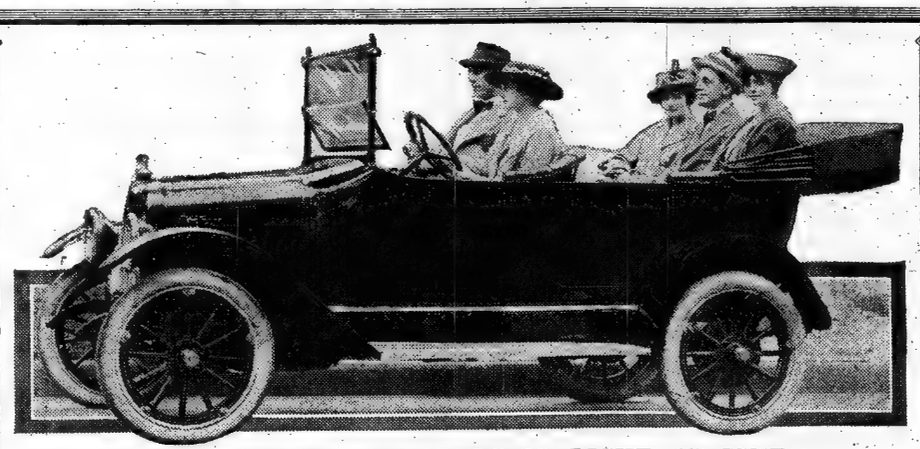
The City of Akron, Ohio, owns a sixty-five-foot aerial truck, equipped with electric tractor, which at a demonstration of speed and climbing grades went up a 13 per cent. grade when carrying a full complement of men and equipment at the rate of eleven miles an hour, and on level streets the tractor propelled the truck at the rate of twenty-six miles an hour without any trouble or showing any loss of power.

"In my judgment," said Chief Mertz, "the storage battery has solved the problem of converting horse-drawn steam fire engines and hook and ladder trucks of any Fire Department to self-propelled apparatus from a practical standpoint."

As in other departments where the horse is being superseded by self-propelled vehicles, it will not be long before every Fire Department of any size will be entirely motorized. It is now a question of which will prove the more efficient means of propulsion, gasoline or the storage battery. It is an established fact that the electric vehicle is more economical to run than a gasoline car. Without a doubt, the gasoline vehicle has its own sphere, and, as Chief Avery of Worcester, Mass., states, its use in suburban districts will not be superseded, but for the exacting work in the conjested and business centres "the electric vehicle," he says, "will be the future machine for fire fighting."

The economy of operating an electrict is due largely to its few working parts. As against the gasoline motor and transmission, with its large number of working parts, a number of which are reciprocating in their action, the electric is driven by one, two, or four motors, as the case may be. The movement is a revolving one, the least wearing of all movements. In addition, these motors are revolved by electric magnetism, and not by explosive forces. The electric car has less than one-half the total parts required in a gasoline car. The life of the storage battery in this class of service is estimated at upward of five years, with one renewal. This estimate is given by Chief Daggett of Springfield, who has had considerable experience with electric fire apparatus.

"The battery tractor has the advantage over the gasoline apparatus," says Chief Walker, "in answering alarms, due to the fact that it is simply necessary for the driver to get on the seat, throw on his controller, and it is under headway in less time than is taken to crank a motor. It eliminates ignition and carburetor troubles in starting the motor in cold weather, and the attendant radiator troubles of freezing and leaking."



ONE OF THE 1916 MODELS OF LIGHT WEIGHT.

The new Maxwell touring car shown above has just come to town. There are no radical mechanical changes in the model, but improved body lines and a roomier tonneau are to be noted. The price is $655.

STATE MOTOR LAWS CODIFIED BY A. A. A.

Wide Divergence of Rulings Found in Matter of Taxation—Speed Laws.

While the automobile trade has been steadily progressing in the direction of cutting down the cost of cars and their maintenance, the thoughts of the lawmakers on motor cars have not been so happily directed.

The Touring Bureau of the American Automobile Association has just completed a codification of the automobile laws as they are at the present writing. This codification will soon be ready for distribution, and a copy may be had by sending to the national headquarters of the association either at Washington or New York.

A casual study will demonstrate that automobiles are essentially subjects for class legislation in most of the States. Not only are they taxed as users of the highways, but, with some exceptions, they are also taxed as personal property. There are also States which have a third means of making the motor-car owner pay. In these the owner is compelled to take out a permit to use his own property for personal pleasure.

The notable exceptions wherein the paying of one tax definitely bars all other forms are in the States of New York, Idaho, Iowa, and Oklahoma. These Commonwealths specifically provide that registration is in lieu of all other taxes. To this list should be added Pennsylvania and Vermont, wherein there are no added taxes, though not so specifically provided for in the legislative acts.

Those States where the owner is required to pay a third tax are Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and the District of Columbia. In Vermont, while escaping the property tax, the owner pays for a driving license.

Louisiana recognizes that miles-per-hour restrictions do not guarantee a sane use of the highway by all its users, and particularly those possessing vehicles of great speed. It places a direct responsibility on all concerned, and should result in rates of speed harmonizing with existing traffic conditions.

Jitneys Force Reduction on Trolleys

Because of the competition of the jitney buses, reports Consul General R. E. Mansfield, the British Columbia Electric Railway, which operates the city and suburban lines in Vancouver and Victoria, has reduced its rates from five-cent fares on transfers to 3½ cents, or eight tickets for a quarter, without transfers.

LAUDS PARDINGTON'S WORK.

Gave Himself to Lincoln Highway Cause, Says Henry B. Joy.

As President of the Lincoln Highway Association, Henry B. Joy, his associate and friend, issued the following appreciation last week of A. R. Pardington and his work:

"In the death of A. R. Pardington the patriotic work of the Lincoln Highway suffers an irreparable loss. His collaborators have lost a commanding officer of peerless efficiency, of unflagging effort, of unflinching judicial fairness, with a patriotic devotion to the cause of the great memorial, the Lincoln Highway, such as could not be exceeded in any cause.

"Mr. Pardington gave of his own means and of himself so liberally that he stimulated every person with whom he came in contact to become a soldier in the cause of the Lincoln Memorial Highway. His example of self-sacrificing devotion to the highway has given the cause an ever-increasing army of followers, who will aid more liberally by donations and personal work as the result of the Pardington example of devotion and patriotism. It is not too much to say, it is not enough to say, that the Lincoln Highway insignia, stretching from Jersey City on the Hudson River to Oakland on the Pacific, is more his work than that of any other one man. Thousands have given dollars to the cause, Pardington gave himself."

NO LACK OF LEATHER.

Secretary of Manufacturers' Association Denies Shortage for Cars.

That a scarcity of first-class leather upholstery for automobiles exists is denied by James B. Reilly, Secretary of the Patent and Enamelled Leather Manufacturers' Association, with headquarters in Boston. Mr. Reilly's Association comprises thirty of the thirty-seven firms engaged in the industry.

"The statement that there is a scarcity of leather is a distorted one," said Mr. Reilly last week. "It is true only in the sense that good leather today costs more than it has for the past four years. Other than this, the markets are well supplied, and in fact the supply exceeds the demand, since the tanneries catering to the wants of the automobile trade are averaging only 50 per cent. capacity. Demand for leather at one price and the supply of same at a higher price is the cause of the so-called scarcity. Any automobile manufacturer so desiring can readily obtain his requirements with little or no difficulty."

NEWS AND NOTES OF THE AUTOMOBILE TRADE

Buffalo and Lackawanna, New York, have been decided upon as the location of the Sun Motor Car Company, a new corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing a light six-cylinder car, which will sell at considerably less than $1,000. The capital stock—all subscribed—of the new company is $750,000, and incorporation papers have already been filed at Albany, N. Y., with the Secretary of State. The new company is an offshoot of the Haynes Automobile Company of Kokomo, Ind., in that several former executives of the Haynes Company are now identified with the Sun Motor Car Company in various capacities, chief of whom are R. Crawford and Roscoe C. Hoffman. The new car is equipped with a high-speed six-cylinder motor which develops 55 horse power. A minimum of 10,000 cars during the twelve months following the completion of the factory is planned.

J. V. Hall, Sales Manager, has announced that plans are under way for greatly enlarging the activities of the Olds Motor Works in foreign countries. One of the preliminary steps has been the establishment of a foreign department, which has been put in charge of a man experienced in handling foreign sales, W. von Zimmerman.

"The amount of service work each purchaser of a Hupmobile is entitled to is regulated and guaranteed by a coupon book issued by the company with each car. Each coupon book contains 100 coupons, each available as full payment for one-half hour service labor on the car when presented at any Hupmobile station in the United States or Canada. This coupon book is guaranteed through a special service fund which has been created and is controlled by the company and its dealer. Each dealer and the company have contributed to this fund for the benefit of the owners, a certain amount to each car manufactured.

The Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company Directors have made arrangements for the increase of their capital stock Aug. 2 from $250,000 to $1,000,000. This action was taken at a recent meeting of the Directors when the payment of the regular monthly cash dividend of 10 per cent. was ordered.

Harry S. Houpt, President of the Hudson Motor Car Company of New York, Inc., has not hesitated to bring cars through by express rather than to disappoint the customer in view of inadequate freight shipments. Forty-eight hour delivery is guaranteed on all "six-forty" phaetons at present.

In one performance of which the Oakland Company has official record, Model 37 made on one and one-half gallons of gasoline fifty-two miles on a country road. The car carried four passengers.

Leading the districts of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company in amount of business for the month carries with it the honor of entertaining the Goodyear goat. To receive him as a prize is the ambition of each district manager. The goat is neither fiction nor allegorical figure. He is a really, truly, sure-enough goat, with whiskers and horns. In token of his chief characteristic he has been denominated "Violet," although he is not that kind of a goat.

The Moline Automobile Company of East Moline, Ill., makers of the Moline-Knight forty, have recently placed on the market a two-passenger roadster listing at $1,475. The new roadster body is similar to its sister car of fifty horse power. It is mounted on the same chassis as the forty horse power five-passenger touring model.

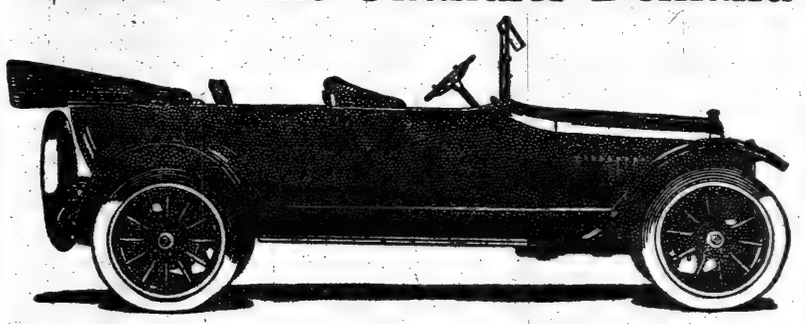
Clodio & Engs, Incorporated, United States representatives and manufacturers of the Houdaille shock absorber, have just received an order from the Mercer Automobile Company for absorbers to equip their 1916 production. Clodio & Engs, Incorporated, have started the manufacture of this article here, and it will now be a standard article on the American market.

W. E. Stalnaker, Vice President and Director of Sales of the Pathfinder Company, announces that plans have been drawn for an addition, 60 by 400, to the present plant to take care of the 3,500 production for 1916.

F. W. Ruggles, General Manager of the Republic Motor Truck Company, at Alma, Mich., has issued a statement that during the fiscal year ended July 15 the company showed an increase in total truck sales of over 500 per cent. Ninety-five per cent. of the total output has been consumed in the United States.

Hugh Chalmers has announced a suggestion contest in accordance with the plans of which $500 in gold will be awarded the winners on Dec. 24. The first prize is $100. There are two prizes of $50, five of $20, twenty of $5, twenty of $2.50, and fifty of $1. The nature of these suggestions may take many forms. Improvements in machinery, substitution of machinery for manual labor, reduction in costs, precautionary health and fire measures, reduction in cost of transportation, express and mail, new advertising ideas, and how to increase sales. The contest is open to all employes except officials.

646% Increase Tells the Story of Nation-Wide Chandler Demand



Chandler History and Convincing Increases

Chandler Light-Weight Six, the first high-grade six-cylinder car weighing less than 3,000 lbs. and selling for less than $2000, introduced to the public during the Chicago Automobile Show, January, 1913.

Ground broken for Chandler factory, April 6th, 1913.

Delivery of Chandlers in quantities began July 30th, 1913. Selling price, $1785.

The year 1914 brought very general recognition to the Chandler Car. Leading dealers sought the Chandler sales-agency and sales leaped forward. Selling price, $1595. The Chandler Light-Six Idea was now thoroughly established.

Year 1915 opened with the announcement of the new Chandler price, $1295, a record-making low price for a high-grade six.

Two new factory buildings and a large addition to the main factory completed by March 1st to take care of added production.

Chandler production increased rapidly. By April 1st we were shipping 40 cars per day by May 5th 50 cars per day, by May 20th 60 cars per day.

April shipments showed 233% increase over April, 1914.

June shipments showed 646% increase over June, 1914.

These Figures Tell the Story of Chandler Success

Roadster or Seven-Passenger Touring Car, $1295

Facts to Remember about the CHANDLER SIX $1295

What is the reason for this tremendous growth in Chandler demand? Just ask yourself this question. The answer is obvious when you know the Chandler car.

It's simply because, regardless of price reductions, regardless of new models, there is no other car of such superior character at a similar price.

No other car selling for less than $2000 possesses all these high-grade features of design, construction and equipment found on the Chandler:

Ford Town Car	640.00

There can be no assurance given against an advance in these prices at any time. We guarantee, however, that there will be no reduction in these prices prior to Aug. 1, 1916.

Profit Sharing with Retail Buyers

On August 1, 1914 we made the announcement that if we could make and sell at retail 300,000 Ford cars between August 1, 1914 and August 1, 1915 we would share profits with the retail purchasers, to the extent of from $40 to $60 on each car. We have sold over 300,000 Ford cars in the time specified, and profit-sharing checks of $50 each will be distributed as rapidly as possible after August 15, 1915. Retail purchasers who have not yet mailed us their profit-sharing coupons, properly endorsed, should do so without delay.

Our plan to profit-share with retail purchasers of Ford cars during 1914-15 has been most successful. We thoroughly believe in it, but, realizing the uncertainty of conditions generally makes it advisable to defer any announcement of future profit-sharing until a later date.

We are, however, confident of our inability to reduce costs for several months, and therefore can offer no profit-sharing for cars delivered during August, September and October, 1915.

TRUCKS Mack TRUCKS

NEW YORK FIRE DEPARTMENT
buys 24 more MACK High Pressure Hose Trucks.

109 in N. Y. Fire Dept.

New York continues to purchase MACK Fire Trucks year after year BECAUSE Macks successfully compete on price, and represent the utmost in truck quality and dependability.

When you buy a MACK Truck for your business—any business—you get the same unvariable quality and service.

If we can build motor trucks for successful fire-fighting, we can build trucks to fit your service, however exacting.

CAPACITIES—1, 1½, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6½, 7½-ton, and 5 to 15-ton tractor-trailers.

HISTORIC HARLEM VALLEY PROVIDES FINE SHORT RUN

On a Trip of 140 Miles Much Attractive Rolling Country Can Be Enjoyed—Roads Are Good for Most of Distance.

Qualifications generally desired by motorists on a tour are good roads, first-class hotel accommodations, and scenery sufficiently out of the ordinary to leave its impress on the mind in pleasant memories. The 140 miles of charming country covered by the route outlined below, traversing the valley of the Harlem and the watershed district of Westchester and Putnam Counties, because it combines these desirable qualities to a marked degree, are recommended by the Bureau of Tours of the Automobile Club of America.

The most suitable route out of the city runs north on Broadway, across

HARLEM VALLEY RUN.

Columbus Circle, and continues as far as Yonkers, crossing the Harlem River at Kingsbridge. An alternative may be taken by Riverside Drive, which, though not in very good condition as far as road surface is concerned, is more interesting than the Broadway run.

At Getty Square, in Yonkers, the road bears left and continues by way of Broadway to Hastings-on-Hudson, passing the monument which marks the locality of Washington's headquarters, to the church in Dobbs Ferry. With a right turn in Dobbs Ferry the route now takes an easterly turn as far as Ardsley, where it turns left and follows the Saw Mill River Road through Elmsford and Eastview to Briarcliff Manor, beautifully situated 30 miles out of New York amid the Westchester Hills.

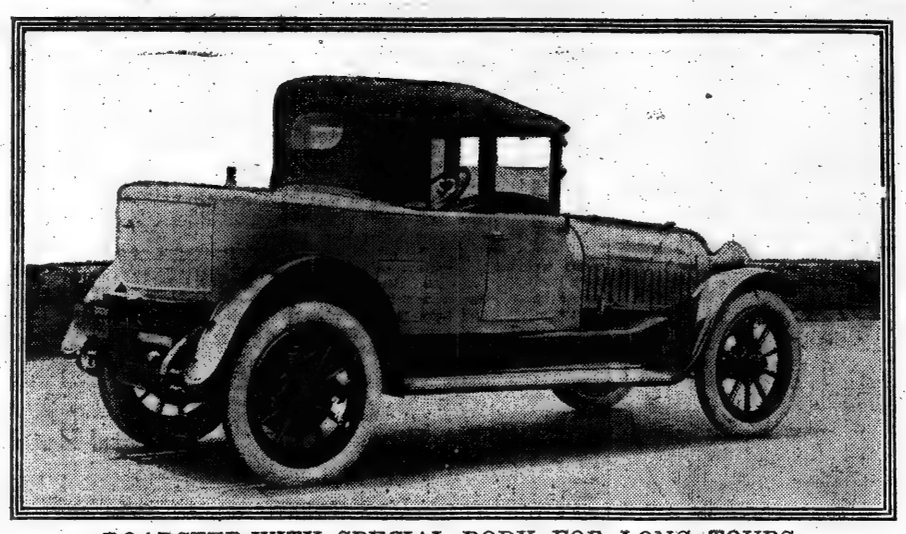
Northward from Briarcliff Manor, the Mahopac Road leads through Merritts Corners to Kitchawan and Croton Lake, where the route turns right and skirts the southern shore of the lake to Pines Bridge. Here Croton Lake is crossed and the route, swinging left, takes a left fork and crosses the railroad at Croton Lake Station. Following the course of the railroad northward to Yorktown Heights, the route circles round Amawalk Station and crosses the tracks, then, continuing along the west shore of the Amawalk Reservoir, it runs straight on to Baldwin Place. With another sharp left turn, and again crossing the railroad, the right fork is taken and a beautiful, winding road along the shore of the lake is followed to Mahopac.

The eastern shore of Mahopac Lake, noted for the attractiveness of its scenery, is now skirted by the route which passes North Branch Reservoir and, crossing the railroad bridge, continues straight on by Lake Glenida to the Court House in Carmel. The road up hill through Patterson is a particularly picturesque and very winding one as it approaches Pawling, seventy-four miles from New York, which provides a most suitable stopping place amid beautiful surroundings.

On the homeward run the route pursues a southerly direction through Patterson and Doansburg, and passes between Big Brook and Sodom Reservoirs. Winding around the western end of the lake, the route passes Peach Lake on the way to North Salem, pursuing its serpentine course through scenery of the most attractive character to Cross River, situated on the reservoir of the same name. Immediately after crossing the causeway the road bears away to the left and continues straight through the charming old town of Bedford to Armonk.

The huge Kensico Reservoir with its enormous dam at its southern extremity, is now skirted by our route along its whole length, and the fine main road passes through Valhalla and Castle Heights and enters Broadway in the City of White Plains, completing the distance of 117 miles by the above route from New York City. White Plains makes a convenient place to stop for dinner.

The last 25 miles of the round trip can most conveniently be accomplished by following the Central Avenue route into New York, for although its surface is becoming somewhat worn it avoids the congestion caused by the construction of the new subway on the other route. Leaving White Plains by the Tarrytown route a left turn is made into Central Avenue, which is then followed through Harts Corners and Tuckahoe, past the Empire City Race Track, into Van Cortlandt Park. Continuing straight on to Woodlawn Cemetery, the route takes a right turn and leads across the park to Broadway, which is then followed south and the route completed.



ROADSTER WITH SPECIAL BODY FOR LONG TOURS.

This shows a special body with extra road conveniences on a Marmon chassis. In the rear deck are five compartments, for two mounted tires, tools, a box holding two dress suit cases, chains and tubes, and the collapsible top, respectively. Folding frames attached to the doors hold glass windows, and the car can be turned into a cabriolet type.

EDINBURGH'S ONE ELECTRIC

No vehicles driven by electric power have been in use in this part of Scotland for pleasure or business, according to United States Consul Rufus Fleming, stationed at Edinburgh.

"It is noteworthy," he reports, "that the Edinburgh corporation is the first purchaser of an electric vehicle in this district, and still more noteworthy that it is the intention of the committee in charge of the municipal electricity plant to encourage the introduction of electric trucks, vans, and other cars. The committee has acquired, through a London agency, an American-built electric lorry or wagon, having a carrying capacity of 1½ tons and a guaranteed speed of 11 miles per hour on the level and 5 miles per hour on a gradient of 1 in 10 with full load. With a full charge the lorry is capable of traveling 40 miles with a load of 1½ tons and 50 miles with a half load. The control is effected by one handle fixed to the steering wheel, which alters the speed of the motor, so that there are only the controller handle and the brakes to manipulate.

"The electricity required for one full charge is about 35 units. With electricity at 2 cents per unit, the cost per mile will be slightly less than 1¾ cents on moderately level roads with good surface. The cost of the lorry complete is $3,382. The committee has undertaken to supply electricity for the charging of such vehicles at the rate of 2 cents per unit and has made arrangements not only for charging but also for storing lorries in the municipal electric stations. It is considered not unlikely that the result will be a fair demand for commercial electric lorries and vans and also electric cars for pleasure and professional purposes."

STATE RECEIVES FEW AUTO FINES

According to a compilation issued last week by the office of Francis M. Hugo, Secretary of State, the Treasury of the Commonwealth of New York has been enriched by automobile fines only to the extent of $63,198.76 in the period from August, 1910, to July of this year. Of this amount New York County contributed $26,042.40, Queens $4,583, Kings $1,887, Nassau $9,350, and Westchester $10,275. The princely sum of $10 had been received from Erie County, which contains the City of Buffalo. The Secretary of State is wondering what has happened to the fines from the many counties almost unheard from in five years. The fines are supposed to be turned in to the State and the money applied to roads.

NEW FERRY JERSEY GATEWAY

Boats Every Fifteen Minutes Across Hudson at Dyckman Street.

The new Dyckman Street and Englewood ferry is a gateway to the excellent roads of New Jersey. The Englewood terminal is at the foot of the Palisades Interstate Park. A road which has recently been completed by the Interstate Park Commission leads the automobilist from the ferry through a most beautiful section of the park and connects with the main road for trips to all points.

The Automobile Club of America will furnish its members, on request to the Bureau of Tours, numerous trips that can be covered from the terminal. To reach the ferry by auto, follow Broadway direct to Dyckman Street and turn west. Boats run at intervals of fifteen minutes from 6 A. M. till 11 P. M. and on Saturdays and Sundays from 6 A. M. till midnight.

MOTOR CYCLES HAVE SHORT LIFE AT THE FRONT

Various Causes, Mostly Carelessness, Ascribed by Dispatch Rider Who Has Viewed the Scrap Heap Where Old Machines Go.

One of the motor cycle dispatch riders in "Northern France" has written to Motor Cycle of London telling of the short life of machines under the war conditions. He says in part:

"Have you ever experienced that sensation of grief, pity, and desolation as you gaze on your motor cycle after a too sudden familiarity with a steam roller? Three hundred dollars' worth of metal that had once conveyed you now a contortioned nightmare at your feet! A similar, but magnificent sentiment comes upon one when roving round the scrap heap at —— base. These wounded warriors that formerly played such a heroic life at the front are now but components of a scrap heap.

"It is an open secret that motor cycles have only a short career out here, rarely, if ever, lasting longer than three months. Those machines that come to an end by being struck by shells or which run into Jack Johnson holes at forty miles per hour by night we can understand and forgive for breaking up; but then, the majority of machines are ridden behind the lines, to and from the base, and elsewhere, and for this ridiculously short life the reason must be found.

"The scrap heap is composed of all makes, including a sprinkling of nearly every well-known machine. Here is a —— minus belt and magneto, with a buckled wheel; here a ——, the tank splashed with blood, and a broken steering head. The tell-tale hand on the broken speedometer that happened to be fitted indicated 37 miles per hour. A —— had been ridden in under its own power in such a condition that it was marvelous that it went. The four engine bolt nuts were so loose that the carburetor could be seized in the hand, and it, with the cylinder head, moved bodily to and fro half an inch in either direction.

"In another case one piston ring only was left on the piston, also there was a cracked valve seating, a broken ball race in the magneto, and several other minor derangements. Further, another machine that looked brand new and in perfect order on close inspection revealed the off front fork cracked at the lower end and the three-speed hub gear out of action. On another the piston rings were broken and cylinder badly scored through lack of lubrication. There they lie on the ground, one supported by the other, a spectacle of abject misery!

"After a comparative inspection of the various machines the writer considers that the reasons why the motor cycles do not stand up to their work are continual fast riding over exceedingly bad roads and pavé; individual machines passing through the hands of too many riders, the use of unsuitable lubricating oil, lack of attention and adjustment, bad handling, and joy-riding.

"Something might be said about the Government methods employed out here, and a fair percentage of the blame hangs on their shoulders, so the less said on this score the better, although, after all, the responsibility in each small department depends on the organization and initiative of an N. C. O.—usually a regular army man—the minor, yet important, details never reaching the officer in charge, especially as the men are not encouraged to criticise just now."

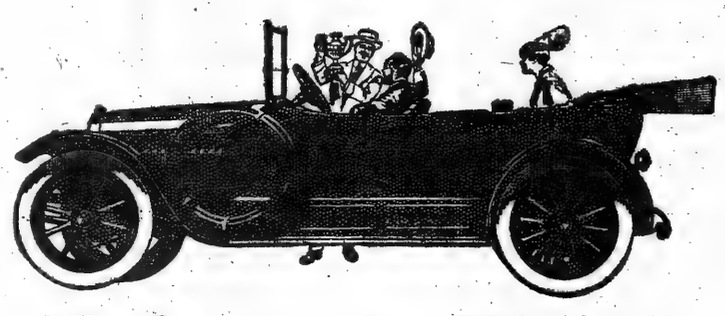
YELLOWSTONE A MECCA.

Motorists in East Are Eager to Reach Park—Regulations Drafted.

That automobilists have only waited the opening of the Yellowstone National Park to make it an objective touring point in their plans is indicated by the many who have inquired at the Touring Department of the American Automobile Association both at the Washington and at the New York headquarters, not a few of whom are from the extreme East. Fully 30 per cent. of the transcontinental tourists have scheduled a trip through the park, and this ratio is now rapidly increasing as the opening day approaches.

The plan for opening the Yellowstone to automobiles on Aug. 1 is completed. Colonel Brett, U. S. A., Superintendent of the park, has compiled a set of rules to govern the peculiar situation which this season is bound to come about when it is appreciated that the roads are not all they should be, and that the mountain horses, used by the stage lines, are too wild to take chances with.

HUDSON $1350 F.O.B. DETROIT MICH.



Hudson—the Winner

In the Race for Fine-Car Leadership

The greatest race that Motordom ever knew has been run in the past two years. And HUDSON is the winner.

It started with the era of light cars, of new refinements in designing. It started with this new-type HUDSON Six, a conception of Howard E. Coffin.

This became the pattern car which dozens of makers followed. It established new fine-car standards. It started a new form of rivalry for leadership in cars of distinction.

Last year this new-type HUDSON became the most popular quality car. Both in dollars and cars it outsold any other with a price above $1200.

This season the new model has doubled last year's demand. And an output of 100 HUDSONS per day fails to keep up with orders.

This new-type HUDSON made its appearance about 21 months ago. The price was then $1750. It is now only $1350.

Despite all its attractions, HUDSON designers have made 51 distinct improvements.

This season it brings out the Yacht-Line body. It introduces Lustrous Finish, for which the equipment cost $100,000. It is wider and roomier. Its upholstery is enameled leather.

There is no car this year to compare with this HUDSON. It gives a value which no smaller maker can give. It dominates among high-grade Light Sixes. Won't you come and prove that?

THE best Pneumatic Tire is only as strong as its weakest part.

Strengthening its strongest parts is as useless as putting a fifth Wheel on a Wagon.

Yet this is often done to provide "Selling-feature" and "Talking Point."

The weakest part of every Pneumatic Tire is its Walls or Sides, not its Tread,—its Cotton Fabric or "Stocking," not its Rubber "Sole."

No price would be too high to pay for a material that, replacing Cotton in the Walls of Pneumatic Tires, would last as long as the Goodrich Rubber Tread could be made to wear.

Neither Silk, nor Linen, nor any other known Fabric yet discovered is so good, for this purpose, as Cotton,—and choice long-fibred Cotton is the best material that money can buy for Tire Fabric.

WE use nothing less in Goodrich Tires, and test every foot of it up to 380 lbs. to the Square Inch, before we percolate it with the most adhesive Rubber Compound ever made for this purpose.

We then shape this rubberized Fabric into Tires, with scrupulous care to have the tension on each square inch of fabric precisely the same,—that tension being controlled by a machine as sensitive as the eye, and infinitely more precise than the handwork of the most skilled Operative could make it.

To do this work we have the most highly-trained men in the Rubber Industry,—trained in the Precision that practice and our 45-year EXPERIENCE make perfect.

NO Tire Manufacturer, if he received a price of $200 per Tire, could put better Fabric into the Walls of his Tires, use greater care, more sensitively adjusted Tension devices, or more adhesive Rubber between each layer of fabric.

Because, we know the vital importance of THE BEST in this part of the Tire, and use it there unsparingly.

Made as always, —the same reliable Construction, the same dependable Service—without anything whatever taken out of Quality, no matter what reductions in List-Price are ever made.

Only 5% Plus for this Best Non-Skid Tire

Note following comparative prices. "A," "B," "C" and "D" represent four Widely-Sold Non-Skid Tires:

Size	Goodrich Safety Tread	OTHER MAKES
		"A"	"B"	"C"	"D"
30x3	$9.45	$10.55	$10.95	$16.35	$18.10
30x3½	12.20	13.35	14.20	21.70	23.80
32x3½	14.00	15.40	16.30	22.85	25.30
34x4	20.35	22.30	23.80	31.15	33.85
36x4½	28.70	32.15	33.60	41.85	41.40
37x5	33.90	39.80	41.80	49.85	52.05

But,—notwithstanding all this,—the FABRIC is the part of the Tire which goes first.

Because the sides of the Tire do most of the work in running,—bending and stretching a million times an hour, in scores of different directions.

This bending of the sides causes Friction between the layers of Canvas working against each other,—Friction causes Heat—the Heat over-cures and dries out the Rubber Adhesive between layers, which then separate from each other, in spots, the threads weakening or wearing out chafing against each other.

Then you have, in due time, the incipient blow-out, or other form of Tire-Death.

PUT more layers of Fabric than we do in the walls, to strengthen them, and the friction increases, with faster deterioration of the Rubber through the greater heat engendered.

Put fewer layers, and the walls would not be strong enough to carry the load of the Car.

So there you are—Mr. Tire User!

Why put MORE layers of Fabric in the Walls of the Tire than will properly carry the load, when each additional layer is an additional developer of that FRICTION-HEAT which is to Tires what Old Age is to Man?

THAT is the reason we build, in the Goodrich Tire, a carefully BALANCED Tire, emulating the famous example of "The Deacon's One-Hoss Shay" in which "the Sills were just as strong as the Thills and the Thills as strong as the floor."

The Maximum Fabric efficiency and THEN,—the rest of the Tire built up to that.

Result,—

—The most RESILIENT Tire that can be made with Fabric Walls,—at the fairest price per Mile of performance.

Why pay more for any Tire?

STROLLING PLAYERS OF THE CATSKILLS

Everything from Trained Bears to Shakespeare Provided for Delectation of Summer Visitors.

When the Bear Counts the Contents of the hat.

The Bugle Announces that the Bear will begin his dance and tricks.

WHO of us that has ever summered in the Catskill Mountains but knows and remembers fondly those wandering entertainers, vagabond mummers, that come year after year—whence, nobody ever tries to guess; whither, more mysterious yet? A motley throng, appearing one after another as the Summer days pass, vanishing over the brow of a mountain peak.

Suddenly a clear bugle note floats out and "The bear! the bear!" shouts everybody who knows. Up the trail comes lumbering a familiar figure heavily clad in brown furs. It is the trained bear of the Three Frenchmen, and one or more of the trainers is soon seen following at the other end of the leash.

Jean, Pierre, and Louis have been known to Catskill resorters for many a long year. At times they appear with one bear; sometimes they have temporarily added another to their menagerie. Their home was once in Ellenville, at the foot of the Shawangunk Mountains, and from these headquarters they made excursions all over the adjacent counties as soon as each season brought city throngs to the countless hotel verandas. But a little incident once made Jean, Pierre, and Louis unpopular in Ellenville, so tradition says, and they vanished from the town.

It seems that money had been particularly easy on one excursion—the old bear's hat had been fairly weighted down wherever he extended it. Therefore, the three returned to their home village, determined to atone for long abstinence. In one prolonged spree the bear's earnings were invested—nor is it related that the poor bear was given so much as a single highball by way of reward for his weary labors. Probably this accounts for the fact that resentment for long captivity and injustice waxed hot within him, and he took advantage of his three masters' befuddled condition to escape into the mountains, and appear, free and somewhat excited, at a thronged resort.

Great was the consternation among the resorters, and Jean, Pierre, and Louis came, sober, to find that their presence was no longer desired as residents of that region—likewise, to find themselves minus a bear. Perhaps it is somewhat sad to relate that the poor beast was recaptured and once more led upon his weary rounds.

A clever mummer he is. As soon as the bugle has summoned guests from tennis and crocheting, he begins a performance on some available lawn. Can't you close your eyes and hear that quaint little French folk-song which one of the keepers chants, while the dance of the bear begins? What perfect time he keeps to the joggy refrain! Very freely translated, it runs something like this:

Oh, come and dance with me, dance with me;
Oh, come and dance with me, on the green Spring meadow!

The dance is over, the hat is passed by the bear, Jean, or Pierre, or Louis bows his thanks, and on they pass.

And the circus! Don't you remember how it has always come up the almost perpendicular road from Palenville, a panting and exhausted circus, which pitched its tent at Haines Falls, and from there worked its way back into every mountain resort section? One jaded horse painfully dragged a wagon in which tent, properties, and decorations were piled.

The family walked. The family consisted of a husband and father who managed the business end of affairs and appeared as ringmaster; a wife, who was the Lady Acrobat and Death-Defying Equestrienne; a mother-in-law who took tickets at the door and acted as wardrobe mistress; a little boy who was the Side-Splitting Juvenile Clown, and a dog. The dog did tricks and really earned most of the income, being quite the hardest worker and the least rewarded.

There was a night in Haines Falls when one of the audience, seated upon the precarious benches between which feet dangled, made overtures to the dog. At first he was tempted. He crept toward the fingers which gently snapped him a welcome. Perhaps he thought of what it might mean to slip away—forever free from the harness. Just then his gentle old eyes fell upon the Juvenile Side-Splitter, who was going through a nasal performance of Merriment in the ring—and it was as if that dog shook his head and smiled sadly.

"No, no," he seemed to say. "He's in the same boat. I'm not going to desert him." And he crept back to the sawdust circle, in time to jump through his ring when the cue came.

Then there was the group of wandering Shakespeareans. Nobody knew anything about them—perhaps they had their story. Perhaps they had set out once upon a time to play Othello and Hamlet and Macbeth and Juliet to a serious audience in a real theatre, and to make a permanent fame.

But here they were, strolling players of the mountains, their poor little suitcases full of tawdry sham silks and tinsel. They would stop over night at a hotel, and during the evening the guests would assemble in the largest room to see "a special performance of two scenes from Othello."

"Kill me tomorrow; let me live tonight!"

Desdemona would implore there on the rug, and Othello's terrifying voice would respond, and then:

"What noise is this? Not dead? Not yet quite dead?"

would chill our marrows where we were gathered in the hotel parlor.

The next morning one might catch a glimpse of Desdemona carefully mending the cloak of Iago, which had been torn the night before on a tin sword—then she would pack her mending basket, for it was to the road once more.

Carmen, the Gypsy Fortune Teller, is seen year after year in the mountains. The gypsy camp snuggles somewhere on the edge of a hotel district, and the lives of the campers are full of mystery and romance. Where they get their food, how they pick up enough for a living, are puzzles. But somehow they seem to thrive, and, with every Summer, they reappear.

"I see a dark man," Carmen murmurs ominously, bending above some fair damsel's palm, the cards strewn before her on the veranda floor.

How many times have these fortunes come true? Perhaps she guesses shrewdly, this vagabond; at any rate, she always finds believers.

There is a dignified group of entertainers whose performances are announced in advance, and who arrive with testimonials from persons of "high-brow" reputation. Nevertheless, they are wandering entertainers, like the others. Summer after Summer we have heard one of them whistle his bird notes, with a delightful little talk on the habits of each bird he imitates, their habitat, their appearance. From the time of his visit for the rest of the Summer, every hotel guest is on the alert for the bird-songs he has taught.

There is a young married couple, colored persons, from one of the Southern schools. They are educated and clever. They drive in a light buggy all Summer long, giving an evening's entertainment at one of the hotels in each colony of Summer resorters. They recite and sing, chiefly the poems of Paul Lawrence Dunbar.

Almost without exception, these wanderers depend wholly upon the generosity of hotel guests for their support. There are but a few who charge an admission fee for their entertainment; it's a matter of luck, how much the hat holds at the end of the performance. The earliest of the season fare best, before the pockets of vacation folk have been emptied.

The Winter finds them scattered here and there at Southern resorts. At some of the beaches they are occasionally seen. But nowhere is there such a procession of them as through the Catskills. Fantastic, even grotesque, many of them; motley mummers that pass in an hour. Yet somehow the strange file of them leaves a lasting impression on every one's memory, and we wonder, as often as we recall them—Whence? and Whither? and What's their story?

DULL OR BRIGHT FLIES?

EVERY inch of a brook has a character of its own. Each little whirlpool and eddy, each strip of straight rippling stream and each dark pool is entirely different from any other regardless of the length of the stream. When the brook bursts from the shadowed woodland and winds its way through a strip of meadowland it takes on a different character that has an important bearing on the efforts of the patient angler.

In the wooded country where the sunshine only filters through the surrounding vegetation and strikes in a random spot here and there, conditions are altogether different from where the broad glare of open day transforms the surface of the stream into a kaleidoscope of light. The brook itself may have, and generally does have, the same character. The rocky bottom is not altered by the pasture land on either side of the banks, and yet the illumination of the brook is so different that the stream seems to take on an entirely different character.

Does this change affect the fishing? Does the variation in light, in color, and reflection alter the actions of the speckled denizens of the depths rapids? It seems reasonable from some viewpoints that it should, and experiences have borne out this view.

Broadly, the difference between the brook as it passes through the wooded stretch and the meadowland is that between sunlight and shade. To the fly fisherman, these two conditions spell a wide variation in the selection of the proper bait.

The fly chosen for the darker day, or for the darker periods of the day, is rarely the same as that chosen for conditions of brighter weather. The difference between the illumination of the brook as it passes through the meadow and through the wood frequently surpasses that between a cloudy and a bright day. If the old rule of a "dull fly for a bright day and a bright fly for a dull day" holds true, the difference between the proper fly for the woodland and meadow is sufficient to influence the choice and cause the fisherman to change his fly as he emerges from the wood.

Three seasoned anglers were fishing in a Jersey stream a little while ago. They had just had a more or less extended debate on the subject of flies, which had terminated in an agreement to disagree. The day was warm and sunny. There was little or no breeze and only an occasional cloud bank was wafted across the sky. Owing to superstition of some former run of luck with that particular kind of lure, one selected a Professor, another pinned his faith to the all-around favorite Coachman, while the third, after a lengthy monologue on the merits of the natural dull fly for that particular type of a bright, warm day, selected a dun fly.

The brook was essentially a woodland stream. After a period of two hours' fishing through this type of water the men met, as prearranged, at a point where the brook leaves the wooded country and crosses a stretch of nearly a mile of meadowland. As the three came together and discussed luck, making that honest confession which is particularly good for the souls of fishermen, it was perceived that he of the Professor had three fish, the advocate of the Coachman four, while the user of the dun fly declared that he had had a strike, but afterward found it to be a large section of log firmly attached to the bottom of the brook.

Under the fire of the somewhat ironical advice of his companions concerning the advantages of the brighter flies he refused to wither, and arrangements were made to divide into equal parts the stretch of meadowland ahead.

There were several good holes, and as the three were all familiar with the brook these were divided as evenly as possible. At the end they met. The advocates of the brighter flies had not had a strike in crossing the meadow. The knight of the dun fly had seven good fish.

This set the scoffing wielder of the Coachman to thinking, and since that time he has, on arriving at a stretch of meadow under a bright sun, tried fishing with the darker natural flies, and he has been immensely pleased with the results. The brighter lures do not seem to have the effect in the broad, open sunlight of the meadow that they have in the shaded woodland. This cannot be set down as an infallible rule, as there are no such things in fly fishing, but taken merely on a percentage basis it does seem to bear out the experience of many.

One other feature of meadow-land fishing which should be mentioned is the need for far greater caution. A certain amount is, of course, necessary in the woodland, but 100 per cent. more is necessary in the meadow, where the only background for a head thrust above the horizon of the fish is the broad sky.

The trout, unlike the submarine, has no periscope for the purpose of discovering the enemy, but he has, nevertheless, an eye which catches the glint of the unusual in a surprisingly quick manner. When in the shade of brush and trees, such as surround the forest brook, a shadow is rarely cast by the angler.

On emerging from the forest, if the stream is narrow and the fishing is done from the bank, keep on the opposite side from the sun. If wading in a wide brook, lengthen your casts to the best of your ability when out of the shaded shelter of overhanging foliage.

TALL ADIRONDACK YARNS

THE presence in the Adirondacks this season of unusual numbers and varieties of game is attracting much attention and resulting in many interesting as well as ludicrous situations.

Man-sized "scarecrows," fully attired in hunting suits and holding black bars which resemble guns, and the occasional firing of rifles are the means resorted to at Bartlett's, for instance, to save the fresh peas growing in gardens from the inroads of wild deer.

"You hear so much," remarked one garden protector, "about deer getting scarce about the time of the opening of the hunting season, that I thought I would try to make them scarce by giving the place the appearance of a hunting camp. Deer are so thick here that there are four in the garden every night. The vegetables can't grow a bit, they are being watched by the deer so closely.

"I sat up all one night and threw stones at the deer. You see, they jump right over the high wire fence just like circus horses. Of course, there are not many stones left around here, after all the early care we had given the garden; so I finally took to throwing empty bottles. We have some long rows of these empty bottles around the flower beds for ornaments. But the bottles ran out, too.

"Then I got four suits of hunting clothes, stuffed them full of straw and sawdust and mounted them on the running. Of course, I had to get something that looked like a gun and I did the best I could. Then I took the old shotgun and fired it off.

"The trouble is, I made the hunters look too real. The deer stood around awhile and then one ran right down the line through all my hunters."

Not only are deer numerous throughout the region, but black bear are beginning to appear in some sections. Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Daniels and Mrs. A. M. Daniels, mother of Mr. Daniels, had an encounter with an old bear and her three cubs in the Daniels preserve at Sabbattis recently. They were walking down an old log road toward a pond, but had not proceeded far from camp when they discovered that a bear and three cubs were crossing their trail a short distance in front of them.

Mr. Daniels, who holds several records in swimming and is the former world's champion, happened to have a gun with him.

"What had we better do about these bear?" asked Mr. Daniels of the other members of the party.

"They are too close to camp to suit me," replied Mrs. C. M. Daniels.

"The gun is a light one," said Mr. Daniels, "and I may not be able to kill the big bear at the first shot."

"Well, try it, anyway," urged both women.

Mr. Daniels fired and hit the bear. The wound inflicted was serious, and the old bear whirled and charged directly upon Mr. Daniels and his companions.

The bear rushed to within 25 feet of the party, when Mr. Daniels shot a second time. The bullet took effect in a vital spot, and the bear rolled over. Mr. Daniels handed the gun to his wife and went forward with his hunting knife to make certain that the old bear would not get up suddenly and charge the members of the party again.

Mrs. Daniels put a fresh shell into the barrel. She got sight of one of the cubs and shot it dead. Mr. Daniels and his guide, who was summoned to the scene by the firing, skinned the old bear, and it will be made into a rug. The pelt of the small bear was also saved, while its carcass provided some fine bear steaks.

The most unusual experience of the season, undoubtedly, was that of the Messrs. A. A. Bowers and P. H. Kelly, who were members of a large vacation party at Paul Smith's. They went to Osgood Lake for four days, in which they devoted their entire time to fishing for black bass.

On the first day one of the guides, Sanford Hayes, noticed a large bird coming from the direction of the St. Regis River. The bird flew high and circled frequently, coming lower as it neared the lake. Mr. Hayes noted at once that it was not a hawk nor a gull, and the curiosity of the party was aroused.

They focused their attention on the strange visitor, and as it circled above them were surprised and delighted to find that it was an eagle. Each day as the party was fishing they saw the lone bird come from the direction of the St. Regis River. The guides recalled that several years ago an eagle made its home at Osgood Lake, and became so bold that it attacked a small dog belonging to Douglass Martin, who had a hard fight to save his pet. There is considerable conjecture as to whether this is the same eagle, returned to its old haunts, or a stranger, gone astray.

A family of wild black mallard ducks is making its home on Spitfire Lake of the St. Regis chain, and is attracting much attention among the Summer folk and woodsmen. Sanford Hayes saw the flock one day, and counted twenty-six little ducks, all sitting on a large stone in Spitfire Lake, sunning themselves. In recounting the sight he said:

"I have never seen or heard tell of a duck having a flock of twenty-six young before, but this one had by actual count. The little things looked so comical sprawled out on the rock in a squirming, wriggling mass. The usual flock is about half the size of this one, and it seems probable that the duck is mothering two flocks, the other mother probably having been accidentally killed."

The fact that Spitfire Lake is constantly churned by powerful speed boats has, as yet, made little impression on Mrs. Duck and her family, who continue to disport themselves in the most nonchalant manner.

The fishing in the region has been productive of sport out of the ordinary this season. One of the most notable of the fish brought in by anglers on Upper Saranac Lake this season was the lake trout caught by Henry Firth of Philadelphia. This trout was 36 inches in length, but weighed only 12 pounds. It had a monster head, and the anglers are at a loss to account for the fact that the fish did not weigh twenty pounds. Mr. Firth hooked the trout while trolling and soon brought it to the surface. The instant the trout saw the boat and the anglers he made for the bottom, and Mr. Firth did not see him again for an hour and half, at the end of which time the fish gave up the struggle.

For originality and novelty in fishing tackle, used successfully, Dr. Charles C. Trembley of Saranac Lake and Edwin A. Strong of New York are well in the lead. Hair from the tail of a squirrel wound around a large hook is their latest device, and it caused the capture of twenty black bass of unusually even size and weight on Lower Saranac Lake. The special hook which proved so irresistible was invented and built by Dr. Trembley, who has tried buck hair, pigeons' wings, roosters' combs, and other things.

NARRAGANSETT PIER.

Polo to the Fore, with Golf and Tennis in the Running.

Special to The New York Times.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 31.—At the Point Judith Country Club sports in the open have reigned supreme during the past week. The annual national polo tournament on the fields of Point Judith, a magnet for many of the devotees of this popular pastime, has attracted many. Polo is always in favor at Narragansett, and the fields this Summer present an unusually attractive appearance. Thus far the weather conditions have favored the sport.

Down Ocean Road and over the short route to the polo fields, which leads past Kentara Green, the line of motor cars conveying cottagers and others to the grounds indicates that the tourney is in progress. The arrival of the crack Meadow Brooks and the Great Neck players, due here today, is anticipated with keen interest. Polo will be continued here throughout next week with some interesting events in prospect.

Golf is also popular at the Pier this Summer. The recent tournament between Point Judith and Jamestown stimulated interest in the sport.

A ladies' golf tournament opened here early in the week. The members of the committee are Mrs. Philip Stevenson of Westbury, L. I.; Miss Gertrude de Coppet of New York, and Mrs. William Harding Jackson of Washington, D. C. It was a match tourney against bogie, and about twenty or more of the women players in the villa colony participated.

The annual tennis tournament of the Point Judith Country Club will open here tomorrow under the auspices of the United States Lawn Tennis Association. The events will include men's singles and doubles, and a prize of a silver cup, known as the Governor's Cup, is offered as a trophy for players.

Rowland Hazard is Chairman of the Tennis Committee, and the other members are S. Hinman Bird, Henry B. Kane, Kenneth M. Murchison of New York, and Byron S. Watson of Providence.

Among those who will probably participate in the Point Judith tournament are John G. Thomas of Baltimore, Dr. Archibald G. Thomson of Philadelphia, Stanley Henshaw of Providence, P. S. P. Randolph, Jr., and Craig Biddle of Philadelphia, Douglas Watters, and Rowland Hazard. Members of the Country Club anticipate that the tennis tournament will attract some of the well-known tennis players to Narragansett next week.

The new game of "brevet" has also entered the "ring" with golf, tennis, and polo. Among the players in this novel sport are Mr. and Mrs. Francis H. Dewey, Jr., of Worcester, Mass.; Miss Kitty Smith of Philadelphia, Emlyn Randolph, and Allistair McCloud.

The annual fair or lawn fête for the benefit of St. Peter's Church-by-the-Sea will take place on Aug. 5.

A ball with sporting costumes as a feature is being planned for early August.

CAPE COD'S BAYBERRY CANDLE INDUSTRY

Making Artistic Candles by the "Dipping" Method.

Display of Bayberry Candles and Fancy Holiday Boxes.

Picking Bayberries from a Cape Cod Sand Dune Bush.

AMONG the picturesque sand dunes of Cape Cod grow hundreds of patches of small bushes, known as bayberry bushes. Each shrub, which is a variety of the wax myrtle, is loaded with clusters of tiny berries, as small as shot, which cleave in bunches to the joints of the branches. These berries are gathered by women and children, who sell them for 2 cents a pound.

A bushel of the small berries, which are of a gray, pearlish tint, weighs from thirty-five to forty-five pounds, according to their state of dryness.

About five years ago a resident of North Truro made a tour of the Cape, and noticed the vast amount of waste land near the sand dunes and the abundance of low, sagelike bushes, which yield the fruit of the laurel tree. "There is a certain amount of wax on each one of those berries," he thought, "so why shouldn't I gather them, make them up into attractive candles, and sell them for holiday and birthday gifts?"

He immediately set to work and formed a company.

The bayberries arrive at the factory in crocus bags, boxes, and barrels. About five bushels are dumped into a huge iron kettle, which stands approximately 3 feet high and is 4 feet in diameter. The next step is to fill this tank with water. The berries might be boiled in this water, but it is better to run steam through them from a boiler. After being boiled in this manner for several hours, the wax floats to the top of the water in a gray mass, which also contains all the dirt and residue from the berries.

A bushel of berries produces about five pounds of wax, but the amount varies considerably under different conditions. A coating forms over the surface of the water to a depth of about two inches. After this is skimmed off and broken into pieces, it is boiled again, and much of the dirt settles to the bottom. This leaves the pure, fragrant wax, which is of a soft, sagelike green. When this is hot it is run into a large mold. Huge lumps weighing nearly seventy-five pounds are taken from his mold, when it is ready to be used.

Small bits of wax next go to the "dipping" room and are there melted up in a small can about 1 foot long, 8 inches high, and 2 inches wide. This is melted over a small stove.

The ordinary-sized candles are seven inches long, but there are some grades not over three inches long, and the largest measure fifteen in length, and one and three-eighths in diameter and sell for $1 apiece. Four pieces of wick are fastened upon a light framework of wire, which is dipped into the hot wax. Then this is hung upon a rack which rests on a table, another frame is dipped, and so on, until about a dozen sets have received one coating. Then they are dipped and redipped, until they have received in all thirty-five coats, when they are finished.

When done, they are artistic-looking objects, tapering to a point, and covered with small humps of the wax. They are much prettier than the moulded candles and sell at a higher price.

They are packed in fancy holiday holly boxes, with a bit of dainty baby ribbon about them.

Orders for bayberry candles are received from many parts of the world. Some came in one day recently from England and Alaska. There is no danger of the supply of bayberries becoming exhausted, as there are hundreds of acres of worthless land near the sand dunes covered with patches of the bushes.

"A bayberry candle brings luck to the house and gold to the pocket!"

AT LEADING RESORTS

DINNERS AT NEWPORT.

Numerous Entertainments, Large and Small, Are Features of Season.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 31.—There will be a series of dinners, and in many cases dinner dances, throughout August. From a prominent matron THE TIMES correspondent learns that September, with its horse show, will be quite gay, as so many of the Summer residents will remain at their Newport homes during that month and until later.

A number of Summer residents are preparing to become citizens of Newport, and will pass considerable of their time here. Others will keep their homes so arranged as to permit of their coming up for week-ends at any time.

The largest affair of August will be the housewarming of Mrs. George D. Widener of Philadelphia, a dinner dance on Aug. 20.

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor will give a dance at Beechwood Aug. 6. Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont will also give one.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Cassatt are giving a dance and supper at the Newport Golf Club Aug. 21.

Mr. and Mrs. George Brooke of Philadelphia will give a dinner and dance at their cottage on Ochre Point Aug. 17.

Mrs. Richard Stevens has arranged for a dinner for forty guests at Hill Top Inn Aug. 4, with dancing afterward.

Mrs. John R. Drexel will give a number of dinner parties, with informal dancing afterward, as was her custom up to a few seasons ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones will probably give a series of large dinners, with informal dancing.

Sunday evening Mrs. William S. Draper entertained a brilliant dinner company at the Orchard, in honor of the Russian Ambassador and Mme. Bakhmeteff, using for the first time here the golden dinner service which Mrs. Draper had made in France, each piece of which is hand carved.

American Beauty roses were used for the table and the dining hall. Some of the guests were Mrs. Horatio R. Slater, Mrs. John J. Mason, Lieutenant Commander Edward F. Constein, U. S. N., Mr. and Mrs. John Thompson Spencer, Colonel John Livermore, Mrs. Fletcher Ryer, and Miss Draper.

Newport will extend a hearty welcome to members of the New York Yacht Club on the occasion of the annual cruise of the squadron, which reaches Newport next Tuesday.

A large fleet of steam yachts will take out many guests from Newport, including the Noma, owned by Vincent Astor; Henry Walters's Narada, H. A. C. Taylor's Wanderer, and Commodore Arthur Curtiss James's Aloha. Many dinner parties for the yachtsmen are being prepared.

Fashion's Passing Show, the fête given last Saturday at Rose Cliff, the residence of Mrs. Oelrichs, is still a much-discussed subject at the social gatherings, because of its wonderful features and the large amount it netted for the wives and children of French soldiers, and the Belgian refugees.

Mrs. Oelrichs wore a pearl pink satin gown, draped in most becoming lines, with quantities of pale heliotrope tulle. The trimming was rhinestones and crystals in embroidered effect. A diamond barrette held a large aigrette upon her head.

Miss Barbara Rutherfurd chose for her gown deep fuchsia shades in tulle and chiffon. These colorings were carried out from crown to sole. Rubies glistened in her hair and on the buckles of her slippers, which perfectly matched the costume.

Mrs. Hamilton Wilks Cary wore a gown of pale pink and silver brocade, with tulle and lace, that constituted a bodice. Her jewels were diamonds and pearls. In her hair Mrs. Cary wore a diamond and pearl ornament.

There has been no end of golf. It started last Monday at the Newport Golf Club with the ladies' doubles for Mrs. Twombly's Cup. The next day the ladies' tennis tournament at the Casino began. Monday afternoon the golf club was the very Mecca of the Summer colony.

In a group were noted Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Governor and Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman, the Spanish Ambassador and Mme. Riano, George I. Scott, Henry A. Taylor, H. O. Havemeyer, Mr. and Mrs. W. Earl Dodge, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. Craig Biddle, Mr. and Mrs. George Brooke, Willing Spencer, and Charles Sands.

Among those playing on the links were Mrs. Forsythe Wickes, Mrs. W. Goadby Loew, Mrs. Oliver Perrin, Miss Anna Sands, Miss Margaret H. Busk, Mrs. William A. Delano, Mrs. Tompkins McIlvaine, Miss Sophie L. Mott, Miss Rose Dolan, Miss Muriel Wilbur Throp, Miss Maude K. Wetmore, Mrs. J. Gordon Douglas, Mrs. George B. Post, Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden, Mrs. Vincent Astor, Mrs. M. M. Van Beuren, Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, Miss H. R. Borland, Miss Dorothea Carroll, Mrs. Harry La Montagne, and Miss Louise B. Scott.

A pretty show of flowers and fruits is promised for August 12 and 13 on the large plot of land opposite the estates of Mrs. Belmont, in Bellevue Avenue, to be held under the auspices of Mrs. Charles Frederick Hoffman, Mrs. Pembroke Jones, Mrs. Lawrence L. Gillespie, and other ladies of the Newport Garden Club and the Newport Horticultural Society. It will include music and dancing. The choicest growings of flowers and fruits from the greenhouses of the Summer colony will be shown, and many will exhibit from elsewhere.

Governor Charles S. Whitman of New York, who has passed less than four days here this Summer, is hoping to return from Albany on Aug. 6, to spend a little vacation with his family and to look over his garden of vegetables which he has planted and which shows his skill as a farmer. The Governor's friends in the Summer colony knew that he was a first-class fisherman, but not until this season were they aware that he was a farmer.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Parsons are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clews at the Rocks.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Duer Irving of New York have ended a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Marsden J. Perry.

Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, who has been the guest of Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly and Mrs. Vanderbilt at the Breakers, has gone to Bar Harbor.

Miss Marion Stoddard of New York is visiting her sister, Mrs. Stuart Duncan, at Bonnie Crest.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Phipps and family are with Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., are guests of Mr. Perkins on the steam yacht Mohigan.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Russell Pope and children are here from Glen Cove to visit Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones.

Miss Morgan of New York has been visiting Miss Maude K. Wetmore.

Edward Brooke has concluded his visit with Mr. and Mrs. George Brooke.

Edward J. Berwind has returned from Florence, Italy.

Mrs. Clarence W. Dolan has returned from a visit to the exposition in San Francisco.

Gordon Hamersley of New York has been the guest of Commodore and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry at Seaverge.

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—In the fifteenth annual exhibition of flowers and vegetables by the Lenox Horticultural Society this week the gardens of Mrs. E. S. Griswold, Mrs. Robert Winthrop, Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, Mrs. John E. Alexandre, Charles Lanier, Grand Foster, Miss Adele Kneeland, Warren M. Salisbury, Arthur M. Cooley, and Frederic E. Lewis sent the principal displays. There is as much rivalry among the growers of flowers in the Berkshires to win a first award at Lenox as there is between owners of Class A sloops for the chief prize in an Atlantic regatta.

There is general interest and friendly rivalry among the cottagers of Stockbridge in growing flowers of various garden varieties that approach a very high standard of quality, an endeavor stimulated by the specialized flower shows held under the direction of a committee of which Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff is Chairman. Associated with her in making displays in the Casino are Mrs. W. Gilman Thompson, Mrs. Oscar Iasigi, Miss Eleanor Hague, Mrs. Walter Prichard Eaton, Miss Grace Nettleton, Mrs. Bernhard Hoffman, and Miss Emily Tuckerman. The displays this week were sweet peas, water lilies, and hollyhocks.

The contest for honors in the sweet pea classes was the keenest. Mrs. Joseph H. Choate won the first award for the largest selection of varieties of sweet peas; also first and second awards in the class for the best color in sweet peas.

Through the cultivation of expensive gardens at Lenox there has grown up an organization of growers, which has been incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts as the Lenox Horticultural Society. This society will give in October an exhibition in which orchids and chrysanthemums will be the features.

A group of Summer residents here are experimenting in colored photography, and find in the brilliant gardens their best subjects. These men, who are devoted to autochromes, have formed an association of fifteen members, and in September will give the first exhibition of their work. Thomas Shields Clarke, one of the pioneers in colored photography, called a meeting of the artists at Fern Brook, where the association was formed. Dr. Frank W. Brandow of Pittsfield was elected President, Mr. Clarke Vice President, and the Rev. Joseph R. Lynes of Great Barrington Secretary and Treasurer. Some of the men interested in this work are Dr. W. Gilman Thompson, Albert R. Shattuck, William Hall Walker, and S. Cobb Coleman.

Walter A. Nettleton was again elected President of the Stockbridge Golf Club at a meeting this week to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. Henry Cecil Haven. When the club was organized back in 1895, Mr. Nettleton became its President, and served six years, declining reelection, his successor having been the late Dr. Charles McBurney, whom Dr. Haven succeeded. Walter P. Eaton is Secretary of the club and Philip Blagden Golf Captain. The annual tournament will begin Aug. 24 on a reconstructed course lengthened 2,000 yards by the acquisition of an adjacent farm.

Miss Helen A. Rice, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Rice of Stockbridge, won the girls' challenge cup in the Lenox Junior Tennis Association championships this week by defeating Miss Helen Frothingham in the finals. The mixed doubles were won by Miss Mary Church and Kenneth Sheldon, representing the Wyantenuck Country Club as a team Barrington, who defeated Miss Alice Goddard of the Stockbridge Club and John L. Rochester of the Greenock Country Club. The young men's singles were won by Kenneth Sheldon of Great Barrington, and the young men's doubles by Sheldon and Malcolm McComb bles by Sheldon and Malcolm McComb of the Wyantenuck Club, who beat Ellery Sedgwick and Machlin Davis of Stockbridge. This gave three of the leading honors to the Wyantenuck Club, the young men's singles and doubles and the mixed doubles.

The success of the junior tennis tournament resulted in the announcement that there will be a tournament by members of the Lenox Club, beginning Aug. 16. The Lenox Club will present solid silver cups for events by men and women. The finals in the Heaton Hall tennis tournament were played this week, and Miss Helen Van Voorhis and Winifred Rice won the mixed doubles by defeating Miss Amy Miller and Arthur H. Miller. Miss Edith Burtis and Miss Clara Gregory won the women's doubles, defeating Mrs. Charles R. Gay and Miss Helen Van Voorhis.

The Rev. William Lawrence Wood, who began his ministry in Trinity Episcopal Church last Sunday, will very shortly be ordained as a priest in the Episcopal Church by the Right Rev. David H. Greer, Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of New York. It was Bishop Greer who ordained the Rev. Mr. Wood as a deacon two years ago. Bishop Greer is now at Northeast Harbor, Me., where the ordination will probably take place. A number of important society affairs have been arranged for the Rev. and Mrs. Wood.

After a long season of large entertainments in the cottages, the month of August will be much quieter, socially, because of the departure for the seaside of some of the prominent cottagers. Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Paterson have gone to Bristol, R. I., to visit with the Misses Barns, and after a time will proceed to Sag Harbor, L. I., for the remainder of August, with Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Fahys. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Parsons and their family have gone to Newport, R. I., to occupy the seaside cottage of Henry Clews, Mrs. Parsons's father. Mr. and Mrs. Cortlandt F. Bishop are departing the first of August for a trip to Bar Harbor, whence Mr. Bishop will attempt to make an automobile tour into Nova Scotia.

On Friday night the Frank Lea Short Company presented two plays on the lawn of the Wyantenuck Country Club, in Great Barrington. The club furnished an attractive setting for the plays, and quite an unusual scheme of illumination, electric bulbs being used in trees and shrubs along the entrance drive, and the clubhouse showing several odd devices in colored lamps. Mrs. John A. C. Church was the Chairman of the committee in charge, and young women of the club were ushers for the play. After the performance, there was a dance in the clubhouse.

Another Great Barrington event was the dance at Brookside given by Mr. and Mrs. William Hall Walker, where there was also an electrical decoration. Here the formal garden and fountains were lighted. Mr. and Mrs. Walker received a large company. The dance was in their library, a large apartment, which has an electric organ, balcony for musicians, and other requirements for entertaining large companies.

In Stockbridge the principal dance of the week was in the Casino, where a committee with Mrs. J. Woodward Haven and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff in charge, received about one hundred guests. They had a pretty setting for the dance, cerise hollyhocks along the stage, and other brilliant garden flowers in hall and parlor.

Several large dinners preceded the dance. Mrs. Drexel Dahlgren gave a dinner for a dozen guests at the Lenox Club. Mrs. F. Norton Goddard, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Sorchan, Mr. and Mrs. J. Woodward Haven, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Astor Bristed were among those who had company at dinner, and later took their guests to the dance.

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Griswold were the hosts at a large dinner at Wyndhurst this week, where the principal guests were Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Choate.

CHARITABLE BAR HARBOR.

Work of Various Worthy Objects Interests Summer Colony.

Special to The New York Times.

BAR HARBOR, Me., July 31.—With sewing for soldiers, hospital benefits, and the like, this Summer seems devoted largely to charitable events. A week's events, under the leadership of Mrs. Dave Hennen Morris of New York, were devoted to the work of the Young Women's Christian Association. Monday Mrs. Warner M. Leeds gave a luncheon of 250 covers, including a large percentage of the Summer colony, followed by a talk on the work by Mrs. Dave Hennen Morris. Tuesday a special meeting was held, with the Rev. Dr. A. F. Schauffler of New York presiding, followed by an informal tea, with Mrs. James Mott Hartshorne and Mrs. Thomas Denney of New York as hostesses, assisted by the most charming girls of the Summer set. Friday a similar meeting was held, with Mrs. Morris presiding and Miss Bertha Condé as speaker. Miss Elizabeth McCormick presided at the tea tables.

Islecote, the Summer home of Mrs. John Jacob Astor, has been a fairly busy place this week. Mrs. Astor has been entertaining several times during the week, giving a dinner Monday night in honor of Mr. Bauford of New York, who has been her guest, and also later in the week in honor of Henri Harpickell, her sister's fiancé, who came Wednesday to spend some time at Islecote. Monday evening the guests included Mr. and Mrs. Ernesto G. Fabbri, Mr. and Mrs. Arden Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Topping, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Stevens, Miss Sturges, Mrs. Allen Robbins, and H. O. Sturges.

Saturday Mrs. Astor goes to Newport, where she will be the guest of Mrs. Charles Widener.

Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Kreisler are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schelling at their cottage for a few days. Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. Schelling had a few friends in at dinner in honor of Mr. Schelling's birthday, the guests including Mr. and Mrs. Kreisler, Mr. and Mrs. Newell Tilton, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel W. Bates, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry D. Burnham.

Mrs. Robert W. Chanler entertained at dinner at the Malvern Sunday, the guests including the Misses Steward, Miss Chanler, and A. E. Gallatin.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Hall McCormick entertained at dinner Sunday, the guests including Mr. and Mrs. William F. Cochran, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Ogden, Mr. and Mrs. Harold A. Howard, and Dr. and Mrs. John S. Thatcher.

Miss Cornelia Gallatin entertained at luncheon on Monday, covers being laid for ten. Mrs. Mason Campbell also entertained a party of friends Monday.

Mrs. Charles B. Wright entertained Tuesday at tea.

Mrs. William P. Draper gave a dinner of ten covers Wednesday at her cottage, and Mrs. William H. Bliss also gave a large luncheon that day.

A novelty in entertaining is shown by the Ernesto G. Fabbris, who have erected a miniature moving-picture theatre on the grounds of their cottage and at almost every dinner or lunch regale the guests with views. Mr. Fabbri is most successful as a photographer himself and has a moving-picture apparatus with all the latest improvements. A number of the guests who have enjoyed the Fabbri dinners have had the pleasure of witnessing a lot of films taken here, including, in some instances, watching themselves as shown on the screen.

Mr. Fabbri is also a member of the local Board of Selectmen. Last Spring, when the agitation swept over town for what is practically a commission form of government, there was a general feeling that the Summer residents, who pay over 50 per cent. of the taxes, should be represented on the board. Mr. Fabbri and George B. Dorr of Boston were the two members chosen. The board holds meetings weekly, and rarely have these two missed a gathering. Both, although living a good part of the year in the city, have voting residences here. Mr. Fabbri, when the board was receiving its first payment, (the members are paid a dollar per meeting for their services,) had the bill framed, as he said he was anxious to keep it as a memento.

Mr. and Mrs. Warner M. Leeds gave a dinner at Greenaway Court on Saturday evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Wood of New York, who are spending the Summer at Northeast Harbor. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schelling, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Livingston, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Rogers, Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer, Jr., Mrs. William P. Draper, and General Horace Porter.

Mrs. Miles B. Carpenter gave a dinner Friday evening at her cottage on Eden Street. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Alfred M. Coates, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schelling, Mr. and Mrs. Walter G. Ladd, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sherrill, Mrs. V. Everit Macy, Miss Alice Carpenter, Dr. Robert Abbe, General Horace Porter, and Alessandro Fabbri.

Frederick Vanderbilt of New York is expected to arrive in a day or two to occupy the cottage owned by Mrs. George Lee Thompson on West Street. He will pass the month of August here.

General Horace Porter gave a tea Sunday in honor of Mrs. Lyman B. Kendall of New York.

Mrs. Hunt Slater gave a tea Sunday afternoon at Bowling Green in honor of Mrs. William H. Bliss.

Frederick Matthews of New York is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Warner M. Leeds at Greenaway Court.

The yacht Emeline, with Mr. and Mrs. Robert Graves of New York and their guest, Cyrus Miller, aboard, has been in the harbor for several days.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Hall McCormick, Jr., entertained at dinner at their cottage Saturday night. It was a day of entertaining in the McCormick family, for Mr. and Mrs. R. Hall McCormick, Sr., also entertained at lunch at their cottage, Mizzentop, that day.

The annual golf tournament at the Kebo Valley Club is to be held next Tuesday, Aug. 3, when the Kebo, Mount Desert, and Pemetic Cups, the Kebo Trophy, and the Club Medal will all be played for. This is the main tournament of the year, and will attract golfers from all around this neighborhood.

On the following day, Wednesday, the annual bridge tournament is to be held. It is to be held for the benefit of the club. There will be added attractions besides the game itself.

On Tuesday Mrs. A. Howard Hinkle and Mrs. Robert Abbe are to have large musicales.

The annual meeting of the Seacoast Missionary Society, in which Bar Harbor Summer guests are largely interested, was held on Wednesday of this week at the Summer home of Mrs. John S. Kennedy, Kanarden Lodge. Reports from the various offices were read and generous subscriptions were given. Good-sized delegations from the other Summer resorts were present. Mrs. Kennedy is much interested in this work, and it has been largely through her generous contributions that the work has been carried on so extensively.

Mrs. William F. Draper entertained ten at dinner at her Summer cottage on Thursday evening.

Mrs. Paul Morton gave a dinner at her Summer home on Friday evening. Another entertainer the same night was Mrs. Marcus A. Hanna, who gave a dinner at her Summer home at Seal Harbor, while Mr. and Mrs. Lea McIlvaine Luquer gave a dinner dance at their Summer cottage. Mrs. Miles B. Carpenter of New York entertained at luncheon on Friday, while Mrs. Harry J. Luce entertained a party on the same day. In the party were Mrs. Albert Flake, Miss Flake, Miss Margaret Lucel Miss Maude Shepard, and Miss Gretchen Damrosch.

Miss Anne Morgan, who has been spending some time as the guest of her mother, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Sr., at Schooner Head, has left for New York. Miss Morgan intimated before leaving here that she would soon go abroad to take charge in Paris of a branch of the War Relief work, in which she is interested. During her stay here she motored to Bluehill and was the guest of Mrs. Ethelbert Nevin at her cottage there. Mrs. Nevin is Chairman of the Vacation War Relief Committee, of which Miss Morgan is Treasurer. Mrs. Mary Hatch Willard, also a member of this committee, has been the guest of Mrs. Nevin.

Mrs. John R. Ogden of New York entertained about fifty at tea Sunday afternoon in honor of Mrs. Lyman B. Kendall of New York, who is passing her first Summer here.

At the Country Club this Summer trap shooting is claiming much of the attention of its patrons. Among those who frequent the ranges are Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer, Herbert Pulitzer, Allen A. Robbins, Miss Margaret Knapp, Miss Alice Bawler, and others.

The number of informal teas during the week have been legion. Among the entertainers have been Miss Margaret Carnegie, Mrs. William T. Force, Mrs. Sheffield Phelps, Mrs. C. H. Mellon, Curtis Moffatt, Miss Dorothy Sturges, Howard Sturges, Miss Lois Cassatt, Mrs. A. Cassatt, Miss Gertrude Cramer, Miss Charlotte Baker, and Miss Alice Van Rensselaer.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob H. Schiff are expected to arrive soon to pass the rest of the Summer here.

Northeast Harbor has been receiving a large accession to its Philadelphia colony lately. Among the newcomers are Mrs. J. A. Scott and family, who are occupying the George Wharton Pepper cottage: Mr. and Mrs. Louis C. Madeira and family, who have opened their cottage, Brackenfels; Dr. and Mrs. H. S. Drinker, who have a cottage at Harborside, and Mrs. Frances S. Perry, Dr. and Mrs. William Perry, Dr. H. A. Perry, and Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Pepper, who are at Westover cottage.

Dr. Edwin A. Alderman of Charlottesville, Va., President of the University of Virginia, who is spending the Summer at Castine, with Mrs. Alderman and their son, were among the week's visitors to Bar Harbor.

W. T. Cluverious of Washington has arrived to spend two weeks with his family, who are at their Summer home at Hancock Point.

DR. BARUCH RESTATES HIS VIEWS ON FEMINISM

Bayport, L. I., July 27, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

IN THE TIMES of the 4th inst. I ventured to add to the historically established evidence demonstrating certain psychological differences in the sexes which, hitherto overlooked, demand attention today. My aim was not to claim "intellectual poverty" for women, as one critic falsely says. On the contrary, I have controverted the stupid idea of woman's mental inferiority on all occasions. My aim was, as indicated in the concluding lines, to discredit that ill-starred offspring of anarchism and socialism called feminism, which menaces the social fabric by its revolutionary teachings on the marital relations, manifested (1) by blatant efforts of feministic preachers, male and female, to change the solemn marriage vow, to eliminate innocent words that have never been claimed as ground for divorce; (2) by advocating disruption at pleasure of family relations, and (3) by various hair-brained schemes for the care of the offspring. The first is already practiced largely; the second is in evidence occasionally at present; the latter may soon follow, improbable as it now appears. That efforts to block the progress of feminism in its earliest manifestations are not quixotic is proved by the history of its parentage. Disregarded by statesmen, derided by most people, anarchism and socialism have grown from a mere speck to a cloud threatening order and peace.

Since my recent effort to oppose the progress of feminism is met in your issue of the 18th inst. by slanderous falsification, I ask the courtesy of a reply, without adding new matter for prolonging discussion.

Charles A. Beard, a Columbia professor, endeavors to ridicule, in THE TIMES of the 18th inst., the idea that woman is barred by her biological limitations (anatomy, physiology, and psychology) from great original work. I believe that men and women have their biologically allotted spheres. The professor asks: "What is her sphere?" With Emerson, I believe that "civilization is the work of good women." The home—the mention of which disgusts the feminist as the sight of the cross disgusts the devil in "Faust"—the home is the nucleus of civilization, of which woman, with the help of man, is the architect and conserver, and which has been, and is, of greater value to the human race than all the inventions of man, and for which men themselves have sacrificed their lives on a thousand battlefields.

In defense of my position, I ventured to write:

> It is by no means a mental inferiority, as some foolish men and women assert. It is a biological law of nature that bars women from original and great epoch-making achievement. This is proved by the history of improvements in the household, where woman has, according to the feminist orators, slaved for centuries. Has any one of these slaves initiated a single great idea to emancipate her sex from the enslaving drudgery of spinning, weaving, sewing, cooking, laundering, sweeping &c.? No, the original masculine mind came to her rescue with the machines that have lightened her labor until the feminists claim that having nothing to do at home she must seek for "other worlds to conquer" outside of the home.

The professor attempts to "throw dust into the eyes" of your readers by changing my wording as follows: "In support of this statement he claims that women have made no inventions in the field of domestic labor," and he attempts to prove this falsification by "the plain records of the Patent Office," which would be a good argument if he had not changed my wording.

To the proof that my proposition is absolutely unassailable because history demonstrates the lack of "great originality, initiative, courage, and logic" as the cause of the absence of women from great epoch-making achievements, the professor, calmly relying upon the gullibility of your readers, writes: "If Dr. Baruch would take his stand back at the opening of the eighteenth century he would find all the human race—men and women alike—'biologically unfitted for invention and original work.'" And further on he writes: "Dr. Baruch would then have written a lament upon the 'biological laws' which denied originality and initiative to the whole human race.

"In other words, originality and initiative in the inventive sense are modern, not masculine." The professor appears to take it for granted that the readers of THE TIMES are so ignorant as not to know some or all of the following "history back of the eighteenth century." Archimedes, called the father of experimental science, lived 287 years before Christ. The greatest original ideas were produced by Columbus, Galileo, Copernicus, Leonardo, da Vinci, Sir Isaac Newton, and others. Such inventions as gunpowder and printing are masculine, not modern. Moreover, all modern inventions are based upon the masculine originality of Archimedes, Isaac Newton, and others living before the eighteenth century. The Machiavellian argument of the professor does not "hold water" with regard to "originality" any better than on "courage as a masculine virtue." None but a fool would deny courage to women, as exhibited by his grandmother in the effort to keep the wolves from eating her, and in the performance of "errands of mercy."

The professor knows well enough that I meant that type of courage which, added to originality, initiative and logic, has made great achievements a sole masculine product—the courage of the starving Columbus, the priest-menaced Galileo, the harrowed Morse, the knife-grinding Howe, the railsplitting Lincoln, the boatman Garfield, the hatless and shoeless Maxim, (three men who entered school after 12 years of age,) the cowherd, Kuhibach, the impecunious Goethals, and of numerous great men who, not having opportunity, made it. Incidentally the professor gives your readers some curious lessons in biology when he writes of the Jews that "the whole race was indicted on biological grounds." Not alone does Shakespeare, whom he quotes to his own confusion, show the absurdity of this statement, but ethnologists tell us that there has never existed a "Jewish race," and every well-informed person knows that it is not true that the Jew is "indicted on biological grounds," but on account of religious prejudice which Christ tried to forestall by the last grand words He uttered, words never uttered by a human being when in agonizing pain—words that those who profess to teach His noble precepts have failed to impress upon the world as they have failed to bring into practical life others of His grand ethical teachings. If the preachers and Sunday school teachers had imbued the minds and hearts of the children with the historical truth that "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," were the last words of Christ, "the Jew would not be indicted" at all. If the teachings of Christ and His Apostle James: "Faith without works is dead," had been driven by precept and example into the minds of the Sunday school children, "Peace on earth and good will to all mankind," would not be made a mockery by six Christian nations.

Now, to go from the sublime to the ridiculous, I come to the professor's slanderous statement: "In view of the number of scientific men today who are sweeping women off the face of the earth, it is pertinent to remark that special perils beset those who smite women with 'biological law,' particularly in view of the fact that scientific men of standing equal to that of Dr. Dana and Dr. Baruch refuse to commit themselves," &c. If THE TIMES that knows "all the news" is aware of the existence of such a vicious band of scientists, it has evidently not regarded it as "fit to print." One thing I positively know, that the statement that I am one of that number is false and slanderous, as is the implication that I claim that because women have not achieved greatness in the same lines as men have done and vice versa, they "shall be denied admission to all fields of human endeavor," nor that I ever thought much less have written that "all gateways shall be closed to them and that their capacities shall be belittled."

Of course this professor has shown his capacity for distorting or falsifying my words into evidence to unfair polemic uses, as did a woman feminist who wrote that I claim "intellectual poverty" for women because I wrote that they are biologically limited in great epoch-making achievements. It would seem from these two instances that slander is one of the "perils that beset the scientific men today who would sweep woman off the face of the earth with dogmas and smite her with biological laws." Those who know that the larger portion of my manhood years have been spent in humble efforts to promote the welfare of the people would scarcely credit me with trying to deny it to one-half of the people. My present effort may appear Quixotic, but over half a century's experience impels me to believe in the soundness of these views and in the necessity of urging careful consideration of them at the present juncture, when problems involving them are becoming a live issue. The best proof that feminism must be unsound to the core is that it requires such polemic juggling and vicious falsifying to defend it.

WOMAN DOCTORS DEFENDED

In Proportion They Have Achieved Much the Same Success as Man.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

New York, July 28, 1915.

I had hoped that the controversy about woman physicians, which has been the subject of numerous letters in your esteemed paper as well as in The Evening Post during the past and present months, had come to a happy ending because of some very friendly and apologetic letters Dr. Baruch had written me. It seems, however, that Dr. Baruch does not want to give up his ideas on woman's inferiority as a practitioner of medicine and continues to reiterate that he agrees with Dr. Richard C. Cabot of Harvard, who maintains that the majority of woman physicians are not temperamentally and physically adapted for the more strenuous branches of the medical profession, and therefore were disappointed and dissatisfied.

Dr. Cabot, as well as Dr. Baruch, seems to lay particular emphasis on woman's inferiority, so far as research work is concerned. To this contention I have already replied in THE SUNDAY TIMES of June 27 by enumerating a number of eminent women who have attained distinction in research work as well as in the practice of medicine.

To Dr. Baruch's other contention that women are biologically unfitted for original and inventive work, Dr. Charles A. Beard, Associate Professor of Politics at Columbia University, has very ably replied in THE SUNDAY TIMES of July 18. He shows where Dr. Baruch contradicted himself in his own brief article. Dr. Baruch tells us that originality, logic, initiative, and courage are distinctly masculine qualities, and yet in the same breath he speaks of women giving the initiative to trained nursing and making a revolution in hospital management. To this Dr. Beard very pertinently adds: "Evidently the capacity of originality and revolution is not distinctly masculine even according to Dr. Baruch."

Neither in THE SUNDAY TIMES of July 11, nor in The Evening Post of July 26, will Dr. Baruch admit that any one of the previously mentioned women has become illustrious, and he is particularly bitter against the writer of a letter in The Evening Post of the 9th inst., saying that he would "not waste space in argument with this tabasco-saucy defender of her sex." Nevertheless, he continues to argue in order to refute the claims of woman that the reason she has not yet risen to all the heights of masculine attainments is lack of opportunity and is not due to biological differences. In his latest communication, however, Dr. Baruch does not refute any of the very strong statements made by his man opponent, Professor Beard, who brings forth very telling arguments in defense of the, according to Dr. Baruch, "biologically unfitted for original and inventive work."

To show the unfairness and hasty judgment of Dr. Baruch in many of his arguments, not only concerning medical women, but also medical men, let me briefly restate the astounding assertion made in his letter to THE TIMES of July 11. Referring to the list of distinguished women physicians, printed in full in the issue of THE TIMES of June 27 in my article headed "Professor Cabot and Women Physicians," Dr. Baruch says: "The list of great medical women cited by Dr. Knopf does not contain one name that would be regarded as illustrious by the profession. The fact is that since women entered the profession only three men have become illustrious—Lister, Koch, and Carrel."

It is against this statement that, as an American physician, I desire to enter a strong protest. Lister, the founder of antiseptic surgery, was an Englishman; Koch, the father of bacteriology, a German; Carrel, the distinguished surgeon, is a Frenchman. Woman has been in the medical profession in antiquity and prominently so since the beginning of the last century, and, according to Dr. Baruch, no American physician has become illustrious since that time up to the present date.

What a sad testimony to the lack of ingenuity in American physicians and surgeons would this be if it were true. Fortunately it is not, and I ask Dr. Baruch if he has forgotten the name of Dr. Ephraim McDowell (1772-1830) of Danville, Ky., who performed the first successful ovariotomy and thus became the father of modern abdominal surgery! Does he not know of the world-famous American gynecologist, Dr. J. Marion Sims, (1813-1883,) who invented a life-saving operation for a certain female trouble, for which he was decorated by all the crowned heads of Europe? Of Dr. William T. G. Morton, who first proved to the world that the inhalation of ether would produce insensibility to the pain of surgical operations, and that it could be used with safety? Lecky, the English historian, declared Dr. Morton's discovery of ether as an anesthetic to have added more to human happiness than all the discoveries since the time of Christ. Does Dr. Baruch not know Professor A. Jacobi, the American pediatrist of international fame, who today, 85 years young, after a practice of fifty years in his chosen specialty, is still considered the leader and one of the world's authorities in diseases of children? Of Surgeon General Gorgas, the greatest living sanitarian who astounded the world by making of the formerly deadly region of the Panama Canal one of the most sanitary spots of the world, and thus permitting the accomplishment of the greatest engineering work the world has ever witnessed? And this after European efforts had failed!

None, I believe, can appreciate the work of Robert Koch, the discoverer of the tubercle and the cholera bacillus, more than I do, and still I am willing to place the achievements of our own great bacteriologists and pathologists, such as Professor Theobald Smith, formerly of Harvard University, now Director of the newly founded Rockefeller experimental station for the prevention of animal diseases; Professor William H. Welch of Johns Hopkins Medical School, the author of "The Biology of Bacteria, Infection, and Immunity," and his distinguished pupil, Dr. Simon Flexner, Director of the Rockefeller Institute, discoverer of the anti-meningitis serum, side by side with the discoveries of Robert Koch.

What I have said before regarding the woman physician and her achievements in scientific medicine I am willing to reiterate, namely, that considering the relatively small number of women physicians in the world there are as many among them who distinguish themselves as among the man physicians. In reference to Dr. Baruch's almost inexcusable conclusion that America has not brought forth any distinguished medical men in a century, I can only say that this relatively young republic of ours has contributed a large share to all the branches of the healing art during the last hundred years, and has thus added in no inconsiderable degree to the knowledge of the conservation of human life and happiness.

This is not the time to look to Europe only for great discoveries in medicine, surgery, or other sciences. We must rely on ourselves and encourage the young American scientists and students and do honor to the pathfinders who have already shed lustre on American science by their discoveries and labors and have thus helped in the advancement of the good of mankind at large.

Increases Park Av. Holdings.

John J. Kavanagh has sold for the Fallenstein Company to Mark L. & H. Abrahams for investment 108 Park Avenue, a five-story double flat, with stores, on a lot 25 by 82.2.

The buyers are the owners of 1,084 and 1,086 Park Avenue, similar houses, immediately adjoining to the south, and with the purchase of 1,088 now control a plot 75 by 88.

West Fifty-third Street Deal.

The two old buildings at 549 and 551 West Fifty-third Street, fronting 50 feet by 76 and irregular, have been purchased by Anna S. Garges from William B. Schuman for improvement with a garage. The property is near Eleventh Avenue. Chris Schierloh and John P. McMahon were the brokers.

Leased for Trade.

William B. May & Co. have leased for Walter J. Jennings of the Standard Oil Company his former residence at 48 West Fifty-six Street to S. Gensberg, Inc., a ladies' tailor, located for ten years at 68 West Forty-fifth Street.

The Jennings house is five stories high and has been held at an asking figure of $8,000 per annum. It is now leased for ten years. Mr. Jennings some time ago purchased the William T. Hyde house at 11 East Seventieth Street for his residence through the same brokers.

Bronx Sales.

Achilles R. Scharsmith & Co. have sold for David Kraus, for cash, the vacant plot, 25 by 100, at the southwest corner of Seneca and Longfellow Avenues, to Dr. V. E. Kouba, the owner of the adjoining plot. The buyer now controls a plot 50 by 100.

New Jersey.

Farm Sales.

The Batson Farm Agency has sold the Meade farm of 250 acres, valued at $20,000, at Lakeville, Conn., to F. Riggs of New York for an industrial school for boys, and a farm near Poughkeepsie to Virginia Johnson the actress.

Commercial Leases.

Joseph P. Day, in connection with James R. Stryker, has leased for the Consolidated Gas Company to James J. Riordan, for twenty-one years, the old factory on plot 225 by 93, at 438 to 454 West Eighteenth Street. Mr. Riordan will improve the property with a three-story building.

J. Arthur Fischer has rented to Benjamin Kramer the store at 626 Sixth Avenue.

William B. May & Co. have leased the store at 1,651 Broadway for the Emery estate to the Chevrolet Motor Company.

Private Dwellings Leased.

Porter & Co. have leased to Helena King the three-story dwelling at 128 West 123d Street.

The dwelling at 162 West 136th Street has been leased by Barnett & Co. to N. Duryea.

H. W. Krumwiede, Jr., & William Bettmann have leased dwellings for the Waldorf Realty Company to Dr. George Sanders at 232 West 112th Street; for Wells & Snedecker, to Cornelius Martin, at 262 West 131st Street; for Alice E. Hughes, to Oscar Steinmetz, at 228 West 129th Street, and for A. H. Matthews, to Reinholt Lassig, at 217 West 130th Street.

Realty Notes.

The Turner Construction Company has been awarded the contract for the eleven-story Sperry Gyroscope Company's building at Flatbush Avenue and Concord Street, Brooklyn. It will cover a plot 134 by 177.

L'Ecluse, Washburn & Co. were the brokers in the sale of a 530-acre tract on the St. Francis River, Drummondville, Quebec, Canada, to the Aetna Explosives, Inc., where a large plant for the manufacture of explosives will be built.

Andrew J. Connick, Jr., formerly of 244 Fifth Avenue, is now with George R. Read & Co. at 80 Nassau Street.

NEW EAST RIVER BRIDGE.

Work Progressing Rapidly on Structure Over Hell Gate.

The towers which are being constructed on Ward's Island for the bridge of the New York Connecting Railway Company are beginning to appear as conspicuous objects from upper Manhattan, the Bronx, and Queens. They will buttress a steel arch 1,000 feet long, which will carry the tracks of the Connecting Railroad over Hell Gate.

The Connecting Railroad will be ten miles long, of which three and one-half miles will represent the length of the bridge which is to connect the Pennsylvania and New York, New Haven & Hartford systems. For the construction of the approaches and the bridges 90,000 tons of steel and 460,000 cubic yards of concrete will be used. The great arch over Hell Gate alone will require 20,000 tons of steel.

Trains will approach the bridge from the north over the Bronx viaduct, which is 4,356 feet long. They will cross the Bronx Kills upon a bridge with two lifting sections, each 175 feet long, through which vessels will pass between the mainland and Randall's Island.

The road will pass over Randall's Island upon a viaduct 1,965 feet long to the great bridge which spans the Hell Gate Channel between Randall's and Ward's Islands. The towers of this bridge are built of concrete, faced with granite, and will be 240 feet high, with foundations carried down more than 110 feet below mean low water.

The height of the arch between the towers at its centre will be 260 feet and the tracks will be suspended from this arch at a height of 135 feet above mean high water. From the bridge the tracks will be carried upon a viaduct to the Pennsylvania yards at Sunnyside behind Long Island City.

Under favorable conditions it is expected that the bridge will be completed by the beginning of 1917.

NASSAU COUNTY'S GROWTH.

Figures Compiled by Railroad Company Show Increase in Commuters.

The latest and most convincing evidence of Nassau County's steady, as well as rapid, growth has just been furnished by the Long Island Railroad Company. In a compilation just completed the railroad company shows that in 1907 only 523 commuters were carried on the Long Beach Division, one of its electrified branches, while in 1914 the number of commuters was 4,020—an increase of over 700 per cent. in eight years.

This is taken as an indication that southern Nassau County is finding favor as an all-year residence centre. The four adjacent communities of Rockville Centre, Lynbrook, East Rockaway, and Oceanside contribute largely to this growth of traffic. The influx of population to these towns has come steadily and in the opinion of realty experts is a criterion by which taxable values may be fixed. Structural improvement has been marked, especially along the line of all-year homes of distinction.

At Oceanside where a large tract has been developed, subdivided, and improved the Oceanside Improvement Company reports a brisk sale of lots and plots for future building. Long Beach is experiencing a particularly lively season this year.

Montclair Block for Apartments.

An unusually large deal in Montclair which will result in the erection of several apartment houses was closed last week by the brokerage office of Louis Kamm of Newark who sold to Mrs. Lerria T. Scarritt of East Orange a plot of twenty Montclair lots near the railroad station. The plot includes a block front, 300 feet on Elmwood Avenue, half a block front on the east side of Elm Street, and nearly the entire block front on the west side of Miller Street.

Sixteen Years' Assessment Delay.

Attorneys engaged by property owners in Richmond Hill have begun an investigation to discover why an assessment of $900,000 for the construction of a disposal plant for the Jamaica district was not levied sixteen years ago when the plant was constructed. During these sixteen years interest has been accumulating at the rate of 6 per cent. and it totals $864,000, or nearly as much as the original cost of the plant. Notices have been sent to property owners that in October they will be called upon to pay both principal and interest amounting to $1,764,000 in addition to their regular taxes.

The purpose of the inquiry is to learn if the failure to levy the assessment before this time is due to official neglect or oversight.

To Sell Westbury, L. I., Lots.

Within a few blocks of the Westbury, L. I., railroad station, Bryan L. Kennelly will sell at auction on Saturday, Aug. 7, thirty-two lots located on Old Country Road, Post Avenue, Taylor, Myrtle, Park, Bedford, Fifth, Lexington, and Madison Avenues and Grand and Fulton Streets. The sale will take place on the premises at 2 P. M.

Brooklyn's Population.

According to an estimate made by the enumerators of the State census, the Borough of Brooklyn has a population of 1,900,000. Its population in the Federal census of 1910 was placed at 1,634,357.

APARTMENT HOUSE RENTAL CONDITIONS GOOD CONTINUED DEMAND FOR PARK AVENUE SUITES

Brokers Also Report Early Leasing Activity in Choice West Side Sections—Many of the Larger Houses Filled Long Before Completion—Stimulus to New Operations.

1155 Park Ave. | 525 Park Ave. | 400 Park Ave.

HOWEVER gloomy may be the doleful view taken by property owners and others in the realty situation, the prevailing opinion in the chief apartment house centres is very optimistic. This is especially true in the Park Avenue section, where the demand for large suites at rates ranging from $3,000 to $10,000 is showing no signs of abating.

In Manhattan the three most active renting centres are the east side Park Avenue section, the west side in the Broadway and West End Avenue localities above Eighty-sixth Street, and the upper Washington Heights district above 155th Street. For a cheaper type of houses the Dyckman tract is one of the active centres, illustrating that most of the buildings of the last few years have been a financial success.

There has been no overbuilding of apartments during the year, and this is a help in the rental situation. The tight money market, from which it was hard to get loans for new operations unless good reasons for the undertaking could be shown, has influenced this condition. For the first six months of the year the plans filed in the Manhattan Building Bureau for tenements of all kinds called for ninety-eight structures estimated to cost $9,982,500. In the corresponding period of 1914 plans were filed for eighty buildings at a cost of $9,686,000. While the new buildings, therefore, this year are somewhat more numerous the financial outlay is practically equal.

Park Avenue has furnished the elements of chief interest this season in big investments and projects. Indeed, the great success of the big Park Avenue houses evidently influenced the syndicate plans for Fifth Avenue's two new apartment operations, one on the southeast corner of Seventy-second Street and the other on the old Progress Club site at Sixty-third Street.

When expensive Park Avenue houses can show almost a full rental list weeks before the completion of the building, tenants making their selections solely from the plans, it proves that the demand is keeping pace with the supply, and that the great east side residential thoroughfare is steadily increasing in popularity.

N.W Cor 84th St and Broadway

Over a dozen new houses in and near Park Avenue will be ready for occupancy this Fall, and curious as it may be the most expensive ones seem the best renters.

"We have had a larger demand for apartments than ever before, and this is particularly true in those ranging from $5,000 to $8,000," said Lawrence B. Elliman of Pease & Elliman. "Along Park Avenue there is a very limited supply of apartments of this character. New buildings are from 75 to 90 per cent. rented. The demand for apartments ranging in rental anywhere from $1,200 to $3,500 has also been very good.

"We have leased twice as many apartments during the past four months than last year for the same period. We believe the demand is due to the number of people staying here this Winter and who expect to remain here for several years, as they see no possibility of getting to Europe.

"At 525 Park Avenue, southeast corner Sixty-first Street, ranging in rental from $3,750 to $6,000, out of twenty-six apartments there are but four left. At 161 East Seventy-ninth Street a building which has only been open to inspection for two weeks, we have rented ten of twenty-two apartments. At 399 Park Avenue, southeast corner Fifty-fourth Street, a building containing thirty-six apartments ranging from $2,600 to $4,200, there are but six left."

For the first time in many years, according to Douglas L. Elliman, there will undoubtedly be a shortage this Fall in high-class apartments in the east side residential section.

"This is due to two facts," he says; "less production of new buildings than usual, and the necessity of accommodating those families who spend their Winters abroad in peaceful times. One building, as an example, of the highest Park Avenue type, with rents averaging nearly $7,000 for the twenty-two suites it contains, finds itself with only one left for rent, and yet the apartments are not even ready to show!

"Another new building of somewhat lower rentals, on a side street, has only one small suite left, and so it goes throughout the list of the ten new structures created for Fall occupancy. The older buildings also are better rented than for years past.

"Undoubtedly, this condition in apartments will help the renting of houses which have suffered in popularity and price in late years, and fewer vacancies will exist in this field. I believe this healthy condition in the renting market has materially helped in restoring the confidence of the investing public, as is evidenced by the sale of two Park Avenue buildings this Summer before completion, quite a new feature in the investing market."

Rental conditions on the west side above Seventy-second Street are fully satisfactory, according to the brokers who have charge of large properties. The newer structures on West End Avenue and Broadway are renting in many cases much faster than had been looked for at this period, and in many of the choicely situated houses the more desirable apartments were taken early in the season.

THE CITY BUDGET AND THE 1916 TAX RATE

There is much speculation among property owners and real estate men as to the 1916 tax rate. Some estimates have placed it as high as $2.15 per $100. This remarkable increase over the present rate of about $1.92 is based on the additional direct State tax, which approximates about $14,500,000, and the new fiscal policy of the city, which provides that one-fourth of the cost of improvements for the current year will be included in the budget of 1916.

Fully 95 per cent. of the city budget is derived from taxation upon real estate. Although there has been a reduction of assessment in certain sections of the city, nevertheless it is generally recognized that the assessed valuation of real estate is higher than the actual selling value. With an increased tax levy imposed upon assessed valuations that are higher than actual market conditions would justify, the property owners are confronted with municipal financial obligations which in many instances will mean serious distress.

In view of these facts, the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests has decided to follow the preparation of the 1916 city budget with great care and examine each item, in an effort to recommend economies which may safely be effected by the city without impairing the efficiency of the several departments.

With this purpose in mind, representatives from the council have accepted the invitation of the city officials to sit with the sub-committee of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment which will consider the estimates now being submitted by the heads of the various city departments.

As these estimates are presented to the sub-committee of the Board of Estimate representatives of the council will have an opportunity to analyze them and present their recommendations at that time.

Under Section 226 of the Greater New York Charter, the Board of Estimate is required to make a budget between the 1st of October and the 1st of November. In order to enable the board to make such a budget, the heads of the various boroughs and departments are required, not later than Sept. 10, to file an estimate of the amount of expenditure of their respective departments or boroughs for the coming year. In the preparation of these statements, which are known as departmental estimates, every possible object of expenditure is defined, and is to be found in a manual known as Budgetary Classifications.

The meetings of the sub-committee to which the Advisory Council has been invited to send a representative are attended by Deputy Controller Hervey, Robert W. McIntyre of the Bureau of Municipal Investigations and Statistics, Chamberlain Bruere, representing the Mayor; Leo Arnstein, representing the President of the Board of Aldermen; George Tirrell of the Bureau of Standards, and Tilden Adamson of the Bureau of Contract Supervision.

After the departmental estimates are forwarded to this sub-committee those items dealing with personal service are assigned to examiners in the Bureau of Examiners for examination as to the necessity for the sum requested, while those estimates dealing with other than personal service are assigned to examiners in the Bureau of Contract Supervision for like examination. These estimates are likewise compared with appropriations for the previous year by the Bureau of Municipal Investigation and Statistics. Budget bulletins are issued to the public, giving major comparisons between the two, so that the public interested may be informed as to the sums requested for the ensuing year.

After the examiners have completed their work each department is given a hearing before the sub-committee, at which it may present further reasons as to the necessity for the allowances requested, while the respective examiners explain the reasons for such reductions in the requests as they have recommended.

A tentative budget is then prepared and issued to the public and hearings are held. At these hearings taxpayers can present their objections to the budget. Last year at these hearings many suggestions were offered for economies by real estate associations; but few, if any, of the suggestions made could have legally been put into force without violating legislative statutes. As a matter of fact the Board of Estimate is responsible for about 40 per cent. of the total budget.

The debt service representing about 28 per cent. and mandatory legislation, covering 32 per cent. of the budget; permits of no control by the Board of Estimate. Taxpayers' associations should, therefore, bear in mind that any recommendations or criticisms must be directed at those portions of the budget over which the Board of Estimate has direct control.

Although the Board of Education is entitled to $22 out of each $100 of the taxes the city cannot state how this money shall be expended. The authority for such expenditures resides within the Board of Education. Fifteen dollars out of every $100 goes for the Police and the Fire Departments, and yet the Board of Estimate is restricted in its economies within these departments by mandatory legislation.

A member of the Advisory Council said yesterday: "For the most part economies can alone be accomplished with regard to salaries and disbursements under departments controlled by the Mayor. It is to the estimates of these departments that taxpayers should devote careful and intelligent study. The Controller has recently announced that he has formulated a policy of retrenchment for the city which, if put into operation, would mean a considerable saving. It is understood that the Controller will very shortly give to the public the details of this policy."

Inasmuch as the Controller has endeavored within the past year to conserve the resources of the city by recommending to the Legislature reforms in the local municipal finances, it would be wise for all property owners to carefully consider the principles embodied in the proposed policy of retrenchment of the Controller.

After this policy has been deliberated upon by colleagues of the Controller he has assured representatives of the Advisory Council that taxpayers will have the benefit of the various recommendations contained within his report on this matter.

BUILDING IN WESTCHESTER.

Over $2,000,000 Planned for Public and Private Operations.

Westchester County is experiencing a decided activity in building operations, as plans have been prepared for the expenditure in the near future of nearly $2,000,000 in public and private operations. Over $1,000,000 will be spent in and adjacent to White Plains, including the six-hundred-thousand-dollar addition to the County Court House, for which alternate bids in Mohegan granite will be asked early this month. Plans for the new penitentiary group of buildings, to cost $600,000, will be finished about Aug. 15.

In addition to these, new Post Offices costing in the aggregate more than $600,000 will be erected in Yonkers and Mount Vernon. The new Post Office at New Rochelle is practically finished and is expected to be opened this month.

Mount Vernon and White Plains plan in the future to erect modern City Halls, while in New Rochelle a new eighteen-thousand-dollar public market has just been opened with a band concert. The New Rochelle Elks have planned to enlarge their club house at a cost of $30,000. In White Plains it is expected that it will be necessary to erect a jail, as the Prison Commission has so decreed.

Other improvements planned are a fifty-thousand-dollar store and apartment house to be erected by Sam Ellis on South Lexington Avenue, White Plains; dwellings and stores in New Rochelle to cost about $100,000; and over $200,000 will be spent on an addition to St. Joseph's Hospital at Yonkers.

It is also said that John D. Rockefeller intends to erect a large garage of native stone on his estate at Pocantico Hills.

WANT NEW BRIDGE.

Newtown Creek Structure Estimated to Cost $300,000.

The committee on city plan of the Board of Estimate has prepared a report on the request of the Department of Bridges for an appropriation for a new bridge across Newtown Creek, connecting Meeker Avenue, Greenpoint, with Laurel Hill Boulevard, Long Island City.

The report states that the Department of Bridges has been desirous of building a new bridge across Newtown Creek at this point, and has requested an appropriation of $300,000 for the purpose.

The Public Service Commission has had under consideration the elimination of certain grade crossings in this section, and in view of this fact the two matters must be considered together.

The report outlines the several plans that have been proposed and favors the one providing for moving the bridge several hundred feet upstream, which new location would, however, involve a change in the lines of the streets and the acquisition of additional property, but which would be much more desirable.

Flushing's Board of Brokers.

Real estate brokers of Flushing, L. I., have organized a board for the purpose of placing the real estate business of that section upon a sound basis. This board will endeavor to present to outsiders the advantages of Flushing as a field for investment and to induce homeseekers to select Flushing as their place of residence. A committee composed of John J. Halleran, Tax Commissioner; Clinton B. Smith, Jr., attorney, and I. J. Von Sholly will prepare a circular setting forth the advantages of the district.

Bronxville Grade Crossing Going.

The dangerous grade crossing over the Harlem Railroad tracks at Bronxville will soon be eliminated, as the company now has a gang of men at work digging an underground passage so that Pondfield Road crossing will be beneath the double tracks instead of on grade. Several persons have been killed there in the last few years. The work will cost about $172,000, of which the railroad pays one-half, the village one-quarter, and the State one-quarter. It is expected that a new station will soon be built at Bronxville, and that the road will be transformed into a four-track system from Mount Vernon to White Plains.

Apartment Rentals.

Pease & Elliman have rented in the new apartment being built at 161 East Seventy-ninth Street suites to Mrs. Adolph Levy, Mrs. B. D. Kaplan, and Dr. J. C. McGuire, and for R. K. Stafford his apartment in 116 East Fifty-eighth Street to Miss M. Louise Le Bel; an apartment in 138 East Fortieth Street to Emlen E. Littell, and one in 1,190 Madison Avenue to Henry E. Holt.

Douglas L. Elliman & Co. have leased a duplex apartment at 535 Park Avenue, northeast corner of Sixty-first Street, to Mrs. Dwight Arven Jones, and an apartment in the new building at 399 Park Avenue, corner of Fifty-fourth Street, recently sold by S. A. Herzog to William Zeigler, Jr., to Dr. C. G. Curley.

Exempt Realty.

Real estate valued at no less than $1,873,000,000 is exempt from taxation in the City of New York. But $1,420,000,000 of this belongs to the city government, $66,000,000 to the United States Government, and only about $381,000,000 to educational, religious, and other exempt institutions.

GOOD BUILDINGS ATTRACT TENANTS

WISE POLICY FOR OWNERS

Heaviest Migration Over, Says Frank Lord—Many Trades Fixed in Old Centre.

With good remodeled buildings providing improvements necessary for modern business conditions there is no apparent reason why many of the long-deserted or non-remunerative structures in the old downtown dry goods district should not be well rented and provide a satisfactory income.

This opinion was expressed yesterday by Frank Lord, Vice President of the Cross & Brown Company, in his downtown office at 396 Broadway and who has been closely identified in the management and rental of downtown commercial properties for over forty years.

"The reasons for the great uptown wholesale migration have been plausibly explained in many ways," said Mr. Lord. "One of the strong contributing causes has assuredly been the lack of suitably improved buildings for the trade needs of the present day. There is an encouraging tendency, belated though it may be, to rise to the occasion and do something for the tenant. Landlords must learns that a coat of kalsomine and a patched floor do not remodel an old building. It is the liberal soul in real estate as in religion that is made fat."

In support of his argument Mr. Lord cited several distinctive examples of old structures on the side streets near Broadway which have recently been brought up to modern requirements and in which one or two floors have often been rented for as much as many entire buildings in their unaltered condition may be leased for. Among others Mr. Lord commented on the liberal policy of the Manhattan Real Estate Association, which controls a large part of Worth Street between Broadway and Church Street.

"Under the management of George P. Slade and Alfred R. Kirkus, this association has done more to maintain the strength of the old dry goods district than all of the other owners in that particular locality," added Mr. Lord. "The stores it controls are clean, light, and attractive in every respect. For another example look at the old American News Building on Chambers Street and see how a progressive tenant has made an old structure vacant for years a live commercial structure in the neighborhood.

"As a contrast to these desirable improvements it is painful to notice the demoralizing influence of a good Broadway building near the New York Life Insurance Company which advertises by a glaring sign that it provides pool at 40 cents an hour while another Broadway building presents a most detrimental appearance with its broken glass windows and other evidences of demoralization."

In commenting upon the effect of the forthcoming removals of several other wholesale firms, including Burton Brothers, Samstag & Hilder Brothers, Lesher Whitman & Co. and the A. & H. Veith millinery firm, which last week leased two floors in the new building on the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street, Mr. Lord said that he felt the danger of any further general movement from the downtown section was over.

"The decision of Burton Brothers to move," explained Mr. Lord, "means a serious loss to the old district, but it merely emphasizes the fact that business not strictly identified with the dry goods centre will gradually follow the uptown trend. The great dry goods, linen, and textile trades, with their many affiliated business lines, will refuse to be lured into the uptown field. During the past week a representative linen house has renewed the lease of its old quarters, one indication that the linen trade feels content in its customary centre. Similar conditions apply to the cotton and general dry goods merchants in the Broadway blocks between Thomas and White Streets.

"The downtown situation is being improved continually by the constant recruiting of concerns from other cities and by thrifty business men who want the most for their money in location and shipping facilities. Where buildings are properly improved, these business interests are ready to take advantage of the opportunity."

Country House Rentals.

L'Ecluse Washburn & Co. have leased the home of Clarkson Cowl at Garden City to George C. Boldt, Jr., for a term of years.

Fish & Marvin have rented for the Lawrence Park Realty Company a cottage at Bronxville to Pierre W. Sexton, and the Quimby property at Bronxville to Señor Miguel Corrillo of Havana.

Kenneth Ives & Co. have rented for Lewis P. Fish, his residence on the Post Road, Scarsdale, to M. Joveshorf, and for Mrs. B. D. Washburn her house on the Post Road, to Simon Weinstock.

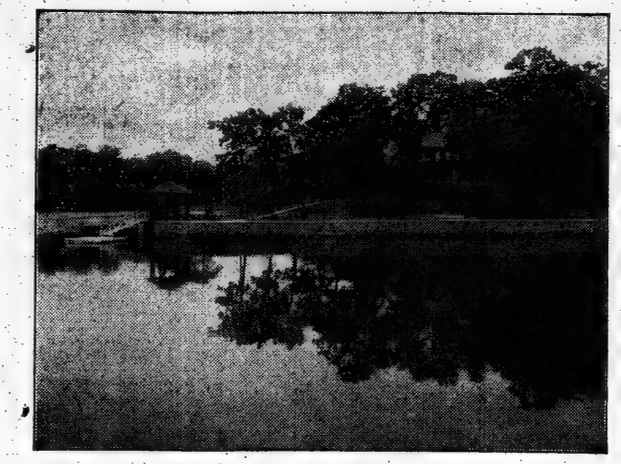
All-Year-Round Country Home by the Sea



ON Echo Bay about midway between Larchmont and New Rochelle there is a country home with 800 feet of sea water front, which realizes the dream of many a man and which can be bought for much less than it would cost to create that dream.

There are three acres of ground covered with fine old trees, offering the unusual combination of seaside and woodland.

The house has 19 rooms and 5 bathrooms, including 6 master bedrooms and 5 servants' bedrooms; also 6 open fireplaces.

The garage-stable has room for three large cars, a carriage room and five stalls and two men servants' bedrooms over.

All facilities and improvements that an owner expects in a thoroughly modern house are found in this home worked out into a place of unusual attractiveness, in which the buildings seem a part of the grounds, and the whole forms a picture from every point of view, from the inside out, or from the outside in.

The name of the place is Carlina. It is on the Boston Post Road, is a mile from the New Haven Railroad station, and has a trolley all the way, an important consideration in the keeping of servants. The property is in what is known as Premium Point Park, which has the exclusive bathing privileges of a white sandy beach, private dock and deep yacht anchorage.

Full particulars, visit to the property and price can all be arranged. The house can be bought for immediate occupancy, furnished or unfurnished. Full commission paid to brokers.

The Right Policy

We apply the same methods to apartment renting that reputable merchants do to merchandising.

We have only one price for the apartments we manage. You can rent from any member of our staff and the price is the same.

This policy has earned for us the confidence of a very large clientele — a confidence which we appreciate and protect in every way.

TO SHOW MACHINES AT BUENOS AIRES

Those of American Make to be Exhibits at the National Industrial School.

A determined campaign is being conducted by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to interest American manufacturers of machinery and machine tools in placing exhibits of their products in the National Industrial School at Buenos Aires, Argentina. J. A. Massel, special agent of the Department of Commerce, who recently returned from an investigation into the machinery and machine tool trade in South America, said yesterday that he was greatly impressed with the splendid equipment contained in the school.

Mr. Massel reported to Secretary of Commerce Redfield and Dr. E. E. Pratt, Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, that it is very desirable in the interest of an enlarged American machinery trade in Argentina that manufacturers in the United States send working models of their products to this school. Both the Secretary and Dr. Pratt warmly indorsed the suggestion.

In order to bring the matter home to the manufacturers here, Mr. Massel, acting under instructions from Washington, will start tonight on an extended tour of the country. He will visit Boston, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, and other manufacturing centres and urge firms to donate machinery to the school. Speaking of the opportunity presented at this time of the desirability of demonstrating the efficiency of American-made products in this school, Mr. Massel said:

"While I was in Buenos Aires an invitation was extended to me as a representative of the United States Government to inspect the National Industrial School. I did so, and was surprised not only at the extent of equipment, but at the attendance as well. There are something like 500 students from all parts of Argentina taking special studies, with practical instruction in the use of machinery and machine tools. These young men, upon graduation, go out into all sections of the republic and take responsible positions.

"With only a very few exceptions all of the machinery installed in the school's industrial plant is from Germany or England, most of it being in the form of donations from German firms. The United States manufacturers have a very slight representation among the models compared with their importance as makers of machinery. I believe this lack of exhibits is a serious thing for our manufacturers from a trade point of view. The school, which is under the control of the Argentine Government, is sending out every year a highly trained class of men, who naturally, when connected with private industrial plants, favor the makes of machines with which they are familiar.

"The German manufacturers have been far-sighted enough to appreciate the value of having their machines in this school, as the students have become familiar with the German types and invariably call for them later on. The Director of the school, Eduardo Latzina, and the Chief Engineer of the school, Alberto Schneidewind, were most cordial in their expressions of regard for the United States, and the American machinery industry in particular. Both of these officials were strongly in favor of a better representation in the school of American products. Mr. Latzina emphasized particularly the school's need of internal combustion motors and freezing machines. While in New York I have talked with many prominent representatives of the machinery and machine tool industries and told them of the advantages to be gained in placing a varied assortment of American products in this school. Most of those I talked with seemed favorably impressed with the idea of exhibiting. While on my trip, which starts tonight, I shall take up the matter of exhibiting with manufacturers all over the country. The indications are good that before long American manufacturers will have a creditable exhibit in Buenos Aires that in the long run should well repay the initial cost of donation."

In a letter to Mr. Massel, Director Latzina outlines the general character of the types that might be sent from this country, together with the conditions under which donations may be made. The Director says in part:

"I have much pleasure in addressing you the present letter making a few observations in this respect which might be of use in case North American manufacturers should resolve to make exhibits. The objects to be exhibited might take the form of actual machines, models of machines or of civil engineering works, tools, construction materials of all sorts, &c. It is understood that these exhibits would be donated to the establishment, whose Directorate would take charge of exhibiting them in the most convenient manner, as has already been done in the cases of other donations. The school Directorate, for its part, would arrange to get such exhibits though the customs free of charge, and would pay for the installation of the exhibits in the museum.

"In accordance with your request I have pleasure in forwarding you herewith a list showing the various models and samples of materials that would be suitable for exhibition. In the case of models of machinery it would be an advantage to send them fitted with electric motors for operation on 220 volts continuous current, in order to be able to exhibit them in actual operation. Other machine models might be presented with cuts to show plainly their internal construction.

"In another list are given the machines that are actually in use in the school for the practical instruction of the pupils. From this list you will note that we are short of internal combustion motors and freezing machines, (which are very important for this country.) In the attached plans the space reserved for the hydraulic laboratory is shown. I think that this would be a good opportunity for the various North American factories to combine in the equipment of this laboratory, which would thus constitute an eloquent testimony of the technical development reached by that great country. It is understood that such an installation would have to be carried out according to the plans that this Directorate would supply. It would be a matter of equal interest to form a hall for the exhibition of models of agricultural machinery and tools used in the working of the land, as this would be an especially attractive exhibit for the public, since in this country agriculture is the most productive of our industries."

Director Latzina has forwarded a list of models and samples, which he says might be shown in the Technological Museum of the Industrial School of the Nation. The list is of the most comprehensive character and extremely diversified, and affords a big range of possible exhibits by American manufacturers.

Agent Massel expects to return to this city Sept. 1 for a short stay before sailing for another official visit to South America. After completing his investigation into machinery conditions in Brazil he will make a systematic study of mining enterprises and mining machinery in nearly all of the South American countries. Mr. Massel has filed with the Department of Commerce a full report on his investigation into the South American machinery field, which it is expected will be published shortly.

Shipping Poor from Aden.

The merchants at Aden, British Arabia, according to Consul William J. Grace, stationed there, are complaining bitterly of the lack of shipping facilities between that port and America. Many merchants have had to discontinue buying, as their warehouses are full and they have no way of shipping the contents thereof to the United States. The Italian vessels are giving preference to shipments to Italy. As there are plenty of cargoes for Italy there is, therefore, no space for cargo to be transshipped to the United States. The Italian lines have increased their freight rates 100 per cent. and their passenger rates 23 1-3 per cent. over the prices before the war.

DANGER SIGNALS OUT IN THE WAR STOCKS

Abrupt Fall of Crucible Steel and Editorial Criticisms Warn Speculators.

ACTION BY EXCHANGE URGED

Plea That It Has Not the Power to Regulate Transactions Is Shown to be Flimsy.

The financial community had its attention drawn rather sharply last week to the danger lurking in speculation in the so-called war stocks. In the first place, internal evidence of trading risks was supplied in an abrupt fall of seventeen points in Crucible Steel in ten minutes after the price had been advanced slightly more than this amount in three hours. In the second place, caustic comment on the state of speculation came from editorial sources, in THE TIMES first and later in other newspapers and financial journals.

The gist of the comment from outside sources was that the Stock Exchange should take measures to curb inordinate expansion of prices. The theory was advanced that if nothing was done and the expected collapse occurred a reaction of sentiment among buyers who lost would be injurious to the reputation of the Stock Exchange.

Prominent members of the board were asked what they thought of the responsibility of the Exchange in the matter. The reply generally received was that the Exchange was powerless to limit speculation, as it was itself the medium simply for expressing the public's interest in stocks and had no warrant to tell the public what it might do.

Pleads Lack of Power.

"The Stock Exchange has nothing to buy and nothing to sell," said a Governor who has done much to describe to the public the real functions of the board. "It is simply a meeting place for its members who come there to fill the orders of others. How could the Exchange decide when a stock or group of stocks was selling too high or too low? The Exchange certainly cannot tell a man not to buy securities with his own money, and we cannot prevent a man from lending him a portion of the money he needs to carry out his intentions in the market.

"The suggestion has been advanced that the Exchange ought to strike from the list any security whose floating supply has been reduced to a low figure. This reduction in case of certain war stocks, it is alleged, has been brought about through accumulations by particular individuals, and the result is a practical 'corner' of the issue. But how can the Exchange tell whether the floating supply actually has been cut down to a dangerously small amount or not? Do the leading stockholders of any company let be known exactly how many shares they own, holding them in their own names and the names of others? No, they do not, and the Stock Exchange would have no right to delve into their affairs to find out.

"Striking stocks from the Exchange list seems a great deal more than that inordinate speculation has by the act been curtailed. It means that holders of those stocks who have no interest in speculative movements are deprived of a free market for their holdings in case they want to sell.

"Securities have sold in all markets at too high prices at times. As long as man has the speculative instinct this will continue to happen. At the present time buying is intensive on the stock market because America is the only free market in the world.

Conditions New Unusual.

"When buying converges upon the goods of a single market, there are naturally more violent price fluctuations than when world markets are fulfilling their functions. That is the case with dealings on the Stock Exchange now and they must be accepted as a part of unusual present day conditions."

Other Governors expressed similar ideas of the Exchange's duties in the present period of rampant speculation in particular stocks. The composite sentiment was that the Exchange must see to it that none of its rules is overstepped, that business by its members be conducted on a sound basis, and that the interests of the public be protected in every way that the Exchange is able to afford protection.

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle took another view of the situation. "It is time to call a halt on the performances that are now being witnessed on the Stock Exchange," says this journal in its current issue. "The speculation there being carried on is of the most daring and reckless kind, and unless quickly brought within proper bounds must sooner or later end in disaster. The great inflation of values that is taking place has as its assumed basis absolutely nothing except the expectations of large profits to be derived from the execution of war orders, chiefly ammunition supplies and the like.

"Such business is obviously of the most hazardous kind, and additional reason for caution exists in the fact that the bulk of the orders are going, not to concerns regularly employed in that class of work and therefore familiar with its nature, but to outside concerns who have never previously been engaged in anything of that sort and who are now turning from their ordinary business to this new line because of the prospect of large profits which it offers.

Powerful Cliques At Work.

"But the prospect of these large profits, albeit of a very risky nature, is being dangled before the eyes of the public and a gigantic speculation is being carried on, evidently by powerful cliques, with the view of utilizing this situation and the known gullibility of the ordinary citizen for the purpose of enriching the members of these cliques. With this idea in mind, prices are being boosted to absurd levels in the belief that is not likely to prove far wrong, that the public, ultimately but unwittingly deceived, will accept the high price levels as entirely justified, and buy with avidity when the manipulators are compelled premanently to unload.

"Has not the Stock Exchange a duty in the premises which it should not neglect to perform? It will at once be answered that it would be difficult for the Exchange to interfere and it must be admitted that it undoubtedly will. Nevertheless, we are inclined to agree with the statement contained in an editorial article in THE TIMES on Thursday as follows: 'If the Stock Exchange really wished to stop the dangerous gambling in war stocks, it could do so. Its power is autocratic; the importance of its being so, in order that the Exchange may be perfectly free to deal with every situation on its merits, has been the strongest argument against incorporation.'"

The Chronicle suggests that the Exchange might scrutinise every transaction for the purpose of determining which are normal dealings and which are manipulative in character.

"It needs no great powers of discernment to perceive from a study of the offficial Stock Exchange sheet that powerful cliques are using the facilities of the Exchange for the deliberate purpose of bringing about a tremendous advance in prices. The purchasing orders may emanate from a hundred different sources, but there is every indication of concert of action or movement and of a directing mind or minds all operating to the same end, behind the movement. The movement itself, as already indicated, is dangerous and its inevitable effect will be to cause serious losses to a lot of innocent though not blameless outsiders, who will then turn around and denounce the Exchange for having tolerated such practices.

"In not a few instances there is reason to believe the outsider is being milked both up and down. Many Stock Exchange houses are doubtless unwitting tools in the hands of the manipulators.

"The Stock Exchange has ample power to trace the business back to its source, for it has full authority to examine the books of all its members. The examination, however, should not be superficial. It must be thoroughgoing. The Stock Exchange authorities must proceed as the District Attorney would in ferreting out crime. And after the offending parties have been discovered, further dealings with them or for them must be prohibited.

"Would not the Stock Exchange gain in general estimation if it adopted such a course, would not the effect be to strengthen confidence in the integrity of financial methods on Wall Street, and would not all talk of compelling the Exchange to incorporate disappear and would not at the same time the Exchange render a great service in preventing the persons whose operations have always been a disgrace to it from ensnaring any more victims? It is certainly high time that the Exchange should take steps to protect its good name and bring to an end the speculative debauch now prevailing there."

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Many Big Companies Report Increased Output at Better Prices.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, July 31.—The Quincy Mining Company is sold ahead on its output to early August. The company made its last sale (about 1,000,000 pounds) at 22 cents.

The Wolverine property produced 7,250,866 pounds of copper during the fiscal year ended June 30, at a cost less than 8½ cents per popnd. The company received slightly under 13 cents per pound for its copper during the year. The rock treated was 297,614 tons, and it yielded 18.235 pounds of refined copper to the ton.

Tamarack stockholders are looking forward to a profit of at least $2,400,000 from the recovery of copper from the ten million tons of waste sands by metallurgical process. The lowest estimate of recovery is four pounds per ton, and the cost of recovery under 7 cents.

Report of North Butte for the year ended June 30 shows production of 4,490,324 pounds of copper, 239,512 ounces of silver, and 270 ounces of gold.

Following are June outputs of four companies in pounds, with comparisons:

	1915.	1914.	1913.
Chino	6,984,977	5,636,102	3,876,533
Nevada Con.	5,124,480	4,483,175	6,344,863
Ray Con.	4,341,127	6,226,536	4,392,612
Utah Copper	14,730,912	13,268,106	11,637,949

South Lake began shipping to the Franklin mill on Thursday. The several lodes are reported looking well, particularly those on the 1,700-foot level. The crosscut on this level is being extended.

Calaveras reports another shipment of high-grade ore to the Selby Smelter.

Alloues turned out 950,000 pounds during June, a record for the property.

Algomah's property is to be explored at once to prove the extension of the Evergreen series of lodes opened up by South Lake.

La Salle continues shipping some 450 tons of rock per day, which averages well.

Davis-Daly has opened up a good ore body on the 1,700-foot level and is to stop drifting there. Another good vein has been cut in the southeast crosscut on the 2,500-foot level.

not only enables the man with a modest income to enter the securities market, but also gives the larger operator an opportunity to diversify his holdings by distributing his commitments among a number of stocks instead of confining his operations to one issue.

The conservatism of this is apparent, as mistaken judgment of an individual stock is not likely to prove very costly, and he is in a stronger position to guard against serious loss in the event of adverse developments in any one issue.

Capitalist or Contractor

wanted to finance completion of railroad near large Southern seaport. Operation too small to attract large bankers or bond dealers. Prominent New York engineers' report indicates interest earned on bonds from beginning of operation. Local capital obtainable only in small amounts. Political and business interests enthusiastic. Road will serve factories and district not now equipped with quick transit, open up valuable farming country, do good commutation business. Arrangements will be made with capital for profitable stock participation in addition to investment in bonds equivalent to capital supplied and permit absolute control until payment dividends. Require $800,000

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Week-End Trading Relatively Quiet—Prices Irregular—Strong Bank Showing.

A week of violent price movements on the Stock Exchange ended yesterday quite sedately. There were a few changes of several points, but not many, and in a number of important stocks the net changes in quotations as a result of the morning's trading amounted only to fractions. The volume of business was large for a Summer half holiday. It amounted to a quarter million shares. As befitted the occasion the stocks which had attracted the most attention during the week, Bethlehem Steel and Crucible Steel, showed net declines for the day, a normal result of week-end profit-taking.

The stock market attaches much more importance to other considerations than it does to the current drift of the war. That was shown by the indifference of the market yesterday to the news that the German armies were on the eve of accomplishing their purpose of driving the Russians out of Warsaw and out of most of Poland. That it is true had been foreshadowed, but it might seem an event important enough to find more definite reflection in the course of prices in a market which counts persistently upon the success of the Allies in this war. The fact is that it counts on that no less because of this mishap to one of the Allies. German successes are looked upon as prolonging the war, not not as indicating the ultimate defeat of the Allies. And merely prolonging the war does not serve to dismay a market which has been built up so largely in its more spectacular phases at least upon the business which the war has brought to our manufacturers.

Steadily the New York banks are building up their surplus reserve not at all because they feel the need of a larger reserve than they have had, but because cash has been coming in faster than loan requirements have expanded. Another $7,000,000 and more was added to surplus in yesterday's bank statement. The Clearing House members now have $180,000,000 in excess of their reserve requirements. A year ago they had less than one-tenth of this. The change in the banking law has had much to do with this change in reserve, but it is not the less real for that reason. It will be interesting from now on to see how far the banks of the country will continue to depend upon the resources of their correspondent banks in the reserve centres and how far they will fill their needs through rediscounts at the Federal Reserve banks. Both the member banks and the reserve banks are in a position to extend an unusually large amount of credit to banks or to other borrowers. That gives double guarantee that requirements will be easily met.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Severe Week on Clerks.

The stock trader will recall the week just passed as one of much excitement, and the brokerage house employe will recall it as one of much hard work. Million-share days, coupled with intense heat, are unusual in Wall Street experience, as the Summer months have usually been times of light business. To make their labor even more severe, the clerks had to handle a vast amount of detail in regard to current market matters just when the extra labor incident to the end of the month loomed up before them. One commission house which employs 150 men had fifty of them at work until nearly sunrise Friday morning checking up the previous day's transactions and sending notices of purchases and sales to customers. Overtime was the order in practically all the houses which do a margin business. The fact that Saturday brought only a moderate flow of trading was welcomed by the men at the books.

Short Sellers Look for Signs.

Again yesterday the market lost some ground. Short sellers of Thursday before the break occurred would have liked to convince themselves that prices were in process of reaction, but the grounds upon which such a theory could be based appeared to be untenable. There were more recessions than advances among the stocks which have of late been supplying the bulk of activity, without the declines being the product of steady selling, which might be translated as the forerunner of still more selling.

Virginia-Carolina Pfd. Climbs.

Virginia-Carolina preferred began to act yesterday, in the words of a broker, more like an 8 per cent. stock than it had in many months. It crossed par for the first time since early in May, and was exceeded by only two other issues in strength for the session. Evidently the company's annual report, showing more than 7 per cent. earned on the common stock, worked to advance the preferred.

Baldwin Falls Back.

Baldwin Locomotive was one war stock to drop out of line with others of the group in the last half of the week. When Crucible Steel was dashing forward Thursday morning, Baldwin hung rather sluggishly between 83 and 84 most of the time, and the drooping tendency of the list afterward had distinct reflection in the Locomotive shares. At yesterday's closing price they were 6⅞ points under the best level of the week.

Lackawanna Gains.

The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western had better profits for the year ended June 30 than in any year since 1909. This railroad, while never in a predicament through business depression, had experienced a falling off of several millions annually in profits in the last five years, and business conditions came in for much comment every year in the company's official report. It appears now that the corner has been turned. The net income for the twelve months was $13,526,000, an increase of $825,000.

Cotton Reports.

A leading cotton brokerage house reports that a study of the cotton condition in the South indicates that the condition of the growing crop as of July 23 is 1.7 points below the condition last year at the same time. On a point basis the condition is rated at 76.9, compared with 78.6 last year, 81.9 in 1913, and 77.7 in 1912. An independent investigation made by another agency puts the rating of cotton for the month at 77.3, against its rating of 79.7 last year and 79 for the ten-year average.

July Financing.

American corporations, in the face of the new British 4½ per cent. war loan, did little financing in July. The corporate financing for the entire country amounted to only $40,000,000, compared with an average for the first six months of the year of about $133,000,000. February was the highest, with $216,000,000, and March second with $174,000,000. But even the total of $835,000,000 is very small compared with normal times. Thus in the seven months just before the war the amount of financing was larger by $247,000,000 and for the first seven months of 1913 the amount was higher by $400,000,000. About $519,000,000 of the July financing was for refunding and a little more than $300,000,000 for new work.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

The market on the Consolidated Exchange was firm, although rather irregular, owing to the evening up of contracts natural at the end of the week. Such bearish factors as appeared in the day's news were apparently ignored. Many of the specialties continued strong, with Allis-Chalmers particularly conspicuous.

NEWS OF THE CORPORATIONS AND THE BANKS

RAILROADS TO UNITE IN PUBLICITY BUREAU

Permanent Organization for Protection Recommended by Committee.

LESSON IN FULL CREW WAR

21 Lines Spent $175,000 and Failed to Kill Bills—Now Advocate Wider Publicity.

The Executive Committee representing the twenty-one associated railroads which conducted a publicity campaign last Winter to defeat the full crew laws in Pennsylvania and New Jersey has made a report on its work. The campaign, conducted vigorously in February and March; cost $175,000. Expenses were divided on the basis of the saving which each of the railroads would have made if the full crew laws had been repealed in the two States. It cost the Pennsylvania System $82,000, the Philadelphia & Reading $16,000, the Lackawanna and the Lehigh Valley $12,000 each, and the Erie and the Central Railroad of New Jersey $10,000 each. The New York Central contributed about $7,000.

It was the hope of the railroads that the full crew laws in Pennsylvania and New Jersey would be repealed and that laws placing the power to regulate the size of train crews in the hands of the Public Service Commissions would be substituted. The direct effect of the campaign was nil. In New Jersey the bills favored by the railroads were not even reported out of the committees. In Pennsylvania a bill favored by the railroads passed both houses of the Legislature but the Governor allowed it to die.

The report states, however, that the indirect effect of the publicity campaign was very beneficial to the railroads. Seventeen different advertisements were placed in 1,150 different papers. There were thousands of newspaper accounts setting forth the railroads' arguments. In addition circulars were sent to thousands of persons and there were speeches and debates on the subject in all parts of the States.

Half A Million Letters.

According to the railroads there is a record of 504,903 letters sent to legislators by individuals. In Pennsylvania, 175 resolutions commending the railroads' point of view were passed by business associations, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, granges, and other civic bodies and eighty-four resolutions were passed in New Jersey.

"While the action of the Governor of Pennsylvania lessened considerably the concrete benefits derived from this campaign," said the report, "a great deal of good resulted therefrom, both in the protection of our interests from the enactment of other vicious laws and the molding of a strong public sentiment favorable to the railroads.

"The public activity of the railroads in the campaign to substitute commission authority over the manning of trains for the present arbitrary full crew laws, brought the people and legislators on one hand, and railroad corporations and their employes on the other hand, in much closer relationship, with the result that a common feeling seemed to develop that the enactment of legislation adverse to the railroads was overdone and should be curtailed. This is more clearly illustrated by the fact that during the recent sessions of the Legislatures no destructive legislation was enacted."

In Pennsylvania, the report stated, 105 bills affecting railroads were introduced and only twelve of an unimportant nature passed. In New Jersey only fourteen out of eighty-four bills become laws, and they were also regarded as unimportant by the railroads.

The most important recommendation that has grown out of the publicity campaign is one to establish a permanent inter-railroad publicity organization intended for the protection of the roads. It is proposed to have publicity organizations for each railroad and to have all of these units support the general organization. The Pennsylvania Lines and a few other railroads have publicity departments, but there has been no attempt to organize a central organization.

Publicity Campaign Urged.

"In the judgment of your Executive Committee," said the report to the railroad companies, "the results of this campaign prove conclusively that the railroads should take active measures to identify themselves, in a proper manner, with matters of public interest. They should not become active in political affairs, but they should organize to protect themselves against the enactment of vicious legislation and, at the same time, lend their aid and influence in the passage of proper laws. This will protect not only the railroads, but the public who suffer from the financial burdens imposed by ill-advised legislation.

"The railroads should press forward what is right and proper. They should do this courageously and without apology, for none is necessary. They should be equally careful not to ask for assistance in obtaining anything to which they are not fairly entitled. They should proceed in the open and depend upon frank publicity as their greatest protection. Fair and honest propositions thrive through publicity—unfair and dishonest propositions are destroyed by publicity.

"There should be created a permanent organization, which could be known as the Department of Public Policy and Relations, to represent the railroads in matters of public interest and in such other respects as may be deemed proper. The creation of this organization should be made known to the public at the start and the purposes for which it was established specified."

It is pointed out in the report that the railroads, in creating publicity departments and a central publicity agency, will only follow the lead of the railway employes who are well organized and who have what they call a joint national legislative board which represents the various labor organizations.

Those constituting the Executive Committee of the twenty-one associated railroads are R. L. O'Donnell of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Chairman; J. S. Fisher of the New York Central, C. H. Ewing of the Philadelphia & Reading, F. Hartenstein of the Lehigh Valley, and P. C. Allen of the Baltimore & Ohio.

COTTON PRICES SAG IN LIGHT TRADING

Government Report Tomorrow Expected to Show Slight Deterioration.

LIVERPOOL MARKET CLOSED

Question of Exports Bothers Traders —Shipments to Russia by Way of Pacific Discussed.

The Liverpool market was closed yesterday, it being a bank holiday in England and the American cotton markets were left to their own initiative. The weather reports were fairly good, showers being reported in some parts of Texas where rain was needed. There was little disposition to sell short, however, because of the fact that August is always a critical month for the cotton crop. The trading was rather light, and although there was no pressure on the market, prices eased off a little and the market closed barely steady, four points lower than the previous close.

The Government report upon the condition of the crop up to July 25 will be made public tomorrow. It is expected that a deterioration of two or three points will be shown for the month. This is not a poor showing, as July usually sees some deterioration. The condition of the crop is at least as good as usual at this season and unless there should be very bad weather later a very good yield per acre should be shown in the final outturn.

The question of exporting to Europe is the most important one for the cotton world today. There are some Russians in the market for the purpose of making arrangements for the shipment of a large amount of cotton by way of the Pacific, but the feeling is that war conditions will make it impossible to send as much abroad during the next twelve months as has been exported this season. The bears are making capital out of this feature of the situation, but until something definite is known as to the size of the crop, it is going to be very difficult to force prices much below the present level.

American mills are somewhat embarrassed by the shortage of dyestuffs, but nevertheless most mills in this country are running full time and domestic consumption promises to be more than normal next season. Although the weather has been fairly good to date, a dry hot August would change the entire situation, and the reduction of acreage is so large that perfect weather during the entire season would be necessary to produce a crop anywhere nearly as large as any that have been raised in recent years. The South is giving the market little support at the present time and would undoubtedly become a very heavy buyer if the weather should turn unfavorable.

Southern spot markets as officially reported were: The local market for spot cotton was quiet and unchanged. 9.30 for middling upland. Market closed barely steady. The range of contract prices was as follows:

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

THE MERCHANT'S POINT OF VIEW

In many directions marked progress was shown during the past week so far as concerns mercantile trade. Buyers are still coming to the city in numbers, and many are expected during the coming fortnight. A disposition is shown in some instances to postpone purchases, but the reasons given do not include any apprehension of poor business for the next six or eight months. On the contrary, the expressions of opinion have been optimistic almost without exception. The hesitancy about buying has been partly caused by uncertainty as to styles or the maintenance of prices, and this has had the effect of emphasizing the hand-to-mouth purchasing which seems to have become chronic. Basic conditions, however, continue to be favorable. There is no apprehension about crops of any kind, and the most recent disclosures as to these are distinctly favorable. The larger of the manufacturing industries are constantly reporting improvement, and this is evidenced in a striking manner by increases in the pay of the wage-earners. The building trades, which were hard hit by the slump of two years ago, are beginning to show a quite marked degree of activity that is decidedly encouraging. Aside from the special troubles of certain groups of importers who suffer from the British blockade, the outlook is better than it has been for a year.

Cotton and its Fabrics.

It is increasingly evident that there will be no such period of acute unrest regarding this year's cotton crop as there was at the end of last year. This is partly reflected in the quotations on the Exchanges, but is shown better in the expressions of opinion from those who are close to the growers. If the plans for storage and financing of the crop come anywhere near the expectations there should be little occasion for much "distress" cotton. The strength shown in the quotations of the makers of cotton goods bears this out. The only weak spot discoverable is in the cheaper sorts of knit goods, where certain manufacturers have been a little too eager to cut prices. This weakness in one direction has had the effect of causing some jobbers and wholesalers to defer making their purchases for next Spring, preferring, as one expressed it, to take their chances for getting goods cheaper later on by holding off now. In bleached and fancy cloths a fair-sized business has been done at prices which are regarded as profitable.

Wool and Woolens.

No change of consequence has been shown with regard to wool. The demand for all kinds continues, and, high as the prices are, the best indications are that they will be higher before they get lower. Every one of the warring powers is getting ready for a Winter campaign, and that means a continuous demand for wool, in spite of the fact that cotton-fleeced goods will be used wherever practicable. Already American mills are being applied to to make the surplus stocks of uniform cloth, blankets, and the like which Great Britain cannot supply. On top of this is a pretty fair demand for cloths of divers kinds not only for the ordinary needs of the people of this country—which under normal circumstances foots up the respectable total of about 600,000,000 yards—but also to take the place of fabrics that are usually obtained from abroad. The President of the largest of the woolen manufacturing companies has expressed the opinion that the last six months of the present year will show a record output for the mills under his control. And his are by no means the only ones which will share in what promises to be a notable season in the woolen manufactures of the country.

Looks Like Discrimination.

A recent letter to the) trade from a firm in this city which imports knitting machines from Germany has set some persons to thinking. The concern referred to says its German factory is working and that the machines are being delivered here with regularity. The case is similar to that disclosed by the meetings of importers who are endeavoring to get goods of large quantity and value that have been delivered by German manufacturers in Rotterdam to be shipped to this country. In both instances those in Germany are as eager to get the goods here as the importers in this country are to receive them. The obvious reason, aside from the immediate profit in the transactions, is that the German manufacturers wish to keep the trade instead of losing it by forcing the manufacture of these kinds of goods in this country. Their action in this respect is widely divergent from that which they have taken regarding dyestuffs, which they positively refuse to let out. Apparently by reason of representations made to them by their agents in this country, the Germans have attempted to use this matter of supplying dyes to coerce this country into joining issue with Great Britain on the question of stopping the supplies of cotton and foodstuffs from here to Germany. This is turning out to be bad business policy, because it presages the end of the use of German-made colors in this country. In view of what has been done and is now doing to manufacture dyestuffs here it will be impossible for the Germans in the future to have the monopoly in these things, which they have hitherto enjoyed. The term contracts with American color makers already entered into would of themselves prevent it did not other steps, in contemplation, work toward the same end.

Further as to Dyestuffs.

Great as are the lamentations on the lack of dyestuffs in this country, it remains a fact that shipments of such materials from here are increasing, and there continue to be added demands for them from European and other countries. In the hands of skilled dyers much can be done with the vegetable colors, and these are resorted to in eking out the diminishing supply of coal-tar derivatives. But the available quantity of synthetic dyes made in this country will soon show a large increase. This result will be measurably hastened as the output of benzol and toluol increases beyond the point where most of these products are needed for making explosives. As it is the amount of these two basic articles produced in this country is growing with great rapidity, and it will not be long before the present exorbitant prices for them will drop. Assuming, as seems to be the general belief, that the war will continue for another year, the end of that period will show a wonderful development of the coal-tar dye industry in this country, making it virtually independent of foreign sources of supply.

Pure Fabric Agitation.

The National Association of Wool Manufacturers has been taking up the matter of the so-called "pure fabrics" legislation. A number of bills for dealing with this subject are before Congress, and considerable agitation of the subject has been in progress for the past two years. It is recognized that the ultimate consumer will not be especially benefited by a mere labeling of the contents or composition of the article he buys. A cloth may be all wool and yet be inferior in wearing qualities and appearance to one containing an admixture of cotton. Similarly the much-derided shoddy is at times a better ingredient than certain kinds of fresh wool. The general impression is now getting to be that legislation modeled on the lines of the English Merchandise Marks act, which provides penalties for misrepresentation of an article offered for sale, offers the best hope of accomplishing the result desired.

Possible Shifts of Trade.

After a year of warfare which has upset the world's trade and financial schedules the temptation is strong by students of markets to try and discern the tendencies and thereby endeavor to figure out what shifts are merely temporary and what are likely to become more or less fixed. Upon one thing all seem agreed, and that is that trade conditions will never again revert to the position they occupied when the war began. Each warring nation, and similarly all neutral ones, are learning to be more self-contained so as to be obliged to rely less on foreign supplies of things of real need. This applies, of course, not so much to the products of the soil as it does to manufactured articles. So it is that new handicrafts and processes are springing up in different countries which have had impressed on them the need of depending as far as possible on their own resources. The progress made in Great Britain in chemicals, dyes, glassware, philosophical, and electrical apparatus and the like is only typical. In this country the trend is even more pronounced. It has shown itself in many directions, including not only those observed in Great Britain but in other ways made possible by the discovery of new raw materials as well as in the various branches of the textile industry. Now the peculiarity of all this is that the new things will continue to be made when things get normal again, and the result will be that many kinds of articles will cease to figure largely as imports and are likely to show up in the outbound shipments.

Hard on the Shoe Retailer.

The past season has been a trying one for the shoe retailer. He has been obliged to learn new ways, and in doing so has often felt that his past experience, no matter how great or varied, has been no guide to him. The reason for it has been the number of freak contrivances in the way of footgear, most of which have been designed for women's wear. Every other week or so a new style came out, and the relatively few extremists in the different communities insisted at least on trying them on. The way they learned about them was from advertisements in fashion papers, which declared that they were all the rage with the haut ton. This, of course, made it necessary for every would-be stylish woman in country villages and backwoods towns to equip herself in the same way. The trouble was in finding out what was the really latest style. Woman, being, as a rule, a deliberating person, took her time in making up her mind as to the new contraption. By the time she had come to a definite conclusion and determined to get a particular kind of shoe she would usually discover that it was already out of date and that another freak had taken its place. This made her wabbly and uncertain as to choice, and when she finally took a chance she found she had made a mistake. As most women can, however, afford a new pair of shoes only once in so often, the purchasers, as a rule, made the best of it, though chagrined. With the dealer it was different. He sold generally no more pairs of shoes, but was obliged to try and keep up with the styles. As a result, he found himself with a lot of unsalable stock on his hands. He will be more cautious next time, unless the right kind of a honey-tongued salesman beguiles him.

PROPER FASTENING OF PACKING CASES

Hints That Will Save Money to Business Houses and Lower Damage Claims.

How much money can be saved to the business houses of this country, as well as annoyance, by the proper packing of the merchandise they send out? And how much money and annoyance might be saved the railroads, through the damage claims they will not have to investigate and meet, by the same careful procedure in the shipping rooms of these business houses? These questions are not answered in a bulletin on proper packing that has been issued by the National Association of Box Manufacturers, but the bulletin does say enough to indicate that these savings would be considerable.

About the only function a packing box has is to bring the goods it contains to the place consigned in as good condition as possible. According to the bulletin in question, it often fails in this mission because it is not properly handled in the shipping room. Not only are many of the boxes improperly packed, but a great many of them are improperly nailed. Because of the latter fault the carrying capacity of a packing box is often reduced 30 to 50 per cent.

If, as is charged, improper nailing reduces the carrying capacity of a packing box to the extent told of above, it is fair to assume that proper packing and the use of the right kind and number of nails may reduce, by a sizable percentage, the cost of the cases themselves to the houses which buy them by reducing the number required. One local mercantile house, for instance, spends approximately $8,000 a year for packing cases alone, in addition, presumably, to pressing into service the boxes it receives full of merchandise of one kind or another. If the shipping room of this particular house be as guilty of poor packing as the box manufacturers say the average shipping room is, it would appear that money could be saved by following the rules laid down in the bulletin as to proper nailing. The bulletin, which contains this information among other things, as well as illustrations of a properly and improperly nailed box, says:

"The wooden box manufacturers have heard many complaints from the railroads relative to packages failing in transit, with the result of increased damage suits.

"We are passing through an era of economy in shipping containers, until the motto of 'not how cheap, but how good' has been reversed to 'not how good, but how cheap.'

"We have investigated the various causes for the failure of wooden boxes in transit and are convinced that the principal reason is faulty nailing. Shooks are frequently nailed up by inexperienced help, and in many instances by piecework, with the result that the carrying capacity of the box is reduced 30 to 50 per cent. by using nails that are too small and too few in number; consequently a generally poor job of nailing.

"It is imperative that the shook manufacturers, shook consumers, and the railroads require that wooden boxes do the work for which they are designed, viz., carry safely to destination without breakage. We therefore ask the co-operation of all interested in the better nailing of wooden boxes, and herewith submit a schedule of general rules, giving the size and number of nails to be used for the different thicknesses of lumber."

The bulletin then goes on to say that the number of nails to be used for a given box is determined by adhering to the rule of spacing nails approximately two inches apart, except when nailing up boxes where sides, tops, and bottoms consist of more than one piece. In such cases the packer should make sure that the narrow pieces have at least two nails in each nailing edge, and more, if necessary, to comply with the rule for two-inch spacing referred to. This schedule is given for the nailing of soft wood boxes, the nails being cement coated:

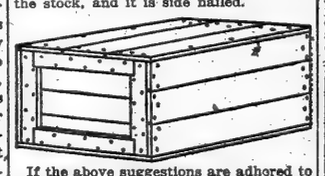
Thickness of Wood.	Kind of Nail.
¼-inch	4 penny
⅜-inch	5 penny
7-16 or ½-inch	6 penny
9-16 or ⅝-inch	7 penny
⅞-inch	8 penny

For the nailing of hardwood boxes, the nails being cement coated, this schedule is outlined:

Thickness of Wood.	Kind of Nail.
¼-inch	Special large 3 penny or regular 4 penny.
⅜-inch	4 penny
7-16 or ½-inch	5 penny
9-16 or ⅝-inch	6 penny
⅞-inch	7 penny

Below is given the bulletin's illustration of an improperly nailed box. It is improperly nailed for these reasons: Not enough nails; nails driven in straight line, all in end grain; nails driven in cracks, and no side nails.

The box that is shown below this paragraph is properly nailed, according to the bulletin, because it contains one-third more nails than the box illustrated above; the nails are properly staggered and tipped; the nails are all driven into the stock, and it is side nailed.



If the above suggestions are adhered to strictly, the bulletin says in conclusion, it will add greatly to the carrying strength of wooden boxes. To business houses that are interested and willing to co-operate with the association in securing the better nailing of boxes, it will send, upon application, the nailing specifications outlined above, printed on a 12 by 12 card and suitable for hanging in the shipping room. Requests for these cards should be made to the National Association of Box Manufacturers, 1,210 Edison Building, Chicago, Ill.

Buyers from Indianapolis.

Indianapolis will move on New York in unique fashion when a big party of buyers for dry goods and department stores there will reach here this evening in three special sleepers attached to the Black Diamond Express of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. Heretofore, Indianapolis buyers coming to this market have traveled separately and as they pleased, but this year some one had the inspiration to organize an all-Indianapolis party. The buyers for the big stores made it a sort of club affair had special sleeping cars chartered, and arranged for a trip to New York which would enable them to combine pleasure with business.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Questions Brought up on Appeals from Duties Levied.

The Continental Distributing Company, Seattle, lost yesterday before the Board of General Appraisers in the claim that an allowance should be made for bottles of brandy never received. The contention was that each case contained only four bottles, as against the twelve assessed by the customs men. Judge Waite held that the importers failed to submit adequate testimony to show breakage, leakage, or damage. Under these circumstances, the decision said, no relief can be granted.

After a rehearing, the board sustained a protest by A. Kastor & Brothers regarding the status for dutiable purposes under the Tariff act of 1909 of pearl-handled daggers. The Collector returned the articles under the provision for pocket knives with folding blades at specific and ad valorem rates according to the value of the goods. Judge Fischer found that the articles are the "hunting knives" specifically provided for in the law, and ordered their entry at 1 cent each and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

F. B. Vandegrift & Co., acting as forwarders, were sustained in the claim that marble candelabra are properly dutiable under the tariff at 15 per cent. ad valorem as "sculptures." It was shown at the hearing that the candelabra stand seven feet high, are very elaborately carved, having a human figure upon the base and acanthus-leaf decoration covering virtually the whole shaft. The evidence showed the candelabra to be copies of an original work of art at present in the Louvre, formerly in the Vatican. Judge Waite said the articles are elaborate in design and should be admitted as sculptures. He said the original seems to be well known, and is referred to in different works on art. He added that the testimony showed that the candelabra involved in the protest are accurate copies of the original. The Collector was reversed in exacting duty at 45 per cent. ad valorem as manufactures of marble.

The board ruled in the case of L. Rubelli's Sons, Philadelphia, that merchandise entered before the passage of the Tariff act of 1913 and placed in bonded warehouse, for which a permit of delivery had been issued to the importer or his agent prior to the taking effect of the law of 1913, is dutiable under the Tariff act of 1909.

It was decided, in the case of George Borgfeldt & Co., that standards and bowls constituting lamps should be considered entireties. The merchandise is composed of alabaster lamps, consisting of a standard with a globe or bowl at the top which contains the light. They are elaborately carved and present a very artistic appearance as revealed by the photographs introduced in evidence. The standards, various groups of human figures, were assessed as sculptures under the tariff at the rate of 15 per cent. ad valorem, while the bowls were classified as manufactures of alabaster and taxed 45 per cent. The decision said that while the standards are more valuable and elaborate than the bowls, the latter are elaborately carved, are artistic and should be taxed along with the standards as sculptures. The Collector was reversed in taking duty separately.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company made an importation of wire tea strainers at Baltimore, which were taxed by the Collector at 20 per cent. ad valorem as manufactures of metal not specially provided for. The claim was that the articles should be admitted at 15 per cent. ad valorem as articles manufactured wholly or in chief value of wire. The railroad proved by the Government's customs examiner that wire predominated in all of the strainers. In view of this testimony, the board sustained the protest and reversed the Collector.

J. Benz and the Chemical Importing and Manufacturing Company were upheld in the claim that the drums containing binoxide of barium are free of duty under the tariff as the usual coverings of goods subject to a specific duty. The Collector was reversed in levying a 20 per cent. duty on the drums as vessels for holding liquids or other material.

The board declined to reverse the Collector in his assessment of duty on various cast iron parts which, when assembled, made up complete boilers. The parts were taxed at 20 per cent. ad valorem as metal manufactures and claimed dutiable at 45 per cent. as cast iron castings advanced in condition, but not made up into articles or finished machine parts. A further claim was for a rate of 12 per cent. as advanced forgings. The decision said that the testimony of the witness for the importers fully supported the report of the Appraiser that the imported cast iron parts when assembled constitute complete boilers. It was accordingly held that the protests were without merit. The J. P. Dahlborn Company were the importers.

WANT GENUINE JEWELRY.

There is much more genuine jewelry and much less imitation or plate ware used in Brazil, writes Consul Robert Frazer, Jr., from Bahia, than in the United States. Even negroes, who constitute nearly 90 per cent. of the population of the City of Bahia, use a great deal more of .800 pure silver and 14 carat gold, much of both of which is made in Brazil, and comparatively little plated and almost no purely imitation jewelry.

There is, in fact, only one jeweler there who handles the latter on any scale, and he does not appear to be extending his business in that line. There are no local requirements whatever as to stamping or trademarks, and, as a matter of fact, articles are rarely stamped or marked. There seems to be practically no deception, however, as customers are at perfect liberty to test, and do very often test, articles by various methods before accepting them.

EFFECT OF WAR ON DOMESTIC WOOLENS

Drawback to Making Higher-Class Goods Is the Tendency to Cheaper Ones.

The great war is one year old, and since its beginning the domestic mills making dress goods and men's wear fabrics have been granted an exceptional opportunity to show what they could do with European competition practically eliminated. Before the nations of Europe turned their energies from commercial war to war in grim reality, complaints were innumerable that the quality of the woolens made in this country had been misrepresented, that domestic goods were being sold as of foreign make, that the prestige accorded any article with the word "imported" tacked to it was too great an obstacle for the domestic manufacturers to overcome. In many of these cases the truth was cited, in others the facts were exaggerated. Now that the situation is beginning to clear, those connected with the sale and distribution of domestic piece goods are better posted to tell what has happened and what may happen.

This is the experience of the head of a mill organization with the reputation for selling the highest class dress goods:

"I started on my vacation shortly before the war started. It was our intention at that time, because of slack business, to shut down our mills for a time. When the war broke out there was a concerted movement on the part of buyers to cover their needs, as it was not known at that time how severely handicapped the foreign manufacturers might become. The demand was very brisk for a while, and necessitated my return to the city to look after matters. The slump in business that followed this activity was just as sudden. As I review the events of the past year I recognize one outstanding feature. There has not been the incentive given the mills making fine goods in this country to attempt even greater things than they have accomplished.

"In the first place, the tendency all along has been for cheaper goods. In the second place, there was not a total lack of foreign goods of this class. As far as the tendency toward cheaper goods is concerned, I see only one possible explanation, and that in the present practice of sacrificing quality to price. There are buyers in the big stores whose earnings depend upon the volume of business they can do in their departments. They work on a percentage basis, and price has come to mean everything for them. Just as an instance, let me quote the following: When it was seen last year that coverts would be very good we turned our efforts toward making the finest piece of cloth we knew how. Following the sale of this cloth on the open market we had three coat and suit manufacturers come to us and tell us that the buyer for a large retail store in this city desired that cloth made up in a suit to sell for $18.50. It was merchandise at a price that this man wanted, and I venture to say that quality is getting very scant consideration these days. As a result of the competition that followed on coverts made them backnumbers in less than a season. In former years we were able to keep on making a fabric for as long a period as two years. The object then was to make as good a cloth as it was possible to make.

"I had occasion to visit the place of business of a customer of ours during this same covert craze, and found he was using our goods. But he was using them only in his sample garments. The buyers from whom he took orders wanted something cheaper 'at a price,' and he had bought inferior goods to put into the garments he sold them.

"Getting back to the original question, however, have the mills of this country made any progress toward turning out better fabrics to take the place of those of foreign manufacture? I would say, No. There has not been the necessary incentive. The best will come when the demand for it arises."

In the men's wear end of the woolen business the same conditions are met with as in the kindred industry. Quality has been sacrificed in large measure to price, and another detail that is tending to bring down the average price paid for woolens is the larger percentage of cost put into tailoring. Style has become a bigger factor than it ever was before, and the saving on woolens goes into tailoring.

There are signs, however, that a change may be expected in this situation. The retail clothiers are clamoring for better values in the garments they buy. They claim that more durable fabrics should be used.

A man who has been in the clothing manufacturing business for close to half a century has stated that it is only a question of time before less attention will be paid to price and more to the quality of clothing. When this movement takes shape it is natural to suppose that the mills will be given the incentive necessary for them to turn out more substantial fabrics.

Of further consideration is the point brought forward by one manufacturer that the growing percentage of buying done practically for immediate needs will have a great influence on the future of many of our industries. In the hat trade he showed how foreign competition had practically been stifled by the speed with which styles were changed on this side, and the necessity of making quick deliveries. The tendency to put off buying until very late in the season has changed methods of selling to a remarkable extent, and the movement seems to be growing instead of showing any decline. How this will affect the foreign business houses when commercial relations are renewed with this country remains to be seen.

Over $15,000,000
annually paid to Manufacturers and Jobbers who only NEED more CASH to MAKE more money

Many such firms use us only as a convenience and not as a necessity, selling us only a small portion of their accounts just when they need "extra money"—others give us their entire business—no obligation in either case as to time or volume.

On April 15th, 1915, our Total Charges, including Interest (which is ½ of 1% a month), Exchange, Postage, etc.—no extras—were reduced to only 1-30 of 1% on the face of accounts for each day from date of our purchase until paid (1% a month), plus a fee of $5 per $1,000 only on the first $100,000 gross accounts purchased within any 12 successive months.

Any broad-minded business man will tell you frankly that these rates are most reasonable. They are lower than the usual rates of the New York Bankers, who, to protect themselves, give notice on the invoices sent to customers and collect all accounts direct, and thereby they avoid travel and other expenses which we must assume in safeguarding our business.

USE OF SAFETY RAZORS.

Psychology in Why One Is Not So Apt to be Cut by Them.

The safety razor business is much oversold, and many of the newer ventures are dropping by the wayside. Those that remain in the race do so because of their merit rather than their price. Some razors of real merit labored under the mistake of being offered at such low prices that they were practically gifts, with the hope on the part of the manufacturer that the accruing sale of the blades would recoup them for the loss on the razor.

In each instance the scheme was a signal failure, because the public instinctively felt or believed that the exceedingly low price carried with it a confession of inferiority. Despite the ingenious and countless advertisements, like hotels and a certain children's food, they are really best "advertised by their loving friends." A man who has one that he likes usually tells all his friends about it, and the test of experience is usually the best encomium.

The principal trouble comes from the blades, for, despite the utmost care in manufacture and inspection, some imperfect and soft blades will occasionally get through and give the razor a bad name. The success of the safety has been so great that it has reduced the business in old-style razors to a mere shadow of its former self. Curiously enough, this success is based upon the psychological problem that comparatively few men use the old-style razor because they lack confidence and are afraid of cutting themselves. Whereas, while you can easily cut yourself with the safety, you start out with the assurance that you cannot, and consequently rarely do.

AT FALL RIVER MILLS.

The Wider Goods Are Most Favored and Sell in Fair Volume.

FALL RIVER, July 31.—The comparative quiet which has endured for the last several weeks was in evidence this week in the matter of sales of cotton goods in the New England markets. Wide and medium wide goods continue to hold the major attention of buyers, and they have sold in fair volume. It is an occasion of much comment and concern that the mills of New England, especially those in Fall River and New Bedford, continue to run in full, with demand for goods very quiet.

When it is considered that the normal weekly output of the cotton mills of Fall River alone amounts to approximately 260,000 pieces, the question arises of what becomes of the balance left over after the weekly sales are executed. The accumulation in the warehouses of some of the mills must be large on some lines, while on others the surplus is small.

For the last few weeks mills have been reluctant sellers on long-time contracts, and this week was no exception. Manufacturers have been able to do a comfortable business on spots and nearby deliveries. Mills making fine fancies continue to do a fair business, and it is a known fact that these concerns have done a profitable one. Some of these mills could secure more business if they were in a position to guarantee deliveries, but they are so well sold up for the balance of the year that new business is out of the question.

Medium count mills making fancies report that they are doing a good business, but their profits are not so large as those made by fine-goods mills. The cotton yarn markets are not doing a large business. Cotton has ruled comparatively low during the week. The weekly sales of printcloths are about 125,000 pieces, of which about 40,000 pieces are spots.

American Packing Satisfactory.

American packing has proved very satisfactory, according to Consul General George E. Anderson at Hongkong, China, in the shipment of window and plate glass imported into South China. These imports followed the establishment of connections with American manufacturers after the supply of Belgian glass was shut off by the war. The loss through breakage has been very small, and this is a matter of gratification to the importers in view of the fact that American glass is higher in price than the Belgian material.

HAY AND HARDWARE.

How the Yield of the One Affects the Sales of the Other.

Hay is one of the great and important crops of the country, not so much because of its money value to the producers, for comparatively little of it is sold, but because it means that the farmer is raising cheap food for his live stock instead of having to buy it at a high price as in bad years.

It also affects the hardware business more directly than any other line. In years of bountiful yields, as in this season, there is a great demand for all manner of hay tools for cutting and stacking the hay and stowing it in barns—for carriers, hay forks, pulleys, and the like; later on, for hay knives.

If the crop be generally good in all sections there is but little call for bales and baling wire since but little of the hay is baled and shipped. But, if the crop be spotted and some sections have none, then the demand for these items keeps the factories running full time. In years of great yields of hay, which are generally wet years, there is but light sale for corn knives, for such years are likewise seasons of large yields of corn, and corn is not cut since forage is abundant. In dry years when the hay crop is short, corn is cut early for fodder and the demand for corn knives exceeds the supply.

much use of asphyxiating gases. After numerous desperate bayonet actions the Germans succeeded in making a little progress in the Kmanka-Jabine front.

South of the Oje River the enemy also succeeded in capturing our line of trenches, but afterward by bayonet attacks we drove him back toward his original positions. The fighting was very bloody and the enemy suffered severe losses. In the course of the counter-attacks we made 1,000 prisoners and took an enemy battery.

On some sectors of the Narew front the enemy in the last few days has engaged for the first time fresh troops.

To the left of the Vistula and on the Blonie-Nadarzyn front there was rifle firing. On the right bank of the Vistula Saturday morning we fought the Germans, who crossed on the old front of Matzievitze-Loblinitse, in a battle in which both sides were alternately the aggressors. We repulsed the enemy in an attack near Gniewoszew, in the Ivangorod region.

Between the Vistula and the Bug Saturday evening the enemy delivered vigorous but barren attacks on our positions between the River Wieprz and in the district of Relovetz.

Between Chelm and the Bug our troops under the pressure of numerically superior enemy forces fell back somewhat to the north after desperate fighting. There is no change in the Bug, Zlota Lipa, and Dniester regions.

An earlier bulletin read as follows:

The Germans continue to transport troops to our front. Prisoners confirm the first appearance on our front of the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-eighth Divisions of German infantry which participated in battle on Thursday last. They had just arrived from the western front.

Teutonic Versions of Success.

BERLIN, Aug. 1, (via London.)—The War Office today issued the following:

In the eastern war theatre, north of the Niemen, there have been local actions. Northeast of Rozan we have made further progress; the enemy counter-attacks have been repulsed.

In the month of July, between the Pilica River and the Baltic, we captured 95,023 Russians, 41 guns, among them 2 heavy pieces; 9 mine-throwing howitzers, and 230 machine guns.

In the southeastern war theatre our troops who advanced across the Vistula north of Ivangorod repulsed heavy enemy counter-attacks. Pursuing the Russians, we conquered the heights near Podzamcze, capturing more than 1,000 prisoners. Between the Upper Vistula and the Bug the enemy again offered resistance.

In the course of the day the German troops ejected the enemy from positions near Kurow, east of Novo Alexandria, south of Leczna, southwest and south of Chelm and southwest of Dubienka. Consequently, the enemy continued his retreat on both banks of the Bug and on the front between the Bug and south of Leczna. We have already passed through Chelm in pursuit of the enemy.

In the southeastern war theatre the German troops captured in the month of July 305 officers, 7,571 men, 10 guns, and 126 machine guns.

VIENNA, Aug. 1, (via London.)—The following official communication from General Headquarters was issued today:

Between the Vistula and the Bug heavy fighting again broke out yesterday at numerous points. Our allies repulsed the enemy southwest of Dubienka, south of Chelm and south of Leczno.

Our troops repulsed strong counter-attacks north of Lublin, delivered an attack near Kurow, and stormed, together with a German division, under Archduke Joseph Ferdinand, two hostile lines lying one behind the other. Austro-Hungarian troops forced their way to Novo Alexandria.

While here and on the east bank of the Vistula and near Lublin the enemy is still offering resistance, he continues since this morning to retreat further east in the sector to the Bug. In pursuit German regiments passed through Chelm this forenoon.

In East Galicia the situation is unchanged.

The troops under the Austro-Hungarian supreme command captured in July 527 Russian officers, 126,311 men, 16 cannon, and 202 machine guns.

PETROGRAD IS UNEASY.

Still Fear for Czar's Troops, Battling as They Fall Back.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 1, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—The retirement of the Russian armies is now being executed along that line where Russia was supposed to be strongest and the Germans weakest by reason of imperfect communications, namely, the Lublin-Chelm front. This fact opens a vista of suggestion which perhaps had better be left to the imagination.

Russia is still drawing the German forces away from the French front, a fact which speaks eloquently of the Russian method employed in this coalition war. The process of decimating the invading German forces is evidently continuing satisfactorily, and in view of this, the main object of the present war, the loss of mere space is to Russia less than nothing, since time thereby is gained.

The general feeling in higher circles here was expressed to me yesterday in the following words:

"I shall not feel perfectly comfortable until our armies have withdrawn from Warsaw and taken up their positions on our real lines of defense."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 1, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—On the right bank of the Narew the Germans have halted, twenty-eight miles from Warsaw, and cannot proceed further until they have reduced the fortress of Novo Georgievsk.

The stubborn defensive of the Russians maintains the position near Warsaw unchanged. The German attacks at Rozan have been unsuccessful, and other attempts west and southwest of Blonie have also been repulsed, while on the right bank of the Vistula the Germans have been dislodged from the forests and driven on the islands and shallow parts of the river. The Russians, still vigorous, have inflicted such losses on their foes that they have been unable to interfere with the prearranged falling back on the front of the Vistula and the Bug.

This staleness of the best German troops of General von Mackensen's army is due to his dressing during the past month, when the Russians found themselves faced with 300 machine guns to every thousand men. They drove the Germans from three and even four lines of trenches, but found in their rear another array of field guns waiting them, besides hundreds of guns concealed among the trees and others buried in the ground.

Half of von Mackensen's troops pressed ahead, lightly clad, carrying only reserve rations and sleeping little for two or three days. The other half were held in reserve to take their places. These men had plenty of cognac and ether water in front of the trenches.

The Empress has sent a great quantity of linen, sacred icons and respirators to the garrisons holding the fortresses of Novo Georgievsk, Ivangorod, Kovno and Ossowetz.

SAY LUBLIN COST 70,000 MEN.

Great Losses Being Inflicted on Austro-Germans by Russians.

"The capture of Lublin cost General Woyrsch 70,000 men in killed, wounded and prisoners. Four miles north of Lublin the Russians are fighting fiercely, disputing every foot of ground while covering their retreat.

"In an advance of seven miles with seven army corps Field Marshal von Mackensen lost 65,000 men.

"The army massed from Lowicz to Ostrowiec has begun an advance upon Ivangorod and Novo Alexandria, the evacuation of which was commenced by the Russians Friday night, according to the Germans.

"The Germans have dispatched more than 100 trainloads of ammunition from Radom and Lodz toward Warsaw since July 23.

"The Russians who attacked south of Przasnysz killed 5,000; wounded 8,000 and took prisoner 1,300 of the Eighth German Army Corps"

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 2.—The Daily Chronicle says that the official casualty lists issued by the German War Office show that during May and June, when General Mackensen fought his way from the Dunajetz to the San, some thirty-five of his best infantry battalions lost on an average two-fifths of their strength.

BRITISH REGAIN PART OF LINES AT HOOGE

Returned to the Fight After Being Driven Back by Use of Fire Projectors.

FREQUENT AIR BATTLES

French Fliers Attack Two Aviators' Camps and the Germans One—The Official Statements.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—An official statement given out here tonight tells of the effort, partly successful, of the British troops to regain the trenches near Hooge, east of Ypres, which the Germans won from them by the use of fire projectors. Last night, the report says, the Germans attacked again on the same front, but were repulsed. The official communication given out in Berlin today says a British attack in this area collapsed.

German airmen have begun to meet the frequent air raids of the French, and today's Berlin report shows great activity. The Germans made a raid on the French flying grounds near Nancy, but the Paris report says the bombs "caused neither losses nor damage." The French attacked aviation camps at Douai, northeast of Arras, and at Dolheim, in Luxemburg. Bombs were also dropped on a military train at Château-Salins, in Lorraine, where a German air fleet attacked the invaders.

The following is the official communication issued tonight by the British War Office:

Further fighting on July 30, after the first German attack on our trenches near Hooge, reported in our communication of that date, resulted in the recapture by us of a portion of the lost trenches west of the village.

Yesterday's action was chiefly confined to the artillery, but last night we successfuily repulsed two further infantry attacks.

There has been no infantry action today.

The official statement from German General Headquarters is as follows:

A British attack against our new positions near Hooge completely collapsed. Night attacks by the French against Souchez also failed.

In the Argonne there has been a heavy artillery duel. Late yesterday evening our positions on Reich-Ackerkopf, in the Vosges, were attacked. The enemy was repulsed.

Great aerial activity was continued yesterday. The British flying ground at St. Pol, near Dunkirk, was attacked, thirty bombs being dropped.

The German aerodrome near Douai was unsuccessfully bombarded by a hostile air squadron. Here one of our battle aeroplanes shot down an enemy aeroplane.

On the French flying ground near Nancy early this morning 103 bombs were dropped. Eighteen hits were observed on the tents. The enemy machines, which ascended for defense, could not prevent the attack.

Six German aeroplanes attacked fifteen French machines over Chateau-Salins (Lorraine), and during the forty-five minutes of fighting several of the hostile machines were forced to land. When enemy reinforcements came up our airmen retreated without loss.

To the north of Saargemund a French aeroplane was forced to descend, the occupants being captured.

In the fighting in the Argonne between June 20 and July 20 we captured 125 officers, 6,610 men, 52 machine guns and a great quantity of war material.

This official communication was issued by the French War Office tonight:

An artillery action of medium intensity has occurred in Artois and in the valley of the Aisne. It was more violent to the northwest of Rheims, in the region of the Luxembourg farm, between Cauroy and Loivre, and in the Western Argonne, in the region of Fontaine-aux-Charmes and Hill 213.

Between the Meuse and the Moselle, in the region of La Haye, a German battalion, surprised while assembling in the village of Vilcey-sur-Trey, was subjected to a rapid and very efficacious fire from several of our batteries.

Pont-à-Mousson and the village of Maidières have been bombarded, but the damage was insignificant.

German aeroplanes dropped on the plateau of Maxeville, near Nancy, about twenty bombs, which caused neither losses nor damage.

The afternoon announcement given out in Paris today says:

In the region of Artois, around Souchez, some German attempts to attack with hand grenades were repulsed easily.

In Alsace, in the middle of the night, the enemy attacked without success our positions at Schatzmannele and at Reich-Ackerkopf, suffering heavy losses.

On the rest of the front there was no incident of importance to report.

During the day of July 31 our aeroplanes threw thirty shells on the aviation camp at Dalheim, and also six shells on a military train near Château-Salins.

GERMANS SHOOT FIRE FROM A NEW DEVICE

Carried on the Back and Projects a Long Flame on Trenches—The Fight at Hooge.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 2.—The correspondent of The Morning Post at British headquarters sends the following description of the German "fire projector" attack on the British trenches at Hooge:

"At 3:30 o'clock on the morning of the 30th the German attack began. A tremendous fire was concentrated from three sides upon the Hooge salient. There was a direct fire of five-inch and field guns against our parapet in addition to high-explosive shells of longer range, and a rain of every sort of bomb from trench mortars. After over half an hour of this the enemy crept toward our battered parapets by saps they had carried forward, and began to play upon what was left of the defenders with fire projectors.

"The fire projector is carried strapped to the back exactly as is a fire extinguisher, and apparently contains some inflammable oil under pressure, which, when the cock is opened, projects a long, flaming jet.

"Weakened by the tremendous shelling they had undergone, and with defenses badly knocked about, the troops holding the salient had to relinquish the trenches on the north side of the road, and fell back from the ridge.

"Owing to delays inseparable from the situation, it was impossible to get a counter attack into shape before 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Then the advance was made partly under cover of an irregular patch of forest known as the Quinave Wood, which offered the only concealment, but from the ridge east of Hooge, German guns swept the wood. The whole place looked as though it had been thrashed with a flail of thunderbolts, yet the troops held on to it, and even succeeded with the greatest gallantry in advancing to the edge of it facing the enemy, which was found, in German fashion, to be completely swept by machine gun crossfire, so advance beyond it was almost certain death. None the less, the advance was repeatedly attempted, and small isolated parties of officers and men succeeded in getting right up to the barbed wire in front of the enemy's trenches. We were in the end obliged to be content with holding the line of the wood to which the troops had clung with such determination."

Text of Austrian Protest on Munition Exports

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The Embassy of Austria-Hungary today gave out the first official translation of the text of the note addressed by that Government to the United States with respect to the shipment of arms and ammunition from this country to the Allies. The embassy stated that the translation was "the first uncensored text to be made public in the United States." The note reads:

"The far-reaching effects resulting from the fact that a very extensive trade in war supplies has been going on for some time between the United States and Great Britain and her allies, while Austria-Hungary and Germany have been entirely shut off from the American market, have from the first attracted the most earnest attention of the Imperial and Royal Government. If the undersigned permits himself to take part in the discussion of a question which hitherto has been brought to the attention of the Washington Cabinet by the Imperial German Government only, he merely follows the dictates of unavoidable duty of protecting the interests intrusted to him from further grave injury growing out of the situation affecting Germany and Austria-Hungary equally.

"The Imperial and Royal Government is convinced that the attitude of the United States Government in this matter originates from no other intention than the maintenance of the strictest neutrality and the observance to the letter of all the stipulations of the international agreements involved, but the question arises as to whether the conditions, as they have developed in the course of the war, certainly quite independently of the will of the United States Government, are not such that the very intention of the Washington Cabinet is defeated—indeed, that exactly the opposite effect is produced. If this question be answered in the affirmative—and, according to the opinion of the Imperial and Royal Government this cannot be doubted—then another question automatically follows, namely, whether it is not possible, indeed advisable, to take measures to provide full effectiveness to the wish of the Government of the United States to assume an attitude of strict fairness toward both belligerent parties. The Imperial and Royal Government does not hesitate to answer this question also in the affirmative, without qualification.

Cites Hague Requirements.

"It certainly has not escaped the attention of the American Government, which has co-operated in the work of The Hague in such a prominent manner, that the spirit and the letter of the fragmentary stipulations of the treaties in question are not entirely coextensive.

"If one takes into consideration the genesis of Article 7 of the Fifth and Thirteenth conventions respectively, upon which the Government of the United States apparently rests the present case, and the wording of which, as will not be denied, offers a formal basis for the toleration of the trade in war materials as carried on at present by the United States, it is not necessary to point out—in order to realize the true spirit and range of this stipulation, which incidentally seems to have been modified already by prohibiting the delivery of warships and certain supplies for warships of belligerent countries—that the various rights as conceded to neutral countries, in the spirit of the preamble of the last-named convention, are limited by the requirements of neutrality in correspondence with the accepted principles of international law. According to all the authorities on international law, who have especially dealt with the questions which here arise, the neutral Government is not permitted to allow unhindered trade in contraband of war if this trade assumes such character and proportions that the country's neutrality is thereby impaired.

"In judging the admissibility of the trade in contraband of war, one can use as a basis any one of the various criteria established by law, and arrive, according to each, at the conclusion that the export of war materials from the United States as it is carried on cannot be made to accord with the requirements of neutrality. It is not a question as to whether the branch of American industry occupied with the production of war material shall be protected in order that its export, as it has been carried on in peace times, may suffer no impairment.

"Furthermore, this industry has experienced an unexpected increase because of the war. In order to manufacture the immense amount of weapons, munitions and other war material of all kinds which Great Britain and her allies have ordered in the United States of America in the course of the last month, it required not only the full utilization and adaptation of existing plants, but the creation of new factories, as well as the diversion of large numbers of workmen from all branches of trade—in short, a widespread change in the economic life of the country. The right of the American Government can from no quarter be disputed to decree an embargo on this obviously enormous export of war material which is notoriously for the exclusive benefit of one of the belligerent parties.

Urges an Embargo Act.

"The United States Government could meet with no objection if it were to avail itself of its competency, even if it took recourse to the passage of a law in accordance with its Constitution. Even if it proved correct in principle that a neutral State may not change the law in force within its jurisdiction concerning its attitude toward belligerents during the war, there is, however, an exception to the principle, as is clearly shown in the preamble of the thirteenth Hague Convention: '. . . where experience has shown the necessity for such change for the protection of the rights of that power.'

"This case arises for the United States Government by the mere fact that Austria-Hungary as well as Germany are cut off from any commercial intercourse with the United States without the existence of a legal ground—a legally effective blockade.

"To the possible objection that although American industry is perfectly willing to supply Austria-Hungary and Germany as well as Great Britain and her Allies, the United States are not able to carry on trade in consequence of the war situation. It may well be mentioned that the United States Government is without doubt in a position to remedy the above described condition. It would be entirely sufficient to hold out to the adversaries of Austria-Hungary and Germany the inhibition of the export of foodstuffs and raw materials if the legitimate trade in these articles between the Union and the two central powers is not permitted.

"If the Washington Cabinet could find itself prepared to act in this direction, it would not only follow the tradition always upheld in the United States to safeguard the freedom of the seas, but it would also offer the great service of defeating the criminal endeavor of the enemies of Austria-Hungary and Germany to enlist starvation as an ally.

"The Imperial and Royal Government, in the spirit of the excellent relations which have never ceased to exist between the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and the United States of America, and in the name of sincere friendship, permits itself to make an appeal to the Government of the Union to submit to careful examination the point of view hereinbefore taken in this most important question and consider the statements given herewith. The revision of the present attitude of the Government of the Union to agree with the views proffered by the Imperial and Royal Government would not only be—according to the conviction of the Imperial and Royal Government—within the scope of the rights and duties of a neutral Govment, but also in the direction of those principles prompted by humanity and the love of peace which the United States of America has ever written upon her banner.

"The undersigned has the honor, &c.

"BURIAN."

RUMANIA MAKES NEW CONDITIONS

To Join Russia if She Reattacks Bukowina and Munitions Arrive, It Is Said.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 1, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—In well-informed circles it is declared that the entry into the war of Rumania on the side of the entente powers is dependent on a renewal of the Russian offensive in Bukowina and the arrival of munitions already ordered by this country from the Allies.

The action of the Government in regard to intervention will not, it is asserted, be delayed by any considerations as to the present situation in Galicia and Poland.

'GERMAN DEVILS NEVER SLEEP'

Story of Young British Soldier in France Told in Letter.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Aug. 1.—Mrs. Daniel J. Maloney of Orange has received a letter from her nephew, L. Keith Smith, who is with the British Army at the front in France. He writes that "Some of the German devils never sleep," that they shell the trenches at night and the reserve positions in the daytime, depriving the soldiers on the other side for long stretches of any chance to rest.

A thrilling experience of his company is described by the young soldier, who with a number of others was directed to take up a reserve position in a deserted farmhouse.

"We started to make ourselves comfortable," wrote Smith. "We finally got settled down and were very quiet for the first day and night. Early next morning the sentry alarmed us by saying the Germans were shelling the house. This was about 4 o'clock. Some of those devils never sleep. It didn't take us long to move out. About a dozen shells were sent over the house without striking. They finally gave it up as a bad job.

"We were busy digging a trench when all at once a machine gun was trained on us. The bullets rattled on the brick of that old farmhouse like hail on a window pane. The devils had either seen us working or had heard us. It did not take us long to get inside the house, and, as it was none too safe inside, we all got in one corner. It is a wonder that we all escaped with our lives. One of the men was shot in the back as he was diving into the house. He was the last one in.

"It was night, so we placed our oilskins over the windows, lighted a piece of candle, and did our best to care for the wounded man. We hid the light so the Germans would not see it. We spent another ten days in that death trap, but we were not caught outside again."

CALLS WAR FRUITION OF GERMANY'S PLANS

"Weltpolitik" Idea Was Born Aboard Royal Yacht in 1897, Says Hanotaux.

15 YEARS OF PREPARATION

Huge War Machine and Exploitation of "Kultur" as Proofs—Doomed to Abyss in One More Year.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—Under the caption, "After One Year," Gabriel Hanotaux, ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs, in The Figaro today reviews the causes of the war and the "historical stages leading Germany logically to cast the die for the gigantic conflict in an attempt to impose domination on the world.

"Germany prepared for this war," says M. Hanotaux, "with a long hand as an enterprise of universal domination. Once ready she chose her hour and dragged along her accomplice, Austria-Hungary, and her other accomplice, Turkey. Determined to stop at nothing, the day when it became necessary to sacrifice the world's peace and joy to her material prosperity and her pride, Germany willed war."

This is proved by historic documents, M. Hanotaux says, and he reviews the growth of the German "weltpolitik" idea, born at a meeting aboard the Hohenzollern yacht in 1897, recounted in Chancellor von Buelow's book and from which came the motto, "Our Future Is on the Seas," through fifteen years of military and naval preparation to 1912, when "the work of preparation was accomplished and Germany was ready to profit from the first favorable circumstance."

To these historic evidences of Germany's intentions, M. Hanotaux offers what he terms further material and moral proofs of Germany's "fell purpose."

Armed to the Teeth.

"From the material viewpoint," he says, "the farsighted and formidable preparations of the twin empires with a view to war cannot be denied. With the most savage resolution, in absolute secrecy, with fists clenched and lips closed, two empires armed to the teeth, constructed monstrous cannon, filled arsenals with arms and ammunition and conceived the prodigious mechanism for adapting the arts of peace to the arts of war. The whole country was regulated like a barracks. Every slightest resource was catalogued, that nothing might be lost, and all with the purpose of offensive action. There were inventoried in advance the means of defense exploitable and the riches of the countries coveted. Universal espionage prepared the way for world conquest."

As moral proofs of Germany's purpose M. Hanotaux cites the growth of the conviction in Germany that a successful conquest is its own full justification and that "the German people are the chosen people, the predestined people in the religious, philosophic and scientific sense of the word; that everything in the world untouched by German influence must remain retrograde and inferior." M. Hanotaux adds:

"The Germans are fighting for the enslavement, not the liberation, of the world. Were things not in their conclusions as in their origin these prodigious events would be unmeaning, but never since the birth of the world have there been events more significant.

"We have gone about our task and know what that task is. France, especially, is in her traditional rôle, nor will she let herself be turned aside. She struggles for ideals which are hers. Justice is greater than force; right protects the weak; every man and every people have a right to dispose of their own. These mottoes are opposed to those of Germany.

France Did Not Bargain.

"I have lately reread the 'Yellow Book,' and have been struck by the fact that not once during the course of the negotiations preceding the war did France put forward the slightest claim or offer any bargain whatsoever. Not once did she say: 'What guarantees will you give? What will be my share?' Other powers talked; France kept silence. It can be said that events passed without her participation. She only bore their burdens. The light has shone on two opposing systems. History has chosen. That is the first result of the year of war.

"German theories, German doctrines, and German morality are irreparably lost. They appear now for what they are, and themselves have demonstrated what they are—frightful materialistic heresies.

"First of all, we have saved the truth. Now it is the turn of justice and of right. Already Germany, by the failure of her campaign of conquest, overwhelmed by the immense losses which are draining her, conscious of the utter ruin which grips her, seeks to escape the consequences of her own theories. She would be content with the white peace of a stalemate—counting herself well off to be able to preserve herself for the future. But not even this negative result will she obtain. The two theories of life are radically opposed. One or the other must succumb. Following in the wake of the German doctrine, German force now likewise is on the decline. One more effort, though it require another year, and both will be cast into the abyss."

FRENCH CONFIDENCE HIGH.

Reviews of Year's Events Shows Nation's Courage Unabated.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—To commemorate the anniversary of the beginning of the war, the papers publish special editions. The Temps has a three-page supplement detailing the daily events of the war. The Journal des Débats presents a series of articles on the military, financial, moral and diplomatic situations. The tone is optimistic throughout but honest and devoid of bombast or exaggeration, thus representing the national sentiment.

After a year of war France is calmly confident; she feels her soldiers are better than the Germans, man for man, and awaits the complete organization of her own and British munitions industries. She realizes that the Allies' strength is continually increasing, while Germany has passed the zenith. It is undeniable that the Russian reverses have caused disappointment, but they have not destroyed confidence in ultimate Russian success.

A few croakers fear the return of the German wave when they hold the line of the Vistula, but the magnificent work of the artillery—the heavy artillery now as efficient and adequate as the famous seventy-fives—promises a strong resistance.

To sum up France has suffered heavily, but the losses have been repaired and have not weakened the public confidence. The army and the nation trust the leaders, and the Allies were never stronger, more united or more confident of ultimate success.

Clemenceau says apropos of the question of parliamentary control: "M. Viviani and M. Millerand have never ceased to oppose the necessary and legitimate operation of control in a thousand ways, though taking care to talk eloquently about fundamental principles of government. I will return to this subject later. If forced to it, I will surely find some means of showing that all the best things done in the administration of the war are solely due to parliamentary control."

This question, which the two Ministers are at loggerheads with the mass of Parliament is the sole rift in the lute of the French union. The country as a whole does not realize the seriousness of the situation and attaches little importance to the doings of Parliament.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—In a review of the first year of the war, the Petit Parisien quotes M. Viviani, the Premier, as follows:

"One year has rolled away since the day when, on a nation devoted to peace, which, with its allies, had made every effort to maintain peace, Germany and Austria loosed war. Never have the virtues of our race appeared nobler and more solid. Still other virtues, which previously had not been attributed to us, have evoked the admiration of the world. By these virtues, enthusiasm, endurance, patience and spirit—victory of a right is assured our heroic army and its chiefs.

"This confident, laborious people is continuing its labors while its sons rush into furious conflict. In a word, all France is united and resolved. She is exalted to heights yet unattained in history. Though the test be prolonged our soul remains unshaken."

The Petit Parisien quotes M. Ribot, Minister of Finance, as saying:

"After a year of war, when the soldiers of the whole population of France have given proofs of the same heroic courage, some facing death and others bearing griefs with admirable abnegation and simplicity, the country more than ever has faith in victory, and is resolved to do its full duty, to accept every suffering and every sacrifice to defend its existence and assure the triumph of liberty."

From M. Delcasse, Minister of Foreign Affairs, the paper received this statement:

"For the Allies, to will is to do. They will."

MONARCHS RIVALS IN POLAND OFFERS

concluding, "sets us a brilliant example on how to fulfill our duty to the country. It is now our duty to work day and night to supply this army with everything which it needs, but to do that it is necessary to make many changes. We will fight until the complete ruin of the enemy is accomplished."

Sergius Sazonoff, the Foreign Minister, who followed M. Rodzianko, said there had been few changes in international relations since his last address to the Duma. Then combined action by the separate States had not been well organized, but now the forces of each State were being employed to the best advantage in striving for a common end.

Italy's Example to Neutrals.

M. Sazonoff also referred, amid cheering, to the participation in the war of Italy.

"These people," he said, "long have wished to free their fellow-countrymen from the foreign yoke. If the example of Italy had been followed by the other States it would have contributed to the speedy conclusion of the war. Nevertheless, the time for supreme decisions has not passed, and it is to be hoped that advantage will be taken of the time which still remains by those neutrals who cannot otherwise find a solution for their national problems.

"Recently there has been much talk of the state of mind of Sweden. Our sincere desire to maintain with her the best of neighborly relations is too well known to need any confirmation from me. At the same time we are aware of the inevitable embarrassments caused to Swedish commerce through that country being situated in the midst of the belligerents. I content myself with placing on record the correctness with which the Swedish Government maintains its neutrality while safeguarding its national interests.

"The Anglo-Swedish negotiations which are proceeding at Stockholm, while they are confined to business matters, have given proof of the undoubted desire on both sides to find a basis for agreement, and we sincerely home a successful conclusion will soon be reached."

Referring to the German methods of waging warfare, M. Sazonoff said the Germans had stopped "neither at the wholesale poisoning of our soldiers nor at the extermination of women, children, and peaceful citizens, whose cries could not fail to arouse sentiments of just repugnance in neutral countries."

"These feelings," the Foreign Minister continued, "spread beyond the ocean to the United States, where humanitarian feelings revolted against such horrible occurrences as the sinking of the Lusitania, which cost so many American lives. This attack, which has no parallel for cruelty or absurdity, is an ineffaceable blot on the name of Germany.

"It is difficult to say whether more energetic measures will follow President Wilson's note to the German Government, but it is already evident that American public opinion is disgusted at Germany's action, in spite of the efforts which Germany is making to gain American sympathy."

Speaking of the situation on the Gallipoli Peninsula, M. Sazonoff said:

Sees Victory Over Turkey Near.

"The Allies, with unshakable tenacity, see the approach of the longed-for moment when a close and direct bond will be established between us. The Turks, scenting the approaching storm, have overwhelmed the Christian peoples still in their power with exceptional cruelty. The Armenians are suffering unheard-of persecutions, which, however, have not broken their spirit, for the Armenian volunteers are fighting with us.

"Persecutions no less terrible suffered by the local Greek populations cannot but excite the indignation of the Hellenic people and government. The latter will have to solve the question whether it is capable of coming to the assistance of its co-religionists in Asia Minor without joining the powers who are fighting for right and justice. I do not doubt that in other countries, still neutral, the governments will be found fully in accord with their aspirations, their vital interests and their past.

"I must refer particularly to the pressure which Rumania has undergone at the hands of Austro-German agents. Despite their efforts the Rumanian Government is resisting temptation, and we continue with that country relations of friendship, the strengthening and development of which are objects of our reciprocal care."

M. Sazonoff concluded with a reference to "the miracles of bravery and devotion" of which Serbia had given proof.

Freedom for All Races Promised.

M. Goremykin, the Premier, after speaking of the enormous sacrifices entailed by the war, said:

"The Government, being firmly resolved to make all these sacrifices, has sent for you to explain the real state of things and consult you regarding the means for vanquishing the enemy. The war has shown that we are not sufficiently prepared in comparison with the enemy. In order to overcome him the whole development of our national forces is requisite.

"This is not the time to set forth the program for the amelioration of the internal life of Russia in time of peace, which will be realized with your assistance; but I should like to touch upon one question, that of Poland, which cannot evidently be realized in full until after the war.

"In these days the Polish people should know that their organization was definitely and irrevocably decided upon by the manifesto of the Grand Duke, the Commander in Chief of the Army, at the outbreak of the war. The Polish people, chivalrous, noble, and faithful, deserve unlimited sympathy and respect. The Emperor has charged me to declare to you that his Majesty has ordered the Cabinet to elaborate bills granting Poland, after the war, the right to organize freely its national, social, and economic life on a basis of autonomy under the sceptre of the Emperor of Russia.

"Together with the Poles, the other nationalities of our great and immense Russia have exhibited fidelity to the mother country. Accordingly, our home policy should be permeated by the principle of impartiality and benevolence for all faithful Russian citizens, without regard to distinction of nationality, creed or tongue.

"Let us unite in the joint effort to which the Monarch has summoned us. The Government is firmly convinced that sooner or later victory will be ours, and this faith is shared by the whole of Russia. Let us unite in one single program—that of victory."

The War Minister, M. Polivanoff, said:

"At this moment the enemy is concentrating enormous forces against Russia and is successively enveloping the territory and military districts of Warsaw, the strategic contour of which has always been the weak point of our western frontier.

"Under the circumstances we shall perhaps yield to the enemy a portion of this region, falling back on positions where our army will prepare for a resumption of the offensive.

"All's well that ends well; 1812 was proof of that. We shall today perhaps give up Warsaw, as then we gave up Moscow, in order to insure a final victory."

NOT TOLD OF EVACUATION.

Suggestion That Warsaw Is to be "Stormed" for the Berlin Public.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 2.—The Daily News publishes the following from its Rotterdam correspondent:

"No German paper has yet been allowed to state that Warsaw has been evacuated or that it was the intention of the Russian higher command to leave the Polish capital.

"Nothing less than the capture of the city by storm will really suit the Berlin public taste. This consummation, therefore, is apparently being deliberately worked by the headquarters staff, and will be followed by the state entry of the Kaiser into the town."

The advantages of a Trust Company over an individual executor

1. Estates often shrink alarmingly when left in the hands of individual executors—not through lack of honesty, but through lack of specialized experience. A Trust Company would not stay long in business if it operated without a wide knowledge of investments, and business judgment of a high order.
2. The work of a Trust Company is carried on without interruption through illness or any other personal incapacity.
3. The Trust Company is always there at a given address. It is never absent when business is to be discussed.
4. The Trust Company has on its own premises vaults and other protective safeguards.
5. The Trust Company has a thoroughly organized accounting department. This assures systematic, business-like accounting on all transactions it handles.

EUROPE'S GAY SET FINDS ONE HAVEN

NEWEST GOWNS ARE WORN

Like Other Days at Deauville and Monte Carlo—Liberal Russian Pays $200 to Have His Hair Cut.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—The remnants of European unmobilized fashionables with a few expatriates from the New World are now gathered at Evian-les-Bains on the heights overlooking Lake Geneva, and they are indulging in more extravagant revels, according to reports received in Paris from a reliable correspondent, than even when Monte Carlo, Deauville, Vichy and half a dozen other resorts rivaled each other in ante-bellum splendor. Though Evian is in French territory, it has become a semi-neutral zone by a special arrangement of the authorities, so that there are no wounded to spoil the gayety.

The leading hotels are crowded. All the famous demi-mondaines—except those "resting" in concentration camps—who formerly launched the Paris modes at the race courses and the Bois now dazzle Evian with the anticipation of forthcoming fashion openings. Among the visitors are a majority of the smartest women usually seen at Monte Carlo and Deauville.

One of the guests who is making for Evian one of the most successful seasons on record is Mme. Lise Radolin, considered the best-dressed woman in Paris, whose frocks, suits and hats are sustaining her reputation of preceding years. One of the glories of the Ritz, Armenonville and Auteuil, Mme. Radolin, with the famous Miles. Dartrix and Forzane, won the name of the three Graces at the Monte Carlo Casino a few years ago. Mme. Bertrand of Brussels and Paris was a rival in beauty and confections. The absence of the admiring crowds that used to throng around them is the only cloud on the horizon. The Evian townsfolk, whose men are at the front, do not seem to have a proper appreciation of the visitors' brilliance.

The season's note was struck at the outset by Baron Mantascheff, the Russian petroleum king, who summoned his coiffeur from Paris to cut his hair at a cost of 1,000 francs ($200). The rest of the large Russian colony do their utmost to follow Baron Mantascheff's lead, but a group of wealthy Argentineans challenge their supremacy in extravagance. Despite Government requisitions, almost all the guests have their own automobiles, and can make excursions to Switzerland's famous sports by arrangement with the Swiss authorities. The mornings are generally thus spent. Boating on the lake is also popular.

The women wear silk jersey sweater suits in mauve, gray and beige. The blouses have deep collars, edged with fur, with two bands of fur at the bottom of the sweater. The skirts are pleated. Others wear check skirts, with plain color sweaters. The hats are chiefly black or navy blue velvet, with beaded flowers. Splendid hand-crocheted antique beaded handbags are carried.

Afternoons there is music at the Casino Gardens, but the golf club on the mountainside is "the place" for tea. The dining rooms recall the zenith of the Deauville season at the Hotel Normandy. Among the gowns silver laces over white, black jet over black and steel beaded effects over silver gray are most worn. After dinner there is music in the Casino Gardens, trips to the Palais Royal, "The Revue of 1915" at the Casino Theatre following Gounod's opera, "Mireille."

Some of the best-known visitors are Mr. and Mrs. Biddle of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Carter of Milwaukee, Mr. and Mrs. R. Fratt of Brooklyn, Mr. and Mrs. Heidelbach of Paris, where he was formerly President of the American Chamber of Commerce; Mr. and Mrs. James Gordon Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. A. Kahn of Paris, Mr. and Mrs. Duryea of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Spaulding de Garmendia of Baltimore, Charles Kurzman of New York, Princess Ghika, Baroness von Zuylen and Mr. and Mme. Bouncordel of Paris. The majority of visitors express the intention of staying till the beginning of Autumn. As a well-known American expressed it: "At Evian you would never know there was a war."

GRANGERS OPPOSE ARMS EMBARGO PLAN

Force Peace Council to Change Front and Silence Denunciation of the Administration.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The efforts of German-Americans to have Labor's National Peace Council, in joint meeting at the Willard Hotel, with invited officers of the National Grange, declare itself in favor of an embargo on the exportation of arms, ended in failure this afternoon. A resolution to this effect, proposed by ex-Representative H. Robert Fowler of Illinois, General Counsel for the labor body, almost caused a riot in the meeting last night when the Grange delegates refused to support it. In an effort today to wipe out the memory of that division the meeting adopted unanimously a resolution in which the announcement was made to the Government in its various branches, executive, legislative, and judicial, that "we are here to stand by every patriotic act."

The meeting that brought forth this statement had a membership difficult to classify. It was called by Labor's National Peace Council, the mysterious organization which yesterday denied that it was financed by German money. State Masters of the National Grange were invited, and some of them attended the meeting, although they admitted that they knew little of its purposes. Others present represented the Teutonic Sons of America, the German-American Educational Propaganda, and other German societies. After the Grangers last night refused to agree to the munitions embargo resolution, an adjournment was taken until today. The Grangers had protested against the character of the resolution, and their feeling was reflected in a statement made after the meeting by Joseph A. Peckham, Master of the State Grange of Rhode Island, to W. J. Schultz, manager of the German-American Educational Propaganda Association.

Mr. Peckham said that the Grangers did not come to Washington to have carefully prepared resolutions with which they were not familiar "put over" on them.

At last night's stormy secret session there was bitter denunciation of the Administration, largely by the German delegates. The Grange members refused to indorse the criticism. In the resolution as finally adopted today there was no criticism of the Administration. The Council further pledged its support to any movement for peace. The resolution added that if the Federal Reserve Bank system was being used illegally to aid any belligerent, that practice should be stopped.

There were about thirty delegates at today's meeting, including the invited Grange Masters, but they referred to themselves as "we, the citizens of seventeen States here now assembled." The resolution said that the delegates represented "central bodies and the allied bodies of labor from thirty cities," with an aggregate membership of "at least 1,000,000." The resolution also laid claim to the support of the Grange "with 4,500,000 organized farmers."

GOVERNORS TO CONFER ON NATIONAL DEFENSE

Plans to Improve the Militia Will Be Discussed at Annual Meeting in Boston.

MADISON, Wis., Aug. 1.—National defense will be discussed by Governors of the various States at their annual conference in Boston, Aug. 24 to 26, according to the program announced today by M. G. Riley, Secretary of the Governors' conference. The meeting will have added significance by reason of the fact that several Adjutant Generals will participate in the discussion of plans for increasing the size and efficiency of the National Guard.

"The Mexican situation and the European war doubtless have caused many of the Governors to ponder their own and their States' responsibilities in relation to military preparedness," said Secretary Riley. "Each of the forty-eight Governors was consulted in the preparation of the program. Practically all asked that some phase of the efficiency of our citizen soldiery be discussed, indicating a keen interest in the problem now confronting the nation.

"Many of the Governors felt the time was ripe for uniformity of action in co-operating with the national Government for providing an adequate program for improving the national defense. A number of the Governors thought that if every young man is subject under the law to be called on for military duty, it is important that such training should be provided as will fit him to perform that service well."

The discussion will be opened by Governor James P. Fielder of New Jersey, who will read a paper on "The Relation of the State to the National Defense." Other speakers will include Governors Charles S. Whitman, New York; Frank B. Willis, Ohio; Edward F. Dunne, Illinois; Ernest Lister, Washington; W. S. Hammond, Minnesota, and former Governors William Hodges Mann of Virginia and Elias M. Ammons of Colorado.

Other subjects to be discussed at the conference are "The Executive Budget," economy and efficiency in the State, taxation, conservation, uniformity in the fundamentals of the Workmen's Compensation acts of the different States and duties and responsibilities of Governors in dealing with prisoners.

NEW WARSHIP CALLED VON HINDENBURG

Battle Cruiser Launched Yesterday Named After Field Marshal by Kaiser's Order.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 2.—According to a dispatch from Berlin, received by Reuter's Telegram Company by way of Amsterdam, the battle cruiser which has been known as Ersatz Hertha, and which was launched on Sunday at Wilhelmshaven, was named by order of the Emperor, Von Hindenburg.

This new battle cruiser is of 28,000 tons. She was laid down in July, 1913, and was to have been completed in 1916.

PEACE CAMPAIGN ABROAD.

League Plans Branches and Bars Peace-at-Any-Price Men.

Advocates of peace at any price are not to be permitted to have a prominent part in the affairs of the League to Enforce Peace, of which ex-President William H. Taft is the head, according to a statement yesterday from officials of the league announcing the preliminary movement for the organization of branches among the European powers.

The league, which was formed in Philadelphia on June 17, has opened negotiations with some of the European countries, the intention being to form branches among the belligerent powers and the neutral countries. To that end a Committee on Foreign Organization has been formed, with Theodore Marburg, former United States Ambassador to Belgium, as the Chairman. The committee has begun negotiations with a group of men in Great Britain, headed by Lord Bryce. The organization of the British branch is to be followed by organizations in France, Holland, and Italy.

"The fact that the Belgian Government is not in possession of Belgium," the league representative said yesterday, "will not stand in the way of the formation of a Belgian branch. Belgian leaders in France and England will be invited to form a branch of the league without waiting for the war to end. An effort will also be made to interest Germans in the purposes of the league with a view of forming a German branch.

"The present war and its problems are not within the scope of this organization's consideration. Its concern is with the future only. It looks to the time, after peace has been declared in Europe, when this country and the other great powers will enter into an alliance which shall tend to lessen the probability of wars."

The Executive Committee has been enlarged by the election of Myron T. Herrick, former Ambassador to France; David R. Francis, ex-Governor of Missouri; Dr. John Grier Hibben, President of Princeton University, and Dr. Frederick Lynch, Secretary of the Church Peace Union. These additional Vice Presidents have been elected: Senator Theodore E. Burton, Dr. Shailer Matthews, Miss Mary J. Woolley, Miss Jane Addams, Miss Mary Burnham, Miss Mabel Boardman, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mrs. Philip N. Moore, Mrs. J. Malcolm Forbes, and Mrs. Fanny Fern Andrews.

The league has accepted an offer of the cartoonist, C. R. Macauley, to draw a series of weekly cartoons dealing with the events of the day.

POPE'S PLEA FAVORED HERE.

Dr. Brann Expresses Gratification Over Peace Move.

Catholics in New York expressed gratification yesterday over Pope Benedict XV.'s peace proposals, saying the Pontiff possessed a moral influence probably not equaled by any other person in the world, and that the Church must always try to end the great war.

"The outlook is so desperate," said the Rev. Dr. Henry A. Brann of St. Agnes's Church, "because of the causes of the war. These causes are greed for land and for money. All wars have been desperate for the same causes. If England and the Allies win, and so-called German militarism be crushed, England will at once be compelled to grapple with Russia. The Pope must realize all this. Hence Catholics all over the world must rejoice to see him working to bring an end to the war, the sooner the better."

Asked if Irishmen in America, remembering Ireland's history, favor Germans as against the Allies, because of things they remember, Dr. Brann said he preferred not to answer, and then added:

"It is hard for some to forget. And then some history is not so very old."

"Catholics all over the world are saying prayers for peace," the Rev. Brann went on. "But peace will not come, I fear, until one side or the other is on its knees, completely crushed. Nations are at war because of their sins, and that is why the holy father of all others is fitted to deal with them. The sins have been of many kinds, and they extend back through the centuries. It is for the Church to stick to its task of working for peace, even if sin-filled nations do not heed.

"If Germany wins? Nothing will happen. Germany is to be trusted. And America has nothing to fear. You can say that Catholics of America and the world are praying for the efforts of the Pope for peace, and that those who understand the real condition of greed are praying that there may come such peace as will last, and not one that will lead at once to more war between present allies for control of the seas."

KAISER'S TREASURER SCOUTS STARVATION

Food Abounds in Germany, Says Helfferich, and Empire's Wealth Is Growing.

MORE WORK THAN WORKERS

Gold Reserve on Solid Footing and Securities Higher Than Those of Allies, He Asserts.

BERLIN, (via London,) Aug. 1.—Dr. Karl Helfferich, Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, has prepared for The Associated Press a signed statement on German economic and financial affairs as he views them at the end of the first year of war. His statement follows:

"The economic and financial features of the first year of the war are, in my opinion, the following:

"First—The British starvation war has failed. Once and for all it has been proved that our domestic production of foodstuffs, bread card system, and maximum prices assure even to the poorest the necessary supply of food and that at prices lower than prevailing in Great Britain.

"Second—Nor can we be 'starved out' in raw materials. The difficulties cast in the way of the importation of raw materials, in violation of international law, are unpleasant for us, but are not fatal. We have in our own country an ample supply of the most important raw materials—coal and iron—and of others we have on hand, unmanufactured or manufactured, great supplies which, with the economical employment thereof insured by our methods of organization, are virtually inexhaustible.

"Third—The spectre of unemployment has been banished. There is more work than workers. The war has proved itself to be a greater employer of labor than our export trade was.

"Fourth—So far as finances are concerned, Germany will carry the war through for an unlimited time. We produce in our own country practically everything needed for war. Thus expenditures for war purposes resolve themselves into savings. These again are at the Empire's disposition, as payments on the war loans and deposits are flowing into the banks and savings institutions more plentifully than in times of peace. The total of deposits today, after over $3,000,000,000 have been paid on war loans, is higher than at the outbreak of the war. The gold reserve of the Reichsbank has almost doubled since the war began. Notes and deposits in the Reichsbank covered by gold are 33½ per cent., as compared with 26.7 per cent. in the Bank of France, and 21.7 in the Bank of England.

"Fifth—The confidence of the German people in our financial strength is as unbounded as their confidence in our military superiority. After twelve months of war Imperial 3's are quoted at 70, which is eight points below the quotation in March, 1914; the minimum price of British consols, 65, is 11 per cent. below the quotation in March, 1914; 3 per cent. French rentes, at 69, are 19 per cent. below March, 1914.

"Work, skill, discipline, organization, economy, and last, but not least, the categorical imperative of patriotism have upheld Germany in the first year against world enemies, and will help us further to win the war.

"HELFFERICH."

THIRD GERMAN WAR LOAN.

Reported Announced for September —Further Materials Commandeered

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 1.—It is reported from Berlin that Dr. Helfferich, Imperial Secretary for Finance, has announced the issue of a third German war loan for the middle of September.

By order of the Chief Commander of the Province of Brandenburg, all copper, brass, and nickel held by manufacturers and dealers has been seized. Even kitchen furniture in private households has been reserved for the use of the State. Rubber, gutta percha, and asbestos also have been commandeered for military purposes.

STRICTER BRITISH PASSPORT RULES

Members of American Crews Arriving at Liverpool Now Must Have Nationality Papers.

An order providing for stricter passport regulations for persons arriving at Liverpool from abroad was received here yesterday by cable. In future members of the crews of all American ships arriving at Liverpool must be provided with individual passports. If American the passport can be obtained at Washington from the State Department at a cost of $2. Britishers may get emergency certificates from the Consulate at 24 State Street, here. These are good for six months. They cost 60 cents each. Scandinavians and men of other nationalities among the crew must get their passports from their respective Consulates. No Austrians, Germans, or Hungarians are shipped on American steamers trading to England. Men of those nationalities would be kept prisoners on the vessels while in British ports, and the company would have to pay the cost of the services of the policemen who keep guard to see that the men do not escape ashore.

The St. Louis of the American Line, sailing next Saturday for Liverpool, will be the first vessel to come under the regulations. She carries a crew of 300, of whom 200 will require passports from Washington. Who shall pay the $2 in each case has not yet been decided.

The agents of the American Line at 9 Broadway put the applicants for passenger passage to Liverpool under the third degree if they are not provided with passports. This is on account of the number detained at Liverpool by the British Alien Inspectors on arrival. Numbers claim British nationality and try to get over with a passport on that pretext, the agents assert.

Last Saturday morning a man who asked for a first cabin ticket on the Philadelphia, due to sail at noon, gave a certain name and said he was an Englishman. Under cross-examination by the clerk he admitted that he had not given his real name. He explained that his father was a naturalized Englishman, but the name was German, and he did not wish to land in Liverpool under a German name.

"You stay in New York until you can produce a passport from the British Consul," was the booking clerk's ultimatum.

An attractive young Irishwoman booked on the St. Paul two weeks ago for Liverpool and gave a name distinctively Irish. She had no passport, but said her parents would come to Liverpool from County Clare to meet her. Her blue eyes and rich brogue decided the clerk, and he gave her a ticket. Three days after the St. Paul arrived in Liverpool a cablegram was received from the company's office there saying the young woman had been detained because she was not traveling under her real name. That afternoon a man called at the American Line office here and asked Mr. Miller, the Passenger Manager, why his wife was being detained in Liverpool.

"What's your wife's name?" Mr. Miller asked.

"Miss Katherine — was the name she went by," he replied. He added that he was an American, and that, of course, explained her detention.

Mr. Miller said that many persons who have been naturalized in this country go back to England without a passport. Any person who arouses the suspicion of the Allen Inspector on the other side is required to make an affidavit, and if it is found to be false the penalty ranges from three months' to two years' imprisonment.

ADJURE ENGLISHMEN TO DO WAR WORK

MEETING TYPICAL OF MANY

Private Movements to Utilize for War Purposes Men, Women, and Children Who Cannot Fight.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

REIGATE, England, July 11.—One result of the proposal of the Government to register every resident of the British Isles and to ascertain how they might be turned to account in the present crisis has been the quickening of private movements to utilize for war purposes men, women, and children who cannot fight. Here this Sunday afternoon was held in the open air a public meeting, semi-religious in character, which in its sober earnestness and its appeal to people of every age and class spoke of the depth of feeling the war has stirred and united the men and women of today with those who in the past had also fought for freedom.

It was held in a park round an old country seat. Half a mile away in the caverns under Reigate Castle, Magna Charta is said to have been drafted; across the downs to the north could be seen in the chalk the way which the pilgrims of the Middle Ages wore in their journeys to Canterbury, and all around were glorious trees, which may well have been standing in the days when the cause of English liberty was won.

To enlist the people of today in defense of the same cause was the avowed purpose of the meeting. It was not intended to raise more recruits; it was not held necessary to denounce Germany, or to argue the justice of the war; it was designed simply to urge every one to make war-work a part of the daily routine of his life. So nothing spectacular was attempted. A few wooden chairs were placed on kitchen tables under the pillared porch of the old mansion; hand-bills were distributed, announcements made from the pulpit, and an audience of from 2,500 to 3,000 was collected.

The cadets of the parish church brigade marched up with their fife and drum band, the bigger lads in khaki, the younger with forage caps and belts as their only uniform, but the main part of the audience came without organization. They were the ordinary residents of the town, some business men in London, others shopkeepers or artisans of Reigate, and not a few retired men and women of private means. They came in little knots of two or three, straggling across the greensward or treading their way amid the trees, and they represented every walk in life and every age—only the young men, even few and far between, for nearly all of them were in Flanders or training to go there.

In the distance the roll of drums was heard and a banner was seen gleaming red through the branches. It was the parish of St. Mark's coming to the meeting. It sent a thrill through the spectators. It was so unlike the twentieth century; it was so like the gathering of the people in other days of peril long passed into history. Behind the banner came the cadets; behind the cadets marched the Vicar and his Church Wardens. His parishioners followed in orderly procession, men and women in their family groups, and the long line was closed by the children of an orphan school, in quaint blue capes and straw hats.

It was in the main to be a religious meeting, but the chair was taken by Sir Jeremiah Colman, a Deputy Lieutenant of the county and the head of the great mustard manufacturing concern. He wore a khaki uniform with the scarlet facings of the staff, and he called to sit with him and the clergy on the platform an elderly Colonel, the ribbon on whose uniform showed that he had for twenty years been in the Surrey Territorial Forces.

A hymn and prayer by the Rural Dean of Reigate opened the proceedings, and then Sir Jeremiah struck the keynote of the meeting. To work for the war, he declared, was the sacred duty of all Englishmen, and those who could not go to the trenches could exercise thrift and hold themselves ever ready for service.

The Vicar of Reigate and other clergy followed with much the same things to say. They felt no need to urge patriotism or to argue the case of England. They sought only to direct the zeal of their hearers and show them what they might all do. Above all, they said, each man must curb his own faults, so that he might play his part when the opportunity came.

It was in accord with the recent appeal of the Archbishops to the nation, and it was notable that Sir Jeremiah discounted the outcry against "shirkers." He hardly knew any who might have gone to the front and had not, he said, but many people willing to help did not know how.

For an hour the meeting lasted, and the great crowd stood in a semicircle around the platform. Hardly one left before it was all over, and they sang "God Save the King" with a heartiness that carried a thrill. Then the meeting broke up and the audience strolled home through the park, chatting in neighborwise.

MILES OF TRENCHES TAKEN BY ITALIANS

(Aviso) on Friday the enemy renewed in greater force his attack which had failed on the 28th against our occupation of Costa Bella. Notwithstanding the support of artillery, posted in the neighborhood of the Ohmert Pass, the enemy's columns again were completely repulsed.

Further to the north in the zone of Livinallongo (Upper Cordevole) the enemy's infantry tried on the night of the 29th to occupy by surprise attacks the summits of Pescos and Sasso di Mezzodi. Our troops succeded in dispersing the enemy.

In Carnia on the 30th a bold operation, undertaken with the object of driving the enemy from Forcella, Clannalot, and Eastern Pizzo, (Upper Dogna,) was fully successful, thanks to a combined frontal attack directed from Grauda by the slope of Pizzo against Forcella and a feint attack made by a column from Forcella di Bielica on Lusnitz, at the bottom of the Valley of Folla.

Our infantry carried the trenches at Forcella with great dash, driving the enemy out at the point of the bayonet and capturing 107 prisoners, seven being officers. A heavy artillery fire contributed to the result by an effective fire which at first ravaged the enemy trenches and then, with lengthened range, prevented reinforcements from coming up.

On the Carso front on the night of the 31st the enemy made a vigorous onslaught on our right wing in the zone of Monte di Dusi, but was thrown back with heavy loss. A strong enemy column marching from Duino toward Doberdo was observed and reported by our aviators to the heavy artillery, which directed a deadly fire on it and scattered the Austrians with serious losses. Our offensive continued all along the front during the day. Further trenches were stormed, and we made 48 prisoners, fourteen of whom were officers.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 2.—An unconfirmed report comes from Rome that the Austrians are preparing for the evacuation of Trieste and have already removed the machinery of the munitions factories.

POLISH DOLLS FOR WAR AID.

Artists Send Effigies of Her Own People to Mme. Paderewski.

Artists of the Polish colony in Paris have sent to New York what is said to be the most remarkable collection of Polish dolls ever made. The dolls were sent to Mme. Ignace J. Paderewski and will be sold for the benefit of war sufferers in Poland. The dolls will be on view today at the offices of the National Polish Relief Fund, in the Aeolian Building.

The dolls represent every phase of Polish life as it was prior to the great war. Each little figure is exact in detail of dress and accessories, being worked out with skill and precision by the members of the Polish Artists' Mutual Help Society in Paris, by which organization they were sent to Mme. Paderewski. The society is composed of painters, sculptors, decorators, wood carvers, and experts in fine needlework and embroidery. Finding their cities and homes in Poland devastated, these men and women worked their way to Paris, and are now making dolls representing the national costumes of the various provinces of the Polish countries.

The dolls are unbreakable. The old-fashioned rag doll is the basis, and some of the dolls are two feet tall, and all are clad in wonderfully artistic garments.

GERMAN-AMERICAN ATTACK.

President of Alliance Denounces Our Policy—Delegates Gather.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—At a meeting today preliminary to the opening of the convention here tomorrow of the National German-American Alliance, the President, Dr. C. J. Hexamer, of Philadelphia, found occasion to criticise the United States for supplying war munitions to England.

"I must say I have not been proud of my country lately," he said. "A nation which prays for peace on Sundays and supplies England with arms and ammunition all the rest of the week is, to say the least, hypocritical.

"I must confess that I, as a native born American, am nauseated by the lick-spittle policy of our country. English ships patrol our waters, England forbids us to buy ships and to trade with neutral nations as we would like, England cuts the cables leading from our shores to those of a friendly nation, and England decides for our Secretary of State what news he shall impart to us American citizens. From the way most war reports to us read we might just as well tear up the Declaration of Independence and become loyal subjects of King George."

Interest was manifested by the delegates in a possible expression by the convention of its attitude toward the present relations of the United States and Germany. Officers said today that undoubtedly resolutions for that purpose would be introduced but that a strong fight would be made to prevent action.

GERMAN DAILY IN BRUSSELS.

New Signs That Kaiser Intends to Keep Belgium.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 1, (via London, Aug. 2.)—The first daily newspaper to be published here in the German language appeared today. The newspaper is financed by private parties, although it is expected to be supported officially through the advertising of official announcements.

In this connection many sharp jaws published against the expression of national Belgian sentiments, are taken in some quarters to indicate the intention of the Germans to retain Belgium.

TURKS EXPLODE MINES.

Say They Destroyed Allies' Trenches and Entanglements.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 1, (via London, Aug. 2.)—An official statement issued today says:

"Yesterday near Avi Burnu, (Gallipoli,) on our centre, some mines which had been pushed toward the enemy exploded with good results. A portion of the enemy trenches and some wire entanglements were destroyed."

VIENNA GETS REAL BREAD.

Arrival of Abundant Wheat Flour Gives Zest to Victory Celebration.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERNE, Aug. 1, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—Since yesterday Vienna has had two sources of profound satisfaction, one being that the population is no longer obliged to eat bread with an admixture of maize flour and the other the fall of Lubin.

Considerable quantities of German wheaten flour have lately arrived and the price of flour is now lower in Vienna. Rejoicings over the fall of Lublin continued all yesterday and late into the night.

STRIPS PLATE OFF BECKER'S COFFIN

act as pallbearers of a man put to death for murder.

Funeral Service Today

Mrs. Becker wanted policemen in the department to know that the funeral was not to be strictly private, and that they would be welcome along with other former friends of her husband, but that the funeral was not to be public.

Father Nicholas J. Murphy, pastor of the Church of St. Nicholas of Tolentine, was in Philadelphia and would not return in time for the Becker funeral this morning, it was stated at the church, and it was not known who would officiate. There was also some uncertainty as to the nature of the service to be held. An assistant at the church, before he learned that the inscription plate had been removed from Becker's coffin, said that it would be a low mass, but after the plate had been removed at was announced at the Becker home that the plans for the service would be carried out as originally designed. It had been announced previously that the service would be a requiem high mass.

W. Bourke Cockran, who represented Becker in his last fight for life, was seen at the American Line pier, where he had gone to meet his sister, and was asked about the inscription naming Governor Whitman a murderer. He said that he had known nothing of it until he read about it.

The authorities who took action in the case of the inscription plate thought that its removal would be sufficient to prevent Mrs. Becker from having an inscription of similar nature engraved on the tombstone to go at the head of Becker's grave in Woodlawn Cemetery, but it was said that if she did try to have such an inscription put on the stone the cemetery corporation probably would refuse to permit it.

WHITMAN IGNORES CHARGE.

"Murder" Plate on Becker Coffin Left to Local Officials.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Governor Whitman spent a quiet day, after his long automobile ride to Sylvan Beach yesterday, and attended church services this evening. The Rev. Albert S. Hoyt of Auburn, who is his over-Sunday guest at the Executive Mansion, preached.

The Governor refused to comment on the murder charge on the plate on Becker's coffin, and it was stated authoritatively that he intended to take no action. The belief in official circles here is that whatever action is taken must be by the municipal authorities of New York or the officials of Bronx County, presumably District Attorney Martin.

The tombstone which the mother of Carlyle Harris, who was put to death twenty-odd years ago for the murder of his wife, erected over his grave in the Rural Cemetery here bore the legend "Murdered by the State of New York." It was ordered removed by the legal officers of Albany County.

FRENCH PUT MARINES ASHORE IN HAITI

United States Permits a Small Force to Land at Port au Prince to Guard Legation

AT REQUEST OF MINISTER

Move Shows That France Recognizes the Superior Interest of the American Government.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 1.—French marines have been landed at Port au Prince, Haiti, to guard the French Legation there, but the landing is with the consent of the United States Government. A statement, given out by the Navy Department, shows that before undertaking to obtain a marine guard from the French cruiser Descartes, the French Minister at Port au Prince requested permission from Rear Admiral William B. Caperton, commanding the United States naval forces there. Rear Admiral Caperton referred the matter to the Navy Department, and after a conference with Secretary Lansing the permission was granted by Secretary Daniels.

The official announcement of the Navy Department on the subject tonight was as follows:

Admiral Caperton reported last night that the French Minister at Port-au-Prince had requested permission to land a small force from the cruiser Descartes to guard the French Legation, as he considered it fitting that the legation should be guarded by French troops. Secretary Daniels, after a conference with Secretary Lansing, cabled Admiral Caperton that there was no objection to the landing of a small detachment to guard the French Legation, and instructed Admiral Caperton to afford all facilities to the French Minister for the landing of the guard.

This announcement indicates clearly that the French Government recognizes the superior interest of the United States in the present situation in Haiti and that the United States has assumed responsibility for the maintainance of order in Port au Prince and the protection of foreigners and their interests. The attitude of the French Minister is all the more significant in view of the fact that in the negotiations between the United States and the Haitian Governments, for the collection and disbursement of Haitian customs revenues the French had sought for a place in the control of the revenue receivership on the ground that by reason of common language, trade relations and sympathies, in addition to the large interest of French citizens in Haiti's bonded debt, France had a superior interest in Haitian affairs.

It is believed here that the action of the French Minister in asking permission from the United States for the landing of French marines is a forerunner of the attitude of other European nations that have interests in Haiti. This Government desires to take a free hand in the adjustment of the difficult Haitian problem, which has become more complicated by reason of the killing of President Guillaume and the ousting of a ministry friendly to the American proposal for a customs receivership. That the American forces now on Haitian soil will remain there as long as French marines guard the French legation is certain. But it is understood to be the desire of this Government to keep bluejackets and marines in Haiti until some arrangement is made that will give the United States the right to control Haiti's revenues. Present indications are that this Government will seek to negotiate a treaty that will make the United States responsible for Haiti's financial, political and territorial integrity, similar to the treaty which was negotiated with Nicaragua, but was not ratified by the United States Senate.

Rear Admiral Caperton has reported to the Navy Department that there have been no further hostile clashes between his forces and Haitians and that everything is quiet in Port au Prince. Further disturbances are expected, however, and the Navy Department will not modify the arrangements to augment the armed contingent ashore.

Sells No War Munitions.

Chief Engineer Seidl of Escher, Wyss & Co., in a letter to THE NEW YORK TIMES, denying a published report, says that the firm whose works are in Zurich, Switzerland, is not supplying shells, cartridges or ammunition to any of the belligerent nations. "The exportation of any kind of ammunition or war material," he writes, "was prohibited by the Swiss Federal Council on Aug. 13, 1914, and this decree is still in force."

FRYE NOTE DELAYED.

Germany's Reply and British Communication Expected Today.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The German note regarding the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye, which was handed to Ambassador Gerard at Berlin yesterday had not been received at the State Department tonight. It is expected some time tomorrow. Secretary Lansing said no word had been received from the Ambassador concerning the note.

There is considerable speculation here as to what the German reply to the last American communication contains in view of the attitude then taken by this Government. Germany was asked to reconsider her decision to send the Frye case to a Prize Court for adjustment, the United States maintaining that under the Treaty of 1828, it was a matter for diplomatic adjustment and was not subject to a Prize Court hearing. The United States maintained that it would not recognize a Prize Court ruling in the case as binding.

Should the German reply include an announcement of a Prize Court decision, the United States would not, it was said, take any measures to prevent the owners accepting the award if they were satisfied. But the American Government will not recede from its contention that the case is one for a diplomatic adjustment.

Another important communication expected tomorrow is Great Britain's supplemental note replying to American representations regarding the British blockade and interference with American commerce. Secretary Lansing was informed Friday that the reply would be forwarded in a few days.

DANISH LOAN A FAILURE.

Public Prefers to Invest in Mushroom "War Stock" Ventures.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 2.—The Danish Government $12,000,000 5 per cent. national loan, which has just closed, has proved a failure, only half of it being subscribed by the public. The five banks guaranteeing the loan must take the remainder of it.

Reuter's Copenhagen correspondent declares that it is almost impossible to secure public contributions in Denmark to a loan at a low rate of interest, owing to the unusual attraction for ready money in the innumerable mushroom ventures which spring up as a consequence of the war.

$17

This is a sale of Saks suits reduced from former prices, and not a sale of suits on which we have set arbitrary and fictitious "values." If you know anything about average clothing sales you will know what we mean. In other words, every suit in this sale is regular stock; and not the overnight product of haste and expediency. Obviously, there has been a thinning out of the selections, but there is a range of choice right now in which early-comers will have no difficulty in finding the particular suit they want. But don't put it off any longer. Come in now.

Small charge for alterations.

MOOSE WILL ENTER BATTLE OF 1916

Going In as a Party to Win, Chairman Murdock Declares Flatfootedly.

WILL BE A STRAIGHT FIGHT

Colonel's Supporter Assails Both the Old Parties for Their Mistakes and Misdeeds.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Iowa, Aug. 1.—Victor Murdock of Kansas, Chairman of the Progressive National Committee, made the following statement today:

"I have just completed a three months' personal canvass of the situation with the Progressives in the Central West and on the Pacific Coast, and after making it, I am ready to say flatfootedly that we Progressives are going into the 1916 fight as a party and to win.

"Moreover, a meeting of representative Progressives held this month in New York City reported the same conditions in the East that I have found in the West, and they are lining up for the next battle. This also is the sentiment of the Progressive National Committee. We will hold our National Convention early and nominate a ticket.

"The great convention battles of 1916 will not be over candidacies, but will be over platforms. The storm will rage, not in the Committee on Credentials, but in the Committee on Resolutions. The Bourbon Republican leadership will not only insist on a standpat candidate, but will fight for an unstinted and unequivocal indorsement of the Administration of William H. Taft, including the Payne-Aldrich Tariff bill.

"The Democratic leadership likewise will point with pride to the equally lamentable Simmons-Underwood tariff bill and, against a Bryan insurrection of the first magnitude, will cancel the one term Presidential pledge and other Bryan propaganda, and the Progressives will reiterate and re-emphasize their Chicago platform of 1912. That platform remains the most nearly perfect utterance of the principles of Abraham Lincoln of modern times.

Lauds Progressive Platform.

"Both in its protest against the inroads of privilege fattening on an era of gross materialism, and in its principal program of concrete economic remedies, the Progressive platform has become to hundreds of thousands of aggressive Americans the ark of the covenant, and there is not a township anywhere without its group devoted wholly and solely to its preservation.

"The Progressives have the right plan for the tariff and other economic issues, including the trust problem.

"The Democratic leadership, after two and a half year's trial, has signally failed in solving the nation's economic questions. Its tariff law, slammed together under the old logrolling leadership, is utterly unproductive of any of the results previously claimed for it, its trust legislation flounders, its attempts at development of American ocean-going craft have fizzled. That this is the judgment of the voter is amply evidenced by the tremendous anti-Democratic sentiment that has developed at the polls at virtually every election in the last two years. At many of these elections the voter cast a Republican ballot because he believed that the Republican leadership had learned its lesson and would hereafter take the progressive path.

Assails Reactionary Republicans.

"But now the voters know for a certainty that when the Republican leadership has been restored to power, it has shown more, not less, reactionary tendencies, as is notably evidenced by the actions of the Legislatures in New York, Ohio, and Massachusetts. Hand in hand with the progressive proposition to encompass social and industrial justice, goes the necessity of solving the great economic problems of the country, not on the basis of political advantage, of which practice both the old parties are infamously guilty, but on the basis of service to society.

"Everywhere I found those Progressives who made the fight in 1912 with that idea uppermost, eager now to continue the fight. Wherever they have had a chance to make good they have done so.

"The spectacle of Republican reaction in New York and Ohio, in contrast to Progressive achievement in California under Governor Johnson, is a dramatic portrayal of the need of the new strong patriotic party of public service. Therefore the Progressive Party will go on with its fight straight out and flat-footed."

CARRANZA REPORTS RELIEF FOR CAPITAL

Minister Says Entering Army Has Supplies and Large Quantities Are on the Way.

VILLA RAIDERS MOVE EAST

Flying Column Said to be Working Toward Vera Cruz—Consul Shanklin and Carranza Minister Arrive.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Official confirmation of the reoccupation of Mexico City by Carranzista forces commanded by General Pablo Gonzales reached the State Department today in a brief dispatch from Vera Cruz, sent by Commander Luke McNamee of the United States gunboat Sacramento at that port. No details were given. The reoccupation of the Mexican capital by the Carranzistas is not expected in official circles here to make any distinct difference in the general military and political situation in Mexico, at least not at present, but is regarded as giving hope that it will be followed by reopening of communication between Vera Cruz and Mexico City and the shipment of Red Cross and other supplies into Mexico City for the relief of the needy populace.

It appears that General Gonzales returned from the vicinity of Pachuca to Mexico City without meeting and giving battle to the Villa flying column, commanded by General Rodolfo Fierro, and that it was considered more important to undertake the task of opening communication and attending to the chaotic and distressing situation in the capital.

The Villa agency here tonight announced that General Fierro's flying column was now operating in the States of Hidalgo, Vera Cruz, Puebla, and Mexico, and this was confirmed by messages which indicated that the flying column was now working gradually toward Vera Cruz. The plans of Fierro have not been disclosed, but it is intimated here that he will again attempt to interfere with the shipment of supplies from Mexico City to General Gonzales, and may make a raid on Vera Cruz in the near future.

The Carranza agency tonight received a cablegram from Jesus Acuña, head of the Department of Foreign Affairs in the Carranza Cabinet, under last night's date, which read:

In addition to the supplies which General Pablo Gonzales will carry with him into the City of Mexico at the present reoccupation, the Constitutionalist Government has arranged for sending additional supplies amounting to 1,200 tons of staples, which include flour, corn, beans, barley, lard, and dried meats. These supplies are supplemental to large quantities of relief materials which have been detained en route by reason of the necessitous military operations incident to regaining and control of railway communication from the coast to the capital. The public services for food distribution will be at once reopened.

Civil administration has been reinstalled at Queretaro, and civil employes of the Constitutionalist Government are being moved from Queretaro to Aguascalientes and to points intervening between that centre and Queretaro. This re-establishment of communication reunites the armies of Obregon and Gonzales by telegraphic and railway lines.

News of the defeat of General Villa in the vicinity of Torreon is discredited by information reaching both the Washington Government and the Villa agency.

According to advices to the State Department, there is no immediate prospect of the defeat of Villa either at Torreon or the vicinity, for the reason that when Villa withdrew to Torreon from Zacatecas he pretty effectually destroyed the railway between those two points, tearing up the tracks and destroying bridges. The country between Zacatecas and Torreon is very barren and desolate, difficult for campaigning, and the Washington impression is that Obregon will not make rapid headway in that region. Information has reached the State Department that some reinforcements have been sent to Obregon over the rail line from Tampico to San Luis Potosi and that the latter place was captured mainly by these reinforcements and not by Obregon's principal army. Obregon's communications from the south have been cut for many weeks and the Carranzistas have endeavored to open up a new line of communication to Obregon from Tampico through San Luis Potosi.

VILLA EXPELS AMERICANS.

With Other Foreigners They Are Said to Have Had Goods Seized.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Aug. 1.—American refugees arriving tonight report that an entire trainload of foreigners is coming, as Americans and all other foreign merchants in the City of Chihuahua had been expelled by Villa. The Americans who arrived tonight say that Villa has confiscated all the stores, both of Americans, Mexicans, and other foreigners, and that all Mexican merchants had been placed in jail, accused of charging higher prices than the regular schedule for foodstuffs and for refusing to accept Villa money.

The confiscation of the stores, natives and foreign alike, is expected to be followed by the distribution of the stocks among the poor of the city as was done when the Spaniards were expelled and their stocks confiscated. The confiscation order followed a meeting at the State Palace on Saturday in which Villa informed the merchants that they must charge lower prices, accept his money at 30 cents on the dollar and raise a forced loan of $800,000 gold.

The Americans are expected to reach the border tonight on a special train, and will immediately file a protest to Washington against the confiscation of their properties and their expulsion.

ANGELES BACK IN MEXICO.

New Alignment of Leaders Reported at the Border.

NOGALES, Sonora, Aug. 1.—General Angeles arrived this morning in Nogales, Ariz. He was met at the international boundary line by José Maytorena and the latter's entire staff, civil and military, and escorted between lines of soldiers to the Governor's residence, four blocks distant.

American Secret Service men met the train upon which General Angeles rode and saw him across the line.

According to Maytorena officials, Angeles will lead a revolution with Villa as General in Chief, assisted by Generals Obregon and Iturbe, both of whom are reported either to have abandoned Carranza or to be ready to do so.

SHANKLIN HERE FROM MEXICO.

Consul Refuses to Discuss Recall—Carranza Minister to See Lansing.

Arnold Shanklin, United States Consul General at Mexico City, arrived yesterday on the Morro Castle on his way to Washington to see Secretary of State Lansing. The Consul General disagreed with the Brazilian Minister over the manner in which the American Relief Fund was administered there, and Secretary Lansing ordered him to return to Washington. He declined to discuss his case in any way.

Luis Cabrera, Minister of Finance to General Carranza, also arrived on the Morro Castle to discuss Mexican affairs with Secretary Lansing, and will go to Washington in a few days, he said.

When asked if it would be possible in the interests of peace for Mexico to make one of the members of the former Madero Cabinet Provisional President of the country, the Minister of Finance replied that it would not. By resigning the members of the Madero Cabinet had forfeited their right to succeed. Such a measure would bring about another revolution, he said.

Harry Berliner, manager of a Vera Cruz agency for typewriters and adding machines, returned on the Morro Castle, and said that he had been deported by Carranza detectives on framed-up charges, without the chance of a hearing. He was on good terms with the authorities when steps were suddenly taken against him.

"On July 22," he said, "two detectives came to my office and handed me a summons ordering me to report at the office of the Department of Safety of the Port, to make a declaration. I didn't know why they had come or what I was to declare, but I went over with them as I was, in my shirt sleeves, after notifying William Canada, the American Consul. He sent one of his assistants, a man named Kellar, and with him and Stephen Bonsal, the war correspondent, now in the service of the Red Cross, I was taken to the offices of the Department of Safety. The Director, de Lamadrid, was not there, so I was taken to the Terminal Building by other detectives. There I happened to meet General Pesqueira, the Carranza Minister of War, and John R. Silliman, President Wilson's agent. They asked the detectives if I was under arrest, and if so, why. The detectives said that I was merely going with them to make a declaration, and that I was not under arrest at all.

"General Pesqueira and Mr. Silliman then went on their way, and hardly had they disappeared when the detectives ordered me to go on board the Morro Castle, which was leaving the port that night. I went, and my friends, whom I had notified, managed to get together my money and most of my personal property and get it to me before the ship sailed. There was absolutely no reason at all given for it then, but when the ship reached Havana I heard that the Carranza Consul there had been notified that I had been deported by personal order of the First Chief for using abusive language about him, and intriguing with the Huerta interests.

"I never took the slightest part in politics. Very few Americans there do; certainly I didn't. As to language, I may have expressed my opinion of Carranza; but if they start to expelling people for disapproving of Carranza there will soon be nobody left in Vera Cruz."

He added that he intended to take the matter up with the State Department.

Another passenger on the Morro Castle was Thomas Mallard, an English engineer, on the way to his home in Surrey with his 5-year-old daughter Joyce. In April, with his wife, daughter, and baby, he went to Tuxpam as engineer for the Mexican Eagle Oil Company. There was a Carranzista camp of about seventy men near their house, and on June 6 this camp was attacked by a party of 300 men who called themselves Villistas. Mr. Mallard's house was directly between the two forces, and though he and his family, with two other Englishmen named Gray and Jones, took refuge in the cellar, a volley fired by the Carranzistas struck them. Mrs. Mallard was holding her baby in her arms, and she and the child were killed by the same bullet; Gray and Jones were killed, and Mallard was wounded in the hip. He declared that the shooting at the house was intentional. The Villistas finally wiped out the garrison, blew the safe of the oil company, and got $500, and went on their way.

PLANS FOR INTERVENTION.

Service Paper Expects Call for 250,000 Men as Last Resort in Mexico.

The ordering of all the mobile troops now in the United States to the Texas border, the Atlantic Fleet to East Mexican, and the Pacific Fleet to West Mexican waters, will be one of the first of President Wilson's steps to restore order in Mexico, according to The Army and Navy Journal. The issue of Saturday says this move is expected to follow the placing of an embargo on exportation of arms to Mexico, and if this fails to accomplish the purpose desired by the President, the next move, according to the service publication, will probably be the calling into service of a volunteer army of 250,000 men to back up the regular army in actual intervention in Mexico. All the marines, it is said, will figure in whatever is done.

"We have excellent authority for saying," says The Army and Navy Journal, "that the President has now determined upon a program of action in the case of Mexico. His agents are now working with very little prospect of success to bring about peace without the use of force. Later, an embargo on the importation of arms into Mexico will be laid by this Government. As the next step will be the strengthening of the force of troops on the border, all of the troops in the United States will probably be in Texas and on the border in a month or two. This action may be delayed until late in the Fall. Then a part or all of the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets will be ordered to Mexican waters and the marines will be concentrated in that locality.

"With this display of military force and possible warlike intention it is hoped that the leaders of the different factions will be brought to agree upon some provisional President who can be recognized by the United States Government. If this can be brought about, which does not now appear probable, the Administration will make known its intentions of supporting the new ruler of Mexico. In the event that all of the factions do not support the man who is recognized by this Government, and the present disturbed condition continues, as it is likely to do, the President will ask for an army to enforce his demands upon Mexico.

"It is not believed that all of this program can be carried out much before the latter part of November. In that case a special session of Congress will not be necessary, and when Congress convenes, if peace is not restored in Mexico, it is expected that the President will be ready to ask for authority to intervene. This will mean the calling out of a volunteer army of at least 250,000. It is generally agreed that the present regular army, if it were raised to war strength, could drive from the field all of the armed Mexican forces, capture Mexico City and defeat all of the Mexican armies if they were combined into a single force; but a large volunteer army would be needed to occupy the country and restore order.

AUTOS HIT TWO AND RUN OFF

Woman Injured When Another Machine Rams a Street Car.

Robert Kondak, a laundryman employed at the General Memorial Hospital, Central Park West and 106th Street, was crossing Eighth Avenue at 133d Street, at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when he was knocked down by a northbound automobile containing two men and a child. Passersby called to the driver, but he paid no attention to them, nor to Patrolman Bashaner of the West 135th Street Station, who ran after the car, blowing his whistle. Kondak was taken by Dr. Rosenberg to the Harlem Hospital, where it was found that he was suffering from severe abrasions of the left leg and bruises about the head.

Mrs. Blanche Bendit of 2,040 Seventh Avenue was crossing that avenue at 122d Street at 7 o'clock last night when she was knocked down by a northbound automobile occupied by one man. He did not stop. Patrolman Burke of the West 123d Street Station took Mrs. Bendit to a drug store, as she said she did not want an ambulance. She was revived and went to her home.

Passersby gave several automobile numbers to the police in both these cases, and the detectives of the Fourth Branch are hunting for the drivers.

Noah Tubbs of 55 Wall Street was driving east in Thirty-first Street yesterday in an automobile in which were his wife, their 3-year-old son, Noah, Jr., and older son, Harry, and a friend, when the machine collided with an Amsterdam Avenue car. Mrs. Tubbs, trying to protect her little son, was cut and bruised about the shoulder and the boy was slightly hurt. The others were uninjured. Mrs. Tubbs and the boy were treated by Dr. Connelly of Bellevue.

KIDNAP CRY PURSUES SAMARITAN IN AUTO

FATHER, LOST, IS ALARMED

Her New Friends "Arrested" Twice After His Motor Cycle is Outdistanced in Storm.

Just as dusk was falling last night a big touring car swept through the suburbs of Trenton and on into the Princeton pike. In it were Louis Pillitz, a wealthy cotton planter of Birmingham, Ala., his wife, their three children and a negro chauffeur. They were hoping that the storm would hold off long enough for them to get to New York. Already a dun mist, thickening now and then to rain, was sweeping across the landscape, the roadway was muddy and the storm seemed about to break at any moment.

Just outside Trenton the car overtook a motor cycle with a side car stalled at the roadside. A weary, bedraggled girl was sitting disconsolately in the rain on the back seat of the motor cycle, while an old man and a young man were trying to replace five or six suitcases that had broken loose from their mooring and were falling by the wayside. Pillitz stopped, looked out, and asked what was the matter, and when a voice with a Southern drawl told him that they were having trouble with the engine, and that they had come all the way from Greenville, S. C., and were wondering if they would get to anywhere in particular before the storm overtook them, he got out and offered to help them.

The wayfarers were Luke W. White of Greenville, his son, and his daughter Ethel, 23 years old, all on their way to New York. It was nearly dark and the rain was falling fast, so Mr. and Mrs. Pillitz offered to take the girl into their touring car as a protection and drive on slowly, so as not to get ahead of the motor cycle. White gladly accepted the offer; the girl transferred herself, the baggage was tied back on the motor cycle, and the two cars started off slowly toward New York.

The travelers had got as far as Yardville, half way between Trenton and Princeton, when the motor cycle, it is believed, lost sight of the touring car in the darkness and took a different road. It was some time before Pillitz discovered that the Whites were no longer at his heels; then he drove back clear into the suburbs of Trenton without finding them.

Drive Toward New York.

By that time the rain was falling in torrents. As there was no sign of the others Mrs. Pillitz finally told the girl to come on with them to the Hotel York, in New York, where they could rest from the strain of the long, muggy trip while Mr. Pillitz looked out for Miss White's father and brother. So the touring car drove off at high speed through the rain.

Meanwhile White, whose motor cycle was working rather erratically, eventually found that he had lost the others or they had lost him. He, too, went back to Trenton, and a few minutes after he got to town the following telegram was being sent to every police station in New Jersey:

Please apprehend an automobile bearing an Alabama license, carrying six passengers and a colored chauffeur. He took aboard a daughter of Luke W. White, who was riding a motor cycle with car attached. Said he was driving slowly. Mr. White is afraid something will happen to his daughter.

JAMES COLLIGAN,
First District Court, Trenton.

Thereupon, with visions of an abduction, of a maiden to be saved, and of the honors that would accrue to the one who would save her, policemen all over New Jersey stepped out from under the awnings where they had taken shelter from the rain and looked for a car with an Alabama license number.

The Alabama license colors are silver on black, and on a dark night they are hard enough to see, so the touring car had got as far as Newark before it was held up. Then a vigilant policeman caught sight of the number plate and took the surprised and peevish occupants, who had become wearied by their imprisonment in a stuffy tonneau while the rain rattled on the roof, before Lieutenant Gray of the Sixth Precinct. He showed them the telegram that had been sent out, and Miss White, too tired to laugh at it, told him the real story.

Daughter Explains by 'Phone.

The Lieutenant got into communication with the Trenton court and then with Mr. White. When his daughter had explained to him by telephone he said that it was all right—to forget the whole thing, and he and his son would leave the motor cycle in Trenton and come on to meet the Pillitz party at the Hotel York. So after a long delay the automobile was released and the Pillitz car started out once more on its journey to Manhattan.

Just as the car was approaching the Weehawken Ferry, leading across to West Forty-second Street, there was a sudden interruption. Out of the rain-swept darkness appeared Joseph Murray, a boulevard policeman. He had heard that a deed of darkness was under way, and being unwilling to take a chance of missing that Alabama number in the darkness he had been stopping every car that came along. When he held up the Pillitz car he looked it over—there were the negro chauffeur, the six passengers, the missing girl.

But when his shield flashed in the glare of the lamps Miss White, who was tired and hot and had seen enough of policemen for one evening, rose up with a fiery, "What do you mean by stopping us?"

"I'm looking for a young girl who disappeared from Trenton," said Murray.

"I'm the girl," said she. "But I'm over twenty-one and I know what I'm doing. I'm getting tired of being stopped by policemen."

"You'll have to come along," said Murray.

"Take me to the station if you want to," said the girl, "but for Heaven's sake let these people go. They never saw me before tonight, and I suppose they hope they'll never see me again. They've had enough trouble already for being good Samaritans."

Mr. Pillitz intervened with an offer to take the policemen across to New York, where they would leave the women and children in a hotel to let them recover from the long trip, while the planter would go back to the station. But Murray was inexorable; he took the entire party down to the Boulevard Station, six miles away, and had them all up before Lieutenant Broadhurst. Here Miss White exploded again, but Broadhurst told her she was used to hearing people tell him what they thought of him and that he would have to telephone to Trenton.

When he had heard the story from the Trenton authorities he sent the Pillitz party on its way, and in course of time they arrived at their hotel, thanks to the fact that the troublesome telegram never had got outside the State of New Jersey.

HOT WAVE IS BROKEN; THREE MORE DEATHS

Evening Showers Bring Relief to Sweltering City—Fewer Prostrations.

400,000 FLOCK TO CONEY

Thousands Slept Saturday Night on Beaches—Heat-Crazed Woman Leaps from Roof.

While three persons died in this city yesterday as a result of the heat wave, the list of prostrations reported to the police fell off to twelve, and in the evening cooling showers brought relief to the sweltering city. Another suicide was recorded. A woman, her mind unbalanced by her suffering, ended her life by jumping from the roof of her home.

Hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children deserted the city and its baked pavements, and sought a place of refuge along the three-mile stretch of seashore from Manhattan Beach to Seagate. A new record for attendance was set at Coney Island, the police estimate placing the crowd at considerably more than 400,000. The oldest old-timer could never recall such a throng on any single day before.

At least 20,000 had remained all Saturday night on the beaches, among them hundreds of little children. As early as 3 o'clock yesterday morning there were long lines of applicants waiting at the entrances of the municipal baths. The gates did not open until 8 o'clock, and by that time there were 15,000 waiting for a chance to dip into the cooling surf. The women who stormed the bathhouse, if placed in single file, would have made a line at least one mile long, and there were fully as many men on hand. The police reserves were ordered out and had a hard task preventing a riot.

Here is the list of dead and prostrated reported to the police:

The Dead.

FAHEY, PATRICK, 23, employe of the Interborough, 339 East Ninetieth Street, overcome while working on Ninth Avenue elevated railway, near Fifty-sixth Street, fell to street.

HART, MICHAEL, 41, laborer, 338 West Forty-fifth Street, overcome and killed by fall at his home.

LANDON, Mrs. GEORGE, 28, 427 East 164th Street, crazed by heat and jumped from roof of home.

Prostrated.

BRICKERMAKER, ANDREW, 17, 824 Amsterdam Avenue, overcome in front of home; Knickerbocker Hospital.

HIGHAM, JAMES, 24, electrician, 138 Garfield Street, Brooklyn, overcome at 484 Third Avenue, Manhattan; Bellevue Hospital.

KORN, MICHAEL, 22, salesman, 112 St. Nicholas Avenue, overcome at Surf Avenue and West Eighth Street, Coney Island; home.

LITTLETON, GEORGE, 35, salesman, address unknown; overcome at Nostrand Avenue and Clarkson Street, Brooklyn; Kings County Hospital.

McKEON, KATHERINE, 23, 200 West 148th Street, overcome at Brooklyn Bridge while descending steps of B. R. T. station; Volunteer Hospital.

REICHENBERGER, ABBIE, 34, 1,706 Himrod Street, Brooklyn, overcome in front of 985 Himrod Street; German Hospital, Brooklyn.

RICHARDSON, WILLIAM, 33, 472 Third Avenue, Long Island City; overcome at home; St. John's Hospital.

RUBENSTEIN, DAVID, 25, clerk, 1,753 Madison Avenue, prisoner in Ludlow Street Jail, overcome in cell; Bellevue Hospital.

SULICK, ARTHUR, 10, 605 Jackson Avenue, the Bronx; overcome at 149th Street and St. Ann's Avenue, home.

Fahey, an employe of the Interboro, was assigned to do some work on the tracks of the Ninth Avenue elevated railway structure between Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Streets in the morning. The heat from the sun was intense, and he crumpled up suddenly. He died before an ambulance could reach the place.

Toppled Out of Window.

Michael Hart was killed by a fall from the fifth floor of the tenement house in which he lived. He had suffered from the heat during the night and early yesterday morning attempted to raise a window to get a breath of fresh air. In his weakened condition he lost his balance and toppled out of the window.

In New Jersey the heat caused the deaths of Margaret Noser, 18 months old, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Noser, of 32 Perrine Avenue, Trenton, and Edna May Schomp, 18 months, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Schomp of Hopewell. L. V. Silver, a salesman, was overcome in Trenton. In Newark, N. J., Mrs. Mary DeForest of 493 Willoughby Avenue, Brooklyn, was prostrated in the street and removed to the City Hospital.

The showers which began at 5 o'clock last evening and continued intermittently until 9 o'clock, did much to relieve the suffering. At times the rain was swept through the streets by a cooling breeze, drenching the overheated tenement districts. Following the storm the humidity dropped off rapidly. The temperature had also fallen to 71 degrees at 9 o'clock. The highest it reached during the day, according to the official weather bureau report, was 83 at 11:50 o'clock in the morning, but that was on top of the Whitehall Building, thirty floors above the street level. On the street a considerably higher mark was reached.

Lightning Strikes Church

In Elizabeth, N. J., the rainstorm was accompanied by lightning, which struck the German Lutheran Church in Third Street, half an hour before the time for the evening service. The steeple was wrecked and a large hole was torn through the roof. A few minutes later lightning struck the tower house on the First Street bridge, which spans the Elizabeth River. One side of the house was torn away.

Excursion boats and ferries did a tremendous business throughout the day, and the railroads going to Coney Island and other seashore resorts were packed to capacity. For the most part it was an orderly crowd, and although it broke all records for size, there were few disturbances and no arrests for serious offenses.

The thunderstorm last evening caught the throng at Coney Island unprepared, and there was great confusion for half an hour as a rush was made for shelter. To complicate matters there was a tie-up on the new Fourth Avenue subway line as one of the new steel cars was passing over the Coney Island Creek bridge. It tied up all traffic for twenty minutes, just at the moment that a throng of 25,000 charged down on the station, seeking shelter. Inspector Thomas H. Murphy and Police Captain John Linden summoned reserves and mounted police to handle the crowd.

While scores who were on the beaches suffered cut feet or other minor injuries, there was but one serious accident. Mrs. Helen Cohen, 42, of 241 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, was walking down the stairs from the Brighton Beach Baths, when the crowd behind her surged forward. She fell down the stairs and sustained a concussion of the brain and a severe strain of the back. She was taken to the Coney Island Hospital. Her condition is serious.

Eight Heat Deaths in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 1.—With an official temperature of 96, today surpassed Philadelphia's highest record for any Aug. 1 in the history of the local Weather Bureau. There were eight deaths reported as due to the heat, and relief did not come to the city until late afternoon, when a thunder storm caused a drop of eighteen degrees.

FOUR DROWN IN DELAWARE.

Youth and Three Young Women Lost When Boat Overturns.

WILMINGTON, Del., Aug. 1.—Three girls and a young man were drowned at Fenton's Beach, across the Delaware River from here, today. The man, Irvin McCall, 21 years old, sacrificed his life in an unsuccessful attempt to save Ruth Craig, 16, the only one of the girls whose identity is known.

McCall, John J. Murphy, Miss Craig, and two other girls were in a rowboat that capsized. Murphy was the only one of the party who could swim. He managed to save one of the girls and himself. McCall, although helpless, made a desperate effort to reach shallow water with Miss Craig, but they went down together. The fourth victim was a young woman who lost her life a short distance away while bathing.

LANDS SHIPWRECKED CREW.

Battleship Nebraska Saved All Aboard Bark After Collision.

BOSTON, Aug. 1.—The crew of the bark Mabel I. Meyers of Belfast, Me., sunk in collision with the battleship Nebraska last Friday night, were landed at the Charlestown Navy Yard today by the naval tug Iwana, which took them off the battleship at Boston Light. The party numbered eleven, including one woman, Mrs. Agromonti, the wife of the steward. Most of them were sent to the Seamen's Bethel to be cared for, as they were destitute, having been unable to save any of their effects.

Captain William Meyers, master and principal owner of the bark, said he was about thirty-five miles off Cape Cod and heading for Boston in a thick fog just before 7 P. M. when he heard warning whistles. He answered with his fog horn, but almost immediately the big stem of the battleship struck his vessel, tearing away her bow. The bark began to fill. A boat from the battleship took off the entire crew. No one was injured.

In the hope that the bark might remain afloat the battleship was kept in the vicinity searching for her in the fog. When Captain Meyers was satisfied, after finding a comforter from his cabin floating in the water, that his vessel had gone down, the Nebraska was headed for this port.

The Mabel I. Meyers sailed from Barbados July 6 for this city and Portland with a cargo of molasses. The Nebraska was bound from Rockport for Newport for fleet manouevres. She sustained no injury.

PLAYS SUICIDE IN PIQUE.

Young Wife, Wanting to Hear Pet Names, Gives Husband a Scare.

Mrs. Agnes Hogan, a bride of two months, living at 209 West Sixty-sixth Street, came to the conclusion last night that her husband Frank wasn't petting her enough. Then things began to happen.

First Mrs. Hogan went to her room and two minutes later announced in a hysterical voice that she had taken bichloride of mercury. Her husband shouted for help and, getting a bottle of milk, poured its contents into her mouth. Five minutes later a patrolman appeared and on his heels came Dr. Fetchtig in an ambulance from Polyclinic Hospital.

The physician got busy with a stomach pump, while Hogan, with tears in his eyes, called his wife pet names and implored her to live for his sake. Despite the fact that he couldn't find a trace of poison, the physician kept at work until he happened to see a smile on Mrs. Hogan's face.

"Well," said Mrs. Hogan, as she pushed the stomach pump away, "Frank didn't call me pet names, and I was afraid he didn't love me. Now I know he does. Of course I didn't take any poison."

THIEF SCARE IN HEMPSTEAD.

Servant's Cries Drive Burglar from Home of Mrs. W. P. Douglas.

SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., Aug. 1.—Early this morning an attempt was made to rob the Summer home of Mrs. W. P. Douglas of New York, which stands on First Neck Lane, close to Agawam Lake, in this place.

Some of the employes of the house heard a noise downstairs, and one of the women put up a window and called for help. Policeman Michael Callaghan was close by, and he ran over to the house. He says he saw a man run down the street as he approached the house. The policeman then continued on to the house and found that one of the windows had been forced. The intruder must have tripped over something in the dining room, and the servant's call for help frightened him away.

Since the theft of a $100,000 pearl necklace from the home of Sherwood Aldrich the police have been very vigilant.

RIDES HORSE IN RIVER TO RESCUE A WOMAN

Policeman Guides Mount to Exhausted Bather and Carries Her to Shore.

FIVE DROWN AT BEACHES

Lifesaver Drags Man from Bottom of Pelham Bay and Doctor Revives Him with Pulmotor.

Five persons were drowned at beaches in the neighborhood of New York yesterday and a number of others were rescued by narrow margins.

Owen O'Daleen and his wife Catherine of 160 West Sixtieth Street, were bathing at Gallagher's Beach, Throg's Neck, the Bronx, yesterday afternoon. Mrs. O'Daleen swam out about fifty yards from shore, and her strength suddenly gave out. Her husband, who was on the beach at the time, started out after her. So did Mounted Policeman O'Brien of the Westchester Station, who spurred his horse out into the water and started him swimming toward the drowning woman. Mrs. O'Daleen went under just before the policeman reached her, but she came up again a moment later. O'Brien picked her up with one hand and, guiding his horse with the other, swam the animal back to shore and brought her in safely.

George McCurgan of 768 Amsterdam Avenue, an Interboro Rapid Transit Company cable hand, went down to a pier at the foot of West Ninety-sixth Street yesterday evening with his friends, David Jones and Owen Conley. The other two started fishing off the dock; McGurgan, who was too hot for comfort, took off his clothes and dived into the Hudson. He did not come up again. His friends called Policemen Vogelbank and Snyder of the West 100th Street Station, who recovered the body with grappling hooks.

At Southampton, L. I., a party of young men were bathing in Big Fresh Pond when one of their number, George Ryder, suddenly disappeared. It is believed that he was seized with cramps. The body was recovered later.

Stephen Haight, a clerk, who lived at 292 Pacific Avenue, Jersey City, was left alone over the week end when his wife went away on a visit. He decided to go for a swim yesterday afternoon, and went in the company of his friend, Edward Miller, to the Hackensack River, near the Central Railroad Bridge. Miller, who is an excellent swimmer, started out ahead, and, looking back later, discovered that Haight was not in sight. Efforts to recover the body were not successful.

Solomon Rosenthal, a clerk living at 125 East 104th Street, was bathing off the foot of West Thirty-second Street, Coney Island, yesterday afternoon when he was attacked by a seizure of some sort and sank. His brother, Paul, and Sylvan Baar, a friend, recovered the body.

A block away, at the foot of West Thirty-first Street, Coney Island, Miss Rose Greenberg, a saleswoman living at 1,418 Forty-fourth Street, Brooklyn, was bathing earlier in the day when she sank seventy-five feet out from shore. She was rescued by Life Guard Sydney Bard, and revived by Dr. Moss of the Emergency Hospital.

Nicholas Langetto of 300 East 150th Street went under while swimming in Pelham Bay yesterday afternoon. Major Joseph Lamb, Commodore of a bear-by life-saving station, went out in a rowboat, dived several times and finally got hold of Langetto and dragged him to the surface. An ambulance surgeon who worked over him for some time with a pulmotor finally revived him and took him away to Fordham Hospital. His condition is not serious.

Police who had been grappling for nine hours at the foot of Market Street, in the East River, for the body of an unknown seaman drowned on Saturday from the steamboat Port Chester recovered the body yesterday morning. The man was about 22 years old, 5 feet 10 inches tall, blond, clean shaven, and thin. He wore a blue jersey and jeans.

The body of Vincent Baza, 27 years of age, of Wall Street, Elizabethport, N. J., was found floating in the Kill Van Kull off Shooter's Island yesterday afternoon and taken in charge by Coroner Vail. Baza had been drowned earlier in the day while bathing near his home.

SULLIVAN ON TEMPERANCE.

Ex-Pugilist Says He Wasted $500,000 Through Liquor.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 1.—John L. Sullivan, the ex-champion pugilist, will open his crusade for temperance at the Asbury Park Auditorium on next Sunday evening. Sullivan abandoned the use of liquor in any form ten years ago. Although he kept no accounts in the days of his great prosperity as a ring champion, he says he feels that he wasted at least $500,000 through drink.

"If we can teach our drinkers to stop drinking and teach our boys never to start drinking, we won't need any prohibition laws," he asserts.

LABOR MEN APPROVE SING SING REFORMS

Gompers and Other Leaders Confer with Warden Osborne on Prison Industry.

TO END UNIONS' OPPOSITION

Vocational Training to Enable Convicts to Earn Living After Release Is Urged.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Thomas Mott Osborne, Warden of Sing Sing Prison, and President Samuel Gompers and other officials of the American Federation of Labor today had a conference under the direction of the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor for the purpose of abolishing the opposition to prison industry on the part of some labor factions.

Mr. Gompers praised the work of Mr. Osborne in enabling every convict to learn some useful trade while in prison, and pointed out that the only complaint of organized labor against a nation-wide system, such as is used in Sing Sing, lies in the method of disposing of the products. He condemned the contract system as unfair both to the convicts and to labor, called the system by which the State is a manufacturer unfair to labor, and said that the present New York system which calls for use by the State of prison-made articles was the best and fairest scheme yet devised.

In an address to the Mutual Welfare League, Mr. Gompers said:

"We men in the labor movement realize that the inmates of the penal institutions should work because their own best manly interests demand it, but the products of prison labor should have the least damaging influence upon free labor.

Defects in Contract System.

"Organized labor has opposed the contract system of prison labor under which the labor of the inmates of the prisons was used for the private profit of contractors because its influence on the inmates was pernicious in the extreme. Employers of outside labor were also placed at a disadvantage, not so much because of the quantity produced in the prisons but because contractors could sell at a low figure, which depressed the general selling price of the article, and consequently had a depressing effect on the wages of the workers in that line of industry. I recall some years ago when the contract system existed in New York State that when stove molders in this State were not those in prison they were walking the streets in idleness.

"The same unfair competition results under the State account system when the State becomes the task-master and sells the products of its prisons on the open market, the price being fixed by a selling agent who draws a commission regardless of the cost of manufacturing.

"The State use system, now in vogue in New York, is, in my judgment, the best yet devised. It has not as yet been conducted upon a scientific, or perhaps, better still, a plain, sincere, common sense basis, to accomplish the best results. With Mr. Osborne as Warden, however, and applying the lesson of the George Junior Republic of allowing the men in a democratic way to express themselves fully, a satisfactory development is assured."

The purpose of the Prison Committee in having Mr. Gompers at Sing Sing was to give an impetus to a national movement for reforms Mr. Osborne has instituted at the New York prison.

"I have been much impressed with what I have seen here," said Mr. Gompers, "as I have been in many penal institutions in the State and throughout the country. Yet I have never seen men whose faces bore such semblance of readiness and good character. The cheeks of the inmates of other prisons are usually pallid; there is a death horror always on them—but not here.

Sewing Unfit for Men.

"In the shops I noticed a number of men employed at work at which they can't make a living when released—men making stockings, sewing buttons on underwear, and that sort of thing. But when I know what has been accomplished in the short time Mr. Osborne has been in Sing Sing, I feel convinced that the industries will soon be such that every man will be afforded opportunity to acquire some occupation, the knowledge of some trade or calling, which will fit him to go out into the world and earn an honest living.

"I can only express the hope that if the inmates help the Warden, our movement—the American Federation of Labor, associated with the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor—will be enabled to reach the best results for the inmates of the penal institutions of our State and country and a solution of a great problem which has vexed the thought and honest hope and effort of earnest, humanitarian men and women for many, many years."

John J. Manning, Editor of The Garment Worker, praised the work of Mr. Osborne and said that labor unions would not hold it against a man that he had been in prison.

"If a man is properly trained and desires to make good," he said, "there is no place without the wall of this institution better for him than a labor organization. So far as I know trade unions—all that is asked is that a man be a good mechanic and willing to make good."

Mr. Manning told of the need he saw in Sing Sing for expert workers to instruct. He offered to send volunteer garment workers to assist the warden in training inmates. Mr. Manning's offer was enthusiastically approved by Mr. Gompers and the other labor leaders and was accepted by Mr. Osborne.

Sing Sing Night Schools.

Prof. Hillegas, an expert in industrial education at Teachers College of Columbia University, outlined the scope of the night schools which he is organizing at Sing Sing, assisted by a subcommittee of the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor, headed by Mrs. John H. Flagler.

"The plan for the night schools," he said, "is to try to bring the work close to the work in the shops and the life of the men. The men brought before the prison courts are getting one of the best lessons in English composition when they defend themselves. How much better is this than to teach a mature man to write 'A beautiful day in May.' It is the Gary plan we hope to work out for Sing Sing."

Speaking for the Mutual Welfare League, William Willets, Jr., said:

"If the doors of Sing Sing were to open tonight and all the men were permitted to go at liberty, one-half of them would not know how to make an honest living. We haven't the proper vocational training here to fall back upon. For instance, we need over in the shoe shop some men who understand the expert making of shoes, so that a man in the shop may be taught how to make a good pair of shoes. It seems to me that the labor organizations by sending instructors could help our industries in a very marked degree."
